al question in rendering his judgment in this case. But, aside from this, it has been invariably held that this court will consider no fact appearing only in the argument of counsel, but will confine itself to what appears in the record as prepared for argument here, unless the same is amended, either by consent or other proper mode. We must hold, therefore, that no constitutional question is properly involved in this case. It is true that, in the opinion of Mr. Justice Pope, he does refer to the constitutional provision above cited as an additional reason for the conclusion which he reaches, but he manifestly bases his conclusion mainly upon the ground that the contract set up in the second affirmative defense, to which the demurrer was directed, was void as contrary to public policy; and Mr. Justice Gary, in his special concurrence, unquestionably bases his concurrence solely upon the ground of public policy; while the other two justices hold that the constitutional provision has no application to this case. This being the case, it is manifest that the question upon which the court was equally divided was, not the constitutional question, but the question as to public policy. Now, the rule in the Supreme Court of the United States is well settled, that, where the case presents two questions, one of which is a Federal question, and the other is not, if the view taken by the court below of the latter question is decisive of the case the Supreme Court of the United States will not take jurisdiction of the case, although there is also a Federal question in the case. By analogy, this rule may well be applied to the present case, as the conclusions reached by the several justices manifestly turned upon the question as to public policy, which is not a constitutional question. We are of opinion, therefore, that no constitutional question can properly be said to be involved in this case, and that there is no ground for a rehearing.

It is therefore ordered that the petition for a rehearing be dismissed, and that the stay of the remittitur heretofore granted be revoked.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

W. P. BIGGS, Admr., etc., of Leigh Walter Howell, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CONSOLIDATED BARB-WIRE COMPANY.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. The maintenance of dangerous machinery on private grounds, unpro-

*Headnotes by SMITH, J.

NOTE.—As to liability for maintaining premises dangerous to children, see turntable cases in note to Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Robertson (Tex.) 14 L. R. A. 781; also Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 724; and Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich (N. J.) 41 L. R. A. 881.

As to dangerous ponds, see, upholding liability, Pekin v. McMahon (Ill.) 27 L. R. A. 206; denying liability, Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (Mo.) 33 L. R. A. 755; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex.) 38 L. R. A. 573; Omaha 44 L. R. A.

ected from the visits of trespassing children, renders the owner thereof, who has knowledge that children and others are accustomed to frequent said grounds and climb upon the structures supporting said dangerous appliances, liable in damages to the next of kin of a boy fourteen years of age, who was caught in said exposed machinery, and killed.

2. In this case the question whether the boy was of sufficient intelligence,

v. Bowman (Neb.) 40 L. R. A. 531; Stendal v. Boyd (Minn.) 42 L. R. A. 288; and Ritz v. Wheeling (W. Va.) 43 L. R. A. 148.

For other cases respecting dangerous attractions to children, see Missoari, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards (Tex.) 32 L. R. A. 825, and cases cited in footnote thereto; also Jefferson v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (Ala.) 38 L. R. A. 458; Kaumeler v. City Electric R. Co. (Mich.) 40 L. R. A. 385, and footnote thereto; also O'Leary v. Brooks Elevator Co. (N. D.) 41 L. R. A. 677.

natural capacity, foresight, and judgment as to be guilty of contributory negligence is for the jury.

3. The case of Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 551, followed.

(February 11, 1899.)

ERROR to the District Court for Douglas County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. E. Melvin, for plaintiff in error:

The case comes clearly within the decisions of this court.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Shockman, 59 Kan. 774; Consolidated City & C. P. R. Co. v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 62; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531; Kansas O. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 551.

See also, to the same effect, Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206; Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545; Lynch v. Nardin, 1 Q. B. 29; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 410, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cross, 58 Kan. 424; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Evanich v. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. 57 Tex. 126, 44 Am. Rep. 586; Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; 1 Thomp. Neg. 304, 305; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 97, 98; Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 777.

Mr. W. W. Nevison, for defendant in error:

The shaft was lying upon beams 15 or 18 feet above the water, and was used for the purpose of conveying power to the barb-wire mill; it was not built for a place for people to fish, or as a place of resort for persons and children, nor was it built for the purpose of furnishing an attractive place for children to play.

Turess v. New York S. & W. R. Co. 61 N. J. L. 314.

Howell was a boy fourteen years of age, intelligent, healthy, and promising at the time of his death. He was of more capacity than those who recovered in—

Kansas O. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 533; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. 410, 21 L. ed. 116; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 375; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cross, 58 Kan. 425; Consolidated City & C. P. R. Co. v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 63; Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 557; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, 98 Am. Dec. 175.

44 L. R. A.

Can it be said that Howell, a boy fourteen years of age, intelligent, healthy, and promising at the time he was killed, was an infant of tender years, or can be placed in that class?

At common law, a male person, fourteen years of age, and a female twelve years of age, were capable of binding themselves in marriage; they had arrived at the age of consent.

2 Kent, Com. p. 78; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray, 119; Bishop, Contr. § 946, p. 371.

There can be no recovery for an injury caused by the mutual default of both parties. When it can be shown that it would not have happened except for the culpable negligence of the party injured, concurring with that of the other party, no action can be maintained.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 14, 15; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Bush v. Brainard, 1 Cow. 78, 13 Am. Dec. 513; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 99; McGrath v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 468, 17 Am. Rep. 359.

The accident could not have happened but for the fault of Howell.

Rathbun v. Payne, 19 Wend. 399; Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273; Brown v. Maxwell, 6 Hill, 595, 41 Am. Dec. 771.

The plaintiff, before he can recover or have any standing in court as an accuser for negligence to Howell, must show that Howell himself was free of fault.

Munger v. Tonawanda R. Co. 4 N. Y. 359, 53 Am. Dec. 384; Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; Smith v. Smith, 2 Pick. 621, 13 Am. Dec. 464.

When it appears that the plaintiff's negligence or wrongful act had a material effect in producing the injury, or substantially contributed toward it, he is not entitled to recover.

Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422; Klix v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854; Butz v. Cavanaugh, 137 Mo. 503; Witte v. Stifel, 126 Mo. 303.

Defendant in error was not bound to fence or encase, or protect the shaft which caused the death of Leigh Walter Howell, as the machinery was open and on the premises of the defendant, a place where the deceased, Howell, had no right to go.

Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 35, 32 Am. Rep. 413; Moore v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 99 Pa. 301, 44 Am. Rep. 106; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; McMahon v. New York, 33 N. Y. 642; Plumley v. Birge, 124 Mass. 57, 26 Am. Rep. 645; Sickles v. New Jersey Ice Co. 153 N. Y. 83; Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 20, 40, 123; Bishop, Non-Contr. Law, § 845; Conroy v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 96 Wis. 243, 38 L. R. A. 419; Daley v. New Haven, Norwich, & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Bagley v. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 159; Sutton v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 243; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 804; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall

116, 22 L. ed. 780; Beisiegel v. New York O. E. Co. 40 N. Y. 9.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action commenced in the court below for the recovery of damages by reason of the death of Leigh Walter Howell, which was caused, as is alleged, by the wrongful act, neglect, and default of the defendant in error, the Consolidated Barb-Wire Company. On December 2, 1897, an amended petition was filed in the cause, to which a general demurrer was interposed by the defendant wire company. This demurrer was sustained by the court, and the plaintiff below electing to stand thereon, judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant.

The question for our consideration is whether the amended petition states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is alleged in said amended petition that the plaintiff, W. P. Biggs, on July 28, 1897, was duly appointed administrator of the estate of Leigh Walter Howell, deceased; that the defendant is a corporation, and had for a long time operated a wire-nail and barb-wire plant on the south bank of the Kansas river, at Lawrence; that said plant was run by water power, and that the power is transmitted to said wire mill and plant about 125 feet, by a certain shaft owned and controlled by the defendant; that said shaft is about 6 inches in diameter, and is located about 15 or 18 feet above the water; and that said shafting is supported on timbers which are about 18 inches apart, said timbers being supported by a stone buttress or pier; and that about 12 or 18 feet west of said buttress or pier is a collar or coupling, about 8 inches in diameter, around said shaft, and in the outer rim of said collar or coupling is a bolt or set screw which projects out some 4 or 5 inches from the outer rim of the collar or coupling; that the shafting and connections and attachments are open and exposed, and in no manner covered or inclosed; that the shaft revolves at the rate of about 100 to 150 revolutions per minute; that on the 21st day of April, 1897, said Leigh Walter Howell was fishing and playing near to and under said shaft, and that in attempting to climb up from below, on a ladder for that purpose built by the defendant, onto the timbers on either side of said shaft, theafore-said bolt or set screw which projected from the collar or coupling on said shaft caught in the back of his coat, and he was whirled around said shaft, and against said timbers, with irresistible force, and killed, dying as the result of being so caught by said set screw; that the barb-wire company was guilty of gross carelessness towards the deceased, in that, through its officers, it had actual notice of the faulty construction of said machinery, and that at the place of the accident it was unsafe and dangerous; that the barb-wire company was guilty of gross carelessness towards the deceased, in not inclosing or boxing the collar, coupling, and screw, and in leaving same exposed and open, and, further, in allowing the set screw or bolt to project 4 or 5 inches from the rim of the collar or coupling, and in not boxing same, and was careless in leaving the machinery and timbers supporting the same, and the immediate surroundings (which were attractive to children), open and exposed, wholly unguarded and unfenced; that the deceased could not see the bolt or set screw, by reason of the shaft revolving so fast as to render it invisible; that the place where plaintiff's intestate was killed, and the machinery and timbers supporting the same, and the surroundings, were attractive to children; and that children, and particularly boys, were in the habit of resorting there for the purpose of amusement, and men and boys were in the habit of climbing about on the timbers which supported the shaft, for the purpose of fishing and playing, and they did fish from the timbers, and that the barb-wire company had notice of such facts; that the defendant company knew that the said machinery was unsafe and dangerous, for the reason that other persons had been caught by said screw; that said shaft is built across what would be New Hampshire street if projected 10 feet into the water; that said dangerous machinery was left in an open and exposed place, unfenced and unprotected, and in a place attractive to children; that at the time of the accident, April 21st, there were no signboards on or about the said premises, but previous to that time there had been and same had been put up and erected by defendant company, but that since April 21st the defendant had placed and erected danger boards on and around said premises; that Leigh Walter Howell, the deceased, was a boy fourteen years of age, intelligent, healthy, and promising, at the time of his death; that he left a father, brother, and sister surviving him.

All the allegations of the petition being admitted, together with such facts as are properly inferable from the language used, we are unable to perceive that they demand the application of any different rule than that heretofore adopted and adhered to by this court in cases substantially similar. The structure erected and maintained by the wire company was of such a nature as to be attractive to children, especially to boys. It was situated in a place about which boys and men congregated for the purpose of amusement, and boys were in the habit of climbing about on the timbers that supported the shaft for the purpose of fishing and playing, of which fact the wire company had actual notice. At the top of the structure was a collar or coupling, in which was a set screw projecting 4 or 5 inches from the outer rim of the coupling. When in motion, this collar or coupling and the set screw revolved at the rate of from 100 to 150 revolutions per minute, by reason of the velocity of the shaft, so that the screw was invisible. There was a ladder extending to the top of the structure, upon which the boy climbed until, when near the top, he was caught in the back of the coat by this revolving set screw, which projected from the collar and, being whirled around the shaft and against the timbers, he was killed.

The case of Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 551, is an authority directly in point. In that case the boy drowned in the reservoir of the water company was bright and intelligent. He was a trespasser on the grounds of the water company. The grounds about the reservoirs were inclosed with a barb-wire fence ten to twelve wires high. The deceased entered the inclosure by climbing over a stile. The watchman of the water company was aware of the habit of boys to climb over the stile, and permitted them to do so without objection. The boy went with some companions to the reservoir to fish and play, and, venturing upon an "apron" which extended from the bank out into one of the reservoirs, was drowned. His parents had frequently warned him of the danger of going to the reservoir, and he had trespassed there once before, without their knowledge. In the Price Case, as in the case at bar, two grounds of error were urged: First, that the defendant was not negligent in maintaining the premises; second, that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. The two grounds were disposed of by this court in an opinion reviewing the authorities. Among other things, the court said: "It is, however, contended by the defendant in error that, inasmuch as the deceased was a trespasser upon its grounds, it owed to him no duty to guard against the accident which occurred. Without doubt, the common law exempts the owner of private grounds from obligation to keep them in a safe condition for the benefit of trespassers, idlers, bare licensees, or others who go upon them, not by invitation, express or implied, but for pleasure or through curiosity. Coolley, Torts, 2d ed. 718; 1 Thomp. Neg. 303; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573. The common law, however, does not permit the owner of private grounds to keep thereon allurements to the natural instincts of human or animal kind, without taking reasonable precautions to insure the safety of such as may be thereby attracted to his premises. To maintain upon one's property enticements to the ignorant or unwary is tantamount to an invitation to visit, and to inspect and enjoy; and in such cases the obligation to endeavor to protect from the dangers of the seductive instrument or place follows as justly as though the invitation had been express." The court quotes approvingly from the case of Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 691, 31 Am. Rep. 203, when passing on the question of contributory negligence of the deceased: "Boys can seldom be said to be negligent when they merely follow the irresistible impulses of their own natures,—instincts common to all boys. In many cases where men, or boys approaching manhood, would be held to be negligent, younger boys and boys with less intelligence would not be. And the question of negligence is in nearly all cases one of fact for the jury, whether the person charged with negligence is of full age or not." See also Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374; Consolidated City & C. P. R. Co. v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 62.

From the peculiar character of the structure upon which the plaintiff's intestate was killed, and its proximity to the water of the Kansas river, it certainly presented to the average boy a desirable place from which to fish; and considering the inbred disposition and ever-present impulse in children, especially boys, to explore and investigate, this structure over the water appealed strongly to such natural inclination. The barb-wire company had notice that this structure was used by men and boys as a fishing platform; and, having this notice, it was a question for the jury to say whether it was negligent in maintaining it in its condition at the time of the accident. The death of the plaintiff's intestate was directly caused by the revolving set screw attached to the coupling on the shafting which was supported by the upright timbers. Its velocity was so great that neither a boy of fourteen nor a man of mature years could have seen it. Except for the projecting pin on said coupling, the appliance would probably have been safe, and no harm would have resulted to the boy. It was not boxed or covered.

It is contended by the defendant in error that the prior decisions of this court above cited are not precedents in the case at bar, for the reason that in none of them has a boy of the age of fourteen years been held incapable of knowing the consequences of his acts. We cannot say, as a matter of law, at what age a boy would be possessed of such intelligence, foresight, and judgment as to charge him with contributory negligence in a case like the present. It is peculiarly within the province of the jury to determine such questions. In the Carlson Case, above cited, it is said: "As a matter of fact, we know that there is great difference in the capacity of different children at the same age, owing as well to differences in education and surroundings as to natural capacity. The question as to the capacity of a particular child, at a particular time, to exercise care in avoiding a particular danger is one of fact, falling within the province of the jury to determine."

The judgment of the court below will be reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the petition.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. K. SUMRALL et al., Appts.,

v.

COLUMBIA FINANCE & TRUST COMPANY, Assignee of Commercial Building Trust.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The issuance of preferred stock by a building and loan association which is based on principles of co-operation, equality, and mutuality is void as against public policy.
2. A guaranty that preferred stock in a building and loan association shall mature at a certain time, and that the common stock shall constitute a guaranty therefor, constitutes a guaranty for the accumulation of sufficient profits or dividends to mature the preferred stock, and does not control a distribution of the capital and assets of the concern on the winding up of the association, when there are no profits on hand.

(March 18, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Common Pleas Division of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County refusing to allow preferences to defendants out of the assets of an insolvent building and loan association. Affirmed.

The stock of the Commercial Building Trust was divided into classes. One class was known as common stock, the owners of which constituted the working corporation, and which under the by-laws of the corporation constituted a guaranty for the maturity of the preferred stock. The other class was preferred stock which appeared to be in the nature of an investment, and this in turn was divided into two classes. One class was paid in full by a single payment and the other class was to be paid for by monthly payments. The plan appeared to be that the preferred stock should draw interest on the amounts paid in. Upon the insolvency of the corporation the preferred stock claimed repayment in full in preference to the holders of the common stock. This suit was brought to test the validity of such claims. The court appointed J. R. Williamson to defend for the class of preferred instalment stockholders, J. K. Sumrall to defend for the class of preferred paid-up stockholders, and J. C. Caldwell to defend for the class of common stockholders. The court denied any preference, and the representatives of the preferred stockholders took this appeal.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

NOTE.—For prepaid stock in building and loan associations, see People, Fairchild, v. Preston (N. Y.) 24 L. R. A. 57; also Gibson v. Safety Homestead & L. Asso. (Ill.) 39 L. R. A. 202; and Rhodes v. Missouri Sav. & L. Co. (Ill.) 42 L. R. A. 93.

For preferred stock in corporations generally, see note to Feld v. Lamson & G. Mfg. Co. (Mass.) 27 L. R. A. 136.
41 L. R. A.

Messrs. William W. Watts, Joseph S. Botts, and J. R. Watts, for appellant Williamson:

The common stockholders knew of the provisions of the contract and induced Williamson and his class to purchase. The defense of ultra vires will not avail them, for the court will not hear them say they did not know of their contract.

To be ultra vires, the act must be outside of the power of the corporation.

The articles of incorporation, the instrument creating the corporation, provide that the common stock shall stand as a guaranty to the preferred stock.

An act authorized by the statutes, and by the charter of the corporation organized thereunder, then by the by-laws subsequently adopted, cannot be said to be an act ultra vires the corporation.

The charter of articles of incorporation, by-laws, and certificates of stock make up the contract between the corporation and the stockholders.

Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Holyoke Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lewis, 1 Colo. App. 127; Bergman v. St. Paul Mut. Bldg. Asso. No. 1, 29 Minn. 275; McKenney v. Diamond State Loan Asso. 8 Houst. (Del.) 557; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Brockett, 58 Ill. App. 204; Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 281, 35 L. R. A. 289; Thompson, Bldg. Asso. 31; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 940; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. 269; White v. Boreing, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 210.

Preferred stock in a building association has been recognized by the Kentucky court of appeals.

Tate v. Louisville Bldg. & L. Asso. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1962.

The contract was not against public policy, and was not contrary to law, and the act of 1882 and the act of 1893 expressly provide for priority in the distribution of the assets upon the dissolution of a corporation voluntarily or otherwise.

Frankfort Bridge Co. v. Frankfort, 18 B. Mon. 46; Ang. & A. Corp. § 256; McGregor v. Home Ins. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 181; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 4th ed. § 278.

A person dealing with a corporation must, at his peril, take notice of its charter or articles of incorporation.

First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97; Oil City Land & Improv. Co. v. Porter, Ky. 261; Wright v. Shelby R. Co. 16 B. Mon. 499, 63 Am. Dec. 522; Bell & C. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1092; Parks v. Evansville, I. & C. Straight Line R. Co. 23 Ind. 572; Jenkins v. Previtt, 7 Blackf. 329; Walker v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 34 Miss. 255; Ellison v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 36 Miss. 572; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 941; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 54; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. § 269; Bertche v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. (Mo.) 48 S. W. 954.

Williamson and the others in his class in buying their stock were innocent purchasers making their purchases under the belief that the provisions of the articles, by-laws, and their certificates of stock, both on the face and back thereof, would be carried out.

American Wire-Nail Co. v. Bayless, 91 Ky. 94; Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159.

Upon the purchase of stock by Williamson and the others in his class their rights vested, and nothing which the corporation and the common stockholders might thereafter do, unless done immediately for the purpose of annulling the contract, could take away from them the rights acquired, except by their (Williamson's) laches, acquiescence, or assent.

Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Holyoke Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lewis, 1 Colo. App. 127; Bergman v. St. Paul Mut. Bldg. Asso. No. 1, 29 Minn. 275; McKenney v. Diamond State Loan Asso. 8 Houst. (Del.) 557; Niblack, Ben. Soc. 2d ed. 113; Thompson, Bldg. Asso. 31; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 946; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 700a; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. § 269; Cook, Corporations, 4th ed. § 4a.

It is the duty of stockholders to be prompt in their application for relief against the acts of the corporation before innocent third persons suffer; otherwise assent, acquiescence, or ratification will be presumed, and the doctrine of estoppel will apply.

American Wire-Nail Co. v. Bayless, 91 Ky. 94; Oil City Land & Improv. Co. v. Porter, 99 Ky. 254; Mazville, W. & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Barnes, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 431; Pocantico Waterworks Co. v. Low, 20 Misc. 484.

Williamson and the other preferred instalment stockholders have paid into the association about $141,000. From that sum and from the sums paid in by the other preferred stockholders more than $145,000 have been taken by the corporation for the common stockholders, and used in payment of the expenses of the corporation and the salaries of the officers and directors.

A stockholder who is an officer of the company, who is active in having preferred stock issued, subscribes for it, pays for it, takes his certificate therefor, votes upon it and induces others to take it, cannot after two years, when the corporation is insolvent, say that the statutes of the state authorize the issue of common stock only.

Banigan v. Bard, 134 U. S. 291, 33 L. ed. 932; Cook, Corporations, 4th ed. §§ 41, 732; Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159.

The question of ultra vires can be raised only while the contract is executory and before performance by innocent third persons.

American Wire-Nail Co. v. Bayless, 91 Ky. 94; Pocantico Waterworks Co. v. Low, 20 Misc. 484; Mazville, W. & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Barnes, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 431; American & Foreign Christian Union v. Yount, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 8; German Nat. Bank v. Butchers' Hide & Tallow Co. 97 Ky. 34; Springfield, M. & H. Turnp. Road Co. v. Harrodsburg, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 309; Morton v. Hamilton 44 L. R. A.

College, 100 Ky. 281, 35 L. R. A. 275; Cook, Corporations, 4th ed. §§ 30, 268, 671-673, 681; Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co. 114 Mich. 494; Nicosi v. Calera Land Co. 115 Ala. 429; Woolfolk v. January, 131 Mo. 620; Washburn v. National Wall Paper Co. 51 U. S. App. 380, 81 Fed. Rep. 17, 26 C. C. A. 312.

There are no general creditors as such, and none defending in the case; therefore the distribution must be made according to the contract expressly made and ratified, assented to, acquiesced in, and promulgated by the common stockholders, and the doctrine of ultra vires will not apply.

Cook, Corporations, 4th ed. §§ 268, 775; Hohenshell v. Home Sav. & L. Asso. 140 Mo. 566; Barr v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 263; Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239; Martin v. Niagara Falls Paper Mfg. Co. 122 N. Y. 165.

Messrs. Sumrall & Sumrall, with Messrs. Caruth, Chatterton, & Blitz, for appellant Sumrall:

The fully paid-up preferred stock was issued under the authority of the charter and by-laws, and, in accordance with § 564. Ky. Stat., was paid for in cash and at par, and represented by the officers, agents, and common stockholders of the corporation, to be preferred above the common stock, and the common-stock fund was held sacred for the maturity and repayment of the preferred.

It is an inherent power in a corporation to issue preferred stock subject to such restrictions as are imposed by statute, and these restrictions have been complied with in this fully paid-up preferred stock issue.

Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; McGregor v. Home Ins. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 181.

The statute prefers this stock as to the capital or assets as well as to dividends or interest.

Ky. Stat. § 564; 1 Cook, Corporations, § 278; McGregor v. Home Ins. Co. 33 N. J. Eq. 181; Hamlin v. Continental Trust Co. 47 U. S. App. 422; Hamlin v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 78 Fed. Rep. 664, 24 C. C. A. 271, 36 L. R. A. 826.

This court has recognized the right of a building and loan association to issue preferred stock, and enforce contracts in relation thereto.

Tate v. Louisville Bldg. & L. Asso. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1982.

The law as to estoppel and acquiescence also applies under the pleadings.

2 Herman, Estoppel, pp. 1396-1399; 1 Herman, Estoppel, pp. 709, 711; Mazville, W. & L. Turnp. Co. v. Barnes, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 431.

Messrs. M. B. Bowden, James C. Poston, and Clarence Dallam, for appellees:

The right of holders of preferred stock depends on the contract, and is solely a question of the interpretation of the contract.

Beach, Priv. Corp. § 499; Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, 3d ed. § 267; 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 2262, 2263.

Preferred stock of a corporation when not explicitly preferred in the distribution of the assets, is preferred only as to dividends.

Beach, Priv. Corp. § 507; 2 Waterman,

Corp. p. 155; Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, 3d ed. §§ 267, 278; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2280; Re London India Rubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 519.

A contract of guaranty cannot be extended beyond its strict terms; and must be interpreted according to the intention of the parties.

Cambria Iron Co. v. Keynes, 56 Ohio St. 501; Pease Piano Co. v. Matthews, 5 Kan. App. 370; Liningier & M. Co. v. Webb, 51 Neb. 10.

If this is a guaranty by the common stockholders of the contract of the corporation, it is within the statute of frauds and unenforceable.

Ky. Stat. § 470.

Where neither the charter, by-laws, nor contract under which preferred stock is issued contemplates insolvency or the winding-up of the company, the preference is in dividends only; in the distribution of assets all become common stockholders, regardless of the preference.

Re London India Rubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 519.

The so-called guaranty, if not confined to a guaranty of dividends, was merely an estimate as to when the stock would be matured, and was only applicable as to a going company.

Re London India Rubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 518; Bertche v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. (Mo.) 43 S. W. 954.

All contracts of building and loan associations to the effect that after the payment of a certain sum, less than the face value, stock shall be considered full paid, are ultra vires and void.

Wierman v. International Bldg. Loan & Invest. Union, 67 Ill. App. 550; Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776; Bertche v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. (Mo.) 48 S. W. 954; International Bldg. Loan & Invest. Union v. King, 68 Ill. App. 640; Gibson v. Safety Homestead & L. Asso. 69 Ill. App. 485; State, Walker, v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. 142 Mo. 325; Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Potomac Improv. Co. 87 Md. 59; Fisher v. Patton, 33 S. W. 451, and 134 Mo. 32.

The pledge by a corporation of part of its capital for the benefit of a class of its shareholders is ultra vires, null and void.

Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 158; Wierman v. International Bldg. Loan & Invest. Union, 67 Ill. App. 550; Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776; Bertche v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. (Mo.) 48 S. W. 954.

Paid-up stock in a building and loan association cannot be regarded as indebtedness of the association, especially where, as in this case, the charter provides for the creation of other forms of indebtedness.

Tovle v. American Bldg. & L. Asso. 75 Fed. Rep. 936.

There can be no unpaid subscription to the stock of a building and loan association.

Ibid.

Mr. Charles Fox, for appellees Smith et al.:

The provision in the charter and by-laws 44 L. R. A.

of said association guaranteeing the maturity of the stock denominated preferred stock, when rightly construed, was never intended to give, and did not give, to the preferred stockholder any priority in the distribution of the assets of the association.

The corporation meant when it undertook to guarantee the maturity of the preferred stock to say that after you have paid the monthly dues on your stock for seven years or ten years, according as your contract provides, that you shall have a right on proper notice to withdraw from the association $100 for each share held by you.

There is no provision nor even intimation in the charter or any by-law that the holder of preferred stock shall be entitled to any priority in the redemption of his stock or in the distribution of the assets of the association.

The corporation did not guarantee that the shareholder would have a right to withdraw the par value of his stock until seven years or ten years, as the case might be, from the date of its issuance.

The Commercial Building Trust had no authority in law to give to one class of its capital stock a preference in the distribution of its assets over another class of its capital stock, and such attempt is clearly ultra vires.

First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97.

Messrs. Fairleigh & Straus for the assignee.

Messrs. William Furlong and John Roberts for the common stockholders.

Hazelrigg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Commercial Building Trust is a corporation organized in February, 1892, under chapter 56 of the General Statutes. The general nature of its business was to "lend its money to its stockholders, especially with the view of aiding them to procure homes, and, in case of a surplus not needed by the stockholders, to other persons." Articles of Incorporation, p. 8. The object of the corporation was "to afford its members a safe and profitable investment for their earnings, and an opportunity to obtain loans upon easy terms to purchase homes, and establish themselves in business." By-laws, p. 9. The capital stock was to consist of $10,000,000—100,000 shares, of the par value of $100 each—of preferred stock; and $1,000,000—1,000 shares, of the par value of $1,000 each—of common stock. The former, or preferred stock, was to be subscribed for and paid in upon such terms, and at such times, as the by-laws might prescribe; being in instalments of small amounts, payable periodically or in larger payments, at the election of the subscriber. The common stock was to be subscribed for and paid in upon such terms, and at such times, as the board of directors might, from time to time, determine, and it might be issued in monthly or other periodical series. We conclude, therefore, that the business of the concern, to all practical intents, was that of an ordinary building and loan association; so extended and amplified, however, as to embrace objects and purposes wholly foreign to such associations proper, and which have been condemned by this court in numerous cases. The articles of incorporation provide that "the preferred stock is guaranteed by this corporation to mature, and be payable, in seven years from the date of the payment of the first instalment paid on said stock." And a by-law provides that the funds of the common stock "shall constitute the guaranty for the maturity of the preferred stock." This preferred stock was to be issued in various classes, in some of which the dividend to be paid was at the rate of 8 per centum per annum, and in others at the rate of 10 per centum per annum, all payable semi-annually. As soon as organized, the corporation began business, and issued, from time to time, both common and preferred stock. Becoming insolvent, however, it made, in June, 1897, for the benefit of its creditors, an assignment of all its assets to the Columbia Finance & Trust Company. In the administration of the trust, the question was presented to the chancellor, in a suit brought for a settlement of the estate, whether there not being enough money to pay the alleged preferred stockholders in full, the entire funds of the corporation should be distributed to them, to the exclusion of the common stockholders. The chancellor answered this question by holding "that none of the stock of the defendant corporation is entitled to a preference over other stock in said corporation, and that all stockholders, indiscriminately, shall share equally in the distribution of the assets of the corporation in the hands of the assignee, in proportion to the amounts paid into the corporation by them, respectively, on their stock, after the payment of its debts, and the proper costs, expenses, and charges of the assignee in the execution of the trust." The correctness of this judgment is the sole question presented on this appeal.

Without reference, for the present, to certain interesting questions ably discussed by counsel, involving the validity of the issue of preferred stock by this corporation, we turn at once to a consideration of the terms of the contract by which the corporation guaranteed that its preferred stock should "mature and be payable in seven years from the date of the payment of the first instalment paid on said stock." This is the only provision on the subject of guaranty to be found in the articles of incorporation, and it seems to apply only to instalment stock. So construing it, the provision means simply that, upon the subscriber for this stock making his monthly payments of 60 cents per share for the period of seven years, or $50.40 in the aggregate, the corporation guaranteed that the dividends thereon would so accumulate as that the stock would be worth $1.00 per share. Putting the guaranty in another form, the corporation guaranteed that it would declare at the end of seven years a dividend of $49.60 on each share of preferred instalment stock, but this stock is to be paid for in monthly instalments of 60 cents per month. In the by-laws, however, there is a further provision, by which the corporation "guaranteed the maturity of class D instalment stock in seven years from the date of the first month's dues paid thereon, and class E instalment stock in ten years from the date of the first month's dues paid thereon, and class F paid-up stock in seven years from the date of its issuance." Here, again, is merely a guaranty that dividends sufficient to mature certain classes of instalment stock and a class of paid-up stock would be declared at the end of seven years. The subscribers to this stock were members of the association, and participants in the scheme of so loaning out its funds as that the usurious rates were to be realized. It was by reason of the unlawful and usurious character of this scheme, which was adopted by the association with the approval and by the votes of these members or their representatives, that the enterprise failed of execution; and, when it failed, the so-called "guaranty" was at an end. Moreover, the guaranty on the part of the company that it would declare, in a given time, certain dividends, or dividends sufficient to mature certain stock, or an agreement that it would set apart certain other stock as a guaranty of such dividends, cannot be enforced, unless there are net profits—dividends proper—out of which the guaranty can be made good and the dividends paid. The reason is because the contract does not, and cannot, in the nature of things, create the relation of debtor and creditor. The member is a shareholder in the association,—a preferred one, it is true,—when there are profits out of which he may be paid; otherwise not. Mr. Cook, in his work on Corporations, says (§ 271): "The law is now clearly settled that a preferred stockholder is not a corporate creditor. . . . A contract that dividends shall be paid on the preferred stock, whether any profits are made or not, would be contrary to public policy, and void. An agreement to pay dividends absolutely and at all events,—from the profits when there are any, and from the capital when there are not,—is an undertaking which is contrary to law and is void. Public policy condemns, with emphasis, any such undertaking on the part of a corporation as to its preferred or guaranteed shares." See also Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156. The contract there is a guaranty of dividends sufficient to mature the stock, and is enforceable only if there are profits sufficient for that purpose. In this insolvent association there are no profits, and there can be no dividends, a guaranty to the contrary notwithstanding. This may not be very material to appellant, as he is reaching after the capital and all assets on hand not profits. But it follows, from what we have said, that the guaranty has reference solely to a preference in the distribution of dividends. It has no reference to a distribution of assets apart from dividends, and especially no reference to such distribution on the winding-up or insolvency of the concern. The agreement to make enough profits to mature the preferred stock in seven years, and a pledge of the common stock for that purpose, looked to a going concern; at least, it was expected to be a live and running association for seven years. It is not contended the guaranty was that the corporation was to last for that time. We think it clear that the period of winding up having arrived, with no profits on hand, the distribution of the capital and assets of the concern is not to be controlled by a provision or guaranty looking solely to the maturity of stock, or, what is the same thing, the distribution of dividends, in due course, in a running or going association.

In Re London India Rubber Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 519, there was a provision in the company's charter securing to preferred stock a bonus or dividend out of money produced by the sale of certain property, not required by the company in the conduct of its business. This property was, in effect, pledged to the preferred stockholders, to secure this bonus or dividend, just as it is argued here we have a charge on the common stock to secure the maturity of the preferred stock by dividends large enough to mature it. It was argued in that case that the bonus or dividend should be paid out of the proceeds of the property when sold. The court herein, however, said: "But I think it is plain that the 161st clause is directed to a going or continuing concern. It does not, in the slightest degree, contemplate a breaking up of the company, and is not intended to define the rights of the parties on the happening of that unfortunate event. This clause, therefore, has no application to the event which has happened. The fund is not dividend. It represents the capital of the company, and, not being otherwise provided for, it must, in my opinion, as I originally decided, be divided among the shareholders pro rata, according to the amount of capital which each shareholder has in the concern; in other words, among the two classes of shareholders equally. I wish it to be considered that I decide the case upon this principle: That where there is a provision for preferential dividends, but no provision for the division of capital, upon the breaking up of the concern any surplus must be distributed among the shareholders according to their capital, without reference to their right in respect to dividends."

So, we think here, the by-laws providing that the funds of the common stock shall constitute the guaranty for the maturity of the preferred stock means that the common-stock fund was a guaranty for the accumulation—the earning—of sufficient profits or dividend to mature the preferred stock, in a continuing association, and continuing, too, on a plan or scheme well known to all its members. There is no provision in the corporation's charter or its by-laws, or in any of the certificates of stock or indorsements or specifications accompanying the stock, declaring that there was to be any preference given one class of stock over another in the capital or body of the concern. In the absence of such a provision, the stock is preferred only in the sense that it has priority in the distribution of dividends. The 44 L. R. A. contract we are considering, then, by fair construction, refers only to preferential dividends, and this is the ordinary effect to be given the use of the words "preferred stock." In 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, 3d ed. § 267, it is said: "By preferred stock is to be understood stock which entitles the holder to receive dividends from the earnings of the company before the common stock can receive a dividend from such earnings. In other words, it is stock entitled to dividends from the income or earnings of the corporation before any other dividend can be paid." And the same author (§ 278) says: "Upon the dissolution of a corporation, and the distribution of its assets among the shareholders after the payment of the corporate indebtedness, it is the settled rule of law that, in the absence of any provision in the statutes, by-laws, or certificate to the contrary, preferred stockholders have no priority over common stockholders." See also Beach, Priv. Corp. § 507; 2 Waterman, Corp. § 155; 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 2278-2280.

When we bear in mind that the corporation we are dealing with is a building and loan association, with certain underlying principles of co-operation, equality, and mutuality in its make-up not common to ordinary corporations, and which may be termed the "common law of its existence," the objections to upholding preferential contracts among members become apparent. All such attempts are absolutely void, as contrary to the natural law of such associations. If their managers may attract investors by selling them preferred stock,—preferred either as respects dividends or capital,—the burdens of maintaining the organization, and in all probability all the losses of the concern, in case of embarrassment or insolvency, will fall on the very class of members who were primarily intended to be benefited by such associations. In King v. International Bldg. Loan, & Invest. Union, 170 Ill. 135, it was said: "The plan of issuing stock containing such agreements is entirely foreign to the purposes of the corporation contemplated by the statute under which the one at bar was organized, and we cannot but regard them as of no force and effect." To the same effect are the cases of Trowbridge v. Hamilton, 18 Wash. 686, and of Wierman v. International Bldg. Loan, & Invest. Union, 67 Ill. App. 550, although in these cases a by-law undertook to authorize the contract of preference. In the case of Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776, the question arose as to whether or not a building association, established under the statutes of Missouri, substantially similar to those of Kentucky, could provide for the issuance of paid-up stock, and secure its redemption by a trust deed upon its assets. The court held that, independent of statutory provision, a building and loan company had an implied power to receive a prepayment of its stock, and to issue paid-up stock, but that any attempt to give a preference to such stock was against the policy of the common law governing such institutions, and was against the policy of the statute, and was absolutely void. In passing upon the question in that case, the court said: "The next and last question to be considered is whether the complainant, as the holder of the certificates in question, is entitled to any preferential right in and to the property undertaken to be pledged to secure their payment. This must be answered by determining whether the defendant association had power to make the contract so pledging such property. 'The elementary working principle of the building association scheme,' according to Endlich (Bldg. Asso. § 122), is 'a system of perfect mutuality and reciprocity and equality of all members.' No provision is found in the organic law authorizing an association like the defendant to pledge any of its assets for the retirement or payment of any of its stock, nor is there any general power conferred by statute upon loan and building associations to issue preferred preferential stock, from which authority for pledging its assets to secure the payment of any of its stock may be inferred. Under such state of facts, it must, in my opinion, be held that the pledge of corporate assets for the retirement or payment of a certain class of its stock, in preference to others, is so violative of the elementary requirement of equality and mutuality as to be absolutely void."

We fully concur, therefore, in the chancellor's judgment denying any preference to the so-called preferred over the common stockholders in the distribution of the assets of this association. The suggestion that the appellees have not in fact paid anything into the concern on their stock is guarded against in the orders below by requiring proof of all claims, in the usual way, before the master.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF DYERSBURG, Tennessee, App't.,

v.

J. B. MILLETT, Impleaded, etc.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A petition in an action against an indorser of a bill of exchange, which is annexed thereto, need not aver protest of the bill or waiver of protest, where the bill has the words "No protest" indorsed on its face.
2. The existence of a debt due by the drawee of a bill of exchange to the payee is a sufficient consideration to bind the drawer upon his promise to pay the bill, and render him liable for the amount although he was a stranger to the debt.
3. That a draft is to the knowledge of the payee drawn by the agent of the drawee to pay the latter's debt will not relieve the drawer from personal liability thereon if he directs the amount to be charged to his account.

NOTE.—The above case is an unusually important one on the question of a draft by an agent to pay a debt of the principal on whom the draft is drawn.

As to agent's responsibility on bills of exchange generally, see also some cases in note to 44 L. R. A.

4. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a draft drawn by one as an individual was drawn in accordance with a parol agreement between him and the payee that he should not be bound thereon.

(January 20, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Henderson County releasing the drawer of a bill of exchange from liability thereon to the payee because of an alleged understanding that he was not to be liable. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. B. Vance and R. D. Vance for appellant.

Messrs. Yeaman & Lockett, for appellee:

The petition does not set forth a cause of action as against Millett. There is no allegation that either of the bills was protested, nor that Millett, the drawer, had any notice of their dishonor.

Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, § 970.

It is no answer to say that the words "No protest" were written across the end of the bill, as in this case. Had it been alleged in the petition that the protest was waived by Millett, and that allegation had been controverted, the memorandum might have been used as evidence to support the allegation. But upon the trial of such an issue the drawer might show that the memorandum was put upon the bill after his signature.

Whatever might constitute the evidence of waiver, it is as necessary to aver it as it would be, in a suit on a note, to aver that the defendant promised to pay.

Randolph, Commercial Paper, § 1367.

The question arises between the original parties to the paper, all of whom understood the circumstances under which it was drawn.

It is a good defense or bar to an action between these parties, that the bill is a mere accommodation bill, that the drawer is a mere accommodation drawer, the payee an accommodation indorser, and the acceptor an accommodation acceptor.

Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, § 1; 3 Kent, Com. 4th ed. pp. 80, 81.

Presumptively the agent drawing on his principal is bound to the creditor; but if there were an express understanding that he was not to be bound, or circumstances from which it might be inferred that such was the understanding, he would be regarded as having drawn for the creditor's accommodation, not, indeed, to enable him to raise money, necessarily, but to enable him, in the most succinct form, to vouch to his debtor the amount and authenticity of the debt, and call for payment at the same time.

Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, § 311, Liability of Agent; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 2d ed. 93, 94; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Bills and Notes, 369.

Farmers' Co-Operative Trust Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 12 L. R. A. 346.

For note by agent, see also Keldan v. Winegar (Mich.) 20 L. R. A. 703, and note; also Shuey v. Adair (Wash.) 30 L. R. A. 473.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th of December, 1894, the appellant filed in the clerk's office of the Henderson circuit court its petition against W. W. Shelby and William Soaper, a firm doing business under the firm name of the Henderson Hominy Mills, and against the appellee, J. B. Millett. The petition reads as follows:

The plaintiff, the Citizens' Bank, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Tennessee, and doing business in the town of Dyersburg, Tennessee, says that, for several months past, the defendants W. W. Shelby and Wm. Soaper were partners, doing business in the city of Henderson and state of Kentucky, under the firm name of Henderson Hominy Mills; and while they were copartners, to wit, on November 30, 1894, the defendant J. B. Millett drew his certain draft, a bill of exchange, of that date, payable at sight, on the said Henderson Hominy Mills, and in favor of plaintiff, for the sum of $2,750.72, which said draft was presented to and accepted by the said Shelby and Soaper, under the style of the Henderson Hominy Mills, on the 5th day of November, 1894; and on the 8th day of November, 1894, said draft was duly presented to said defendants for payment, and payment thereof demanded, but no part thereof was paid. The said draft is herewith filed as part hereof, no part of which has been paid. The plaintiff further says that the defendant J. B. Millett drew his certain other draft or bill of exchange, dated December 1, 1894, on the said defendants Shelby and Soaper, under the firm name of the Henderson Hominy Mills, payable at sight, in favor of plaintiff, for $2,475.53, which said bill of exchange was duly presented to defendants for payment, and the payment thereof demanded of them, but no part thereof was paid. The said bill is herewith filed as part hereof. The consideration of the said bill of exchange was the sum of $2,475.53, paid by this plaintiff on the checks of the defendants Shelby and Soaper, and used in payment for corn purchased by them by the defendant J. B. Millett, as their agent. The said checks were paid upon the express agreement of the said defendants that they would accept the draft of the defendant J. B. Millett, drawn upon them for the amount thereof, when requested by this plaintiff; and he says, by reason thereof, the said defendants became and are indebted to him in the said sum of $2,475.53, and are liable therefor on the said bill of exchange. The defendant the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company and Jas. S. Alres have received from the said Shelby and Soaper a conveyance of their property in trust for the payment of their debts, and have accepted said trust, and have qualified as such trustees. No part of the said debt has been paid. The premises considered, the plaintiff prays judgment against the defendants for the sum of $2,750.72, with interest from November 30, 1894, and for the further sum of $2,475.53, with interest from December 1, 1894, for their costs, and for all proper relief

S. B. & R. D. Vance.

Atty. for Plaintiff.

The drafts referred to in the foregoing petition are as follows:

$2,750.72.

Dyersburg, Tenn., Nov. 30th, 1894.

Buying Department of Henderson Hominy Mills.

At sight ——— pay to the order of Citizens' Bank twenty-seven hundred and fifty & 72/100 dollars. Collect through Farmers' Bank, Henderson, Ky. Value received, and charge the same to account of J. B. Millett.

For corn.

To Henderson Hominy Mills, Henderson, Ky.

No. 414.

$2,475.53.

Dyersburg, Tenn., Dec. 1, 1894.

Buying Department Henderson Hominy Mills.

At sight ——— pay to the order of Citizens' Bank two thousand and four hundred and seventy-five & 53/100 dollars. Collect through Farmers' Bank, Henderson, Kentucky. Value received, and charge the same to account of J. B. Millett.

For corn.

To Henderson Hominy Mills, Henderson, Ky.

No. 415.

Shelby and Soaper made no defense, and judgment was rendered by default against them for the amounts claimed. The appellee, Millett, filed his separate answer, which reads as follows:

The defendant J. B. Millett, for his separate answer to plaintiff's petition, states that, at the time the two drafts sued on were drawn and delivered to the plaintiff, the defendants Shelby and Soaper were, as stated in the petition, partners in the name of the Henderson Hominy Mills, and were manufacturing great quantities of corn into hominy. This defendant was the agent of said hominy mills for the purchase of corn to be shipped to them, to be used in their said business. Prior to the making of either of said drafts, said hominy mills made an arrangement with the plaintiff bank, by which it was agreed between said hominy mills and the plaintiff that the defendant as the agent of said mills should purchase corn in the neighborhood of Dyersburg, and give the checks of the said mills therefor on the plaintiff, and that at convenient periods the amounts paid by plaintiff on such checks should be balanced by drafts drawn on said hominy mills. After said arrangement had been entered into, this defendant, as such agent, purchased large quantities of corn for said hominy mills, and gave checks therefor on plaintiff, signed Henderson Hominy Mills, by J. B. Millett, and afterwards, at convenient periods, gave to plaintiff drafts on said mills for the aggregate amount of such checks, all of which drafts, prior to the one dated November 30, 1894, were paid by said hominy mills. After the last draft that was paid, and prior to said November 30, this defendant, as such agent, purchased other corn, and gave checks therefor on plaintiff, signed as aforesaid, amounting to $2,750.72, when, on said November 30, he gave plaintiff a draft for that amount, being the one first set forth in the petition. Afterwards, and prior to December 1, 1894, he, as such agent, purchased other corn, and gave checks therefor on plaintiff, signed as aforesaid, amounting in the aggregate to $2,475.53, when, on December 1, he gave plaintiff a draft for that amount, being the one secondly set forth in the petition. Defendant alleges that, in the giving of said drafts, and in all of said transactions, he acted solely as the agent of said Henderson Hominy Mills, which fact was well known to and perfectly understood by the plaintiff; and the plaintiff accepted said drafts as the drafts of said hominy mills, and solely upon their credit, and not as the drafts or acts of this defendant in his own right; and, in accepting said drafts, the plaintiff gave credit solely to, and looked for payment thereof solely to, said hominy mills, and not at all to this defendant; and, so far as this defendant is concerned, there was no consideration whatever for either one of said drafts. Par. 2. This defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief that either of said drafts was ever presented for payment, or payment thereof demanded. He prays to be dismissed, with his costs, and for all proper relief.

Yeaman & Lockett, for Deft. Millett.

Plaintiff demurred to the first paragraph of the answer, but afterwards withdrew same, and filed its reply, which is as follows:

The plaintiff, for reply to the first paragraph of the answer of J. B. Millett, herein, says it denies that, in giving the drafts mentioned in the petition, the defendant acted solely as the agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills, or that plaintiff accepted said drafts, or either of them, as the drafts of the said hominy mills, or solely upon their credit, or that, in accepting said drafts, it gave credit solely to said hominy mills; but plaintiff says that said drafts were drawn as the drafts of the defendant Millett, and were accepted by the plaintiff as his drafts, and in reliance upon his credit, as well as that of the said Henderson Hominy Mills. Plaintiff says that the arrangement for the payment of the checks of the said hominy mills was made by the defendant Millett, who, in consideration that plaintiff would pay said checks, agreed and promised that, when thereunto requested by plaintiff, he would draw his personal bill of exchange on the said hominy mills for the amount of the checks so paid, and in payment thereof; and plaintiff says that the bills sued on were drawn in pursuance of said agreement, and as the personal bills of the defendant Millett, and were accepted by plaintiff as such, and in reliance upon the credit of the said Millett, as the drawer thereof. Plaintiff prays as in its petition, and for all proper relief.

S. B. & R. D. Vance,

Attys. for Plaintiff.

Afterwards appellee filed the following rejoinder:

The defendant Millett denies that the drafts sued on were drawn as his drafts, or were accepted by plaintiff as his drafts, or in reliance upon his credit. Defendant denies that he, in consideration that plaintiff would pay the checks of the Henderson Hominy Mills, agreed or promised to draw his personal bill of exchange on said hominy mills for the amount thereof or in payment of said checks. It is not true that, in pursuance of such agreement, the said drafts were drawn as the personal bills of the defendant, or were accepted by plaintiff as such, or in reliance upon the credit of this defendant as the drawer thereof. Wherefore he prays as in his answer, and for all proper relief.

Yeaman & Lockett, for Deft. Millett.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the appellee. Appellant's grounds for a new trial are as follows: "(1) For error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiff as follows: In permitting evidence on behalf of said defendant that he signed the bills of exchange only as agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills; in giving to the jury instructions numbered 1 and 2, and in refusing to give instructions A, B, and C, asked for the plaintiff. (2) Because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and is contrary to law. Wherefore plaintiff moves the court to grant it a new trial as against said Millett."

Plaintiff's motion for new trial having been overruled, it prosecutes this appeal.

The plaintiff read as evidence the bills sued on, heretofore copied, together with indorsements thereon, showing that they had been assigned to some other parties for collection, but the assignments being regarded and treated as of no consequence. One of the bills appears to have been accepted by the Henderson Hominy Mills, and the other not accepted. The plaintiff also introduced C. T. Starling, who testified as follows: "I am cashier of the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, at Henderson." Being shown the said bills of exchange the witness said that "the one of date November 30, 1894, being for $2,750.72, came to our bank for collection. He did not know whether the other one did or not, nor did he know whether they were ever presented to the Henderson Hominy Mills or to Shelby & Soaper, for payment. The collection clerk takes out the bills for collection, and I do not know to whom he presented them. Hugh Atkinson was our collection clerk at the date of these bills." Sam Heilbronner was then introduced for plaintiff, who testified as follows: "In December, 1894, I was bookkeeper for the Henderson Hominy Mills. The bill dated November 30, 1894, was presented to the Henderson Hominy Mills on December 5, 1894, for payment, and was accepted by me in writing on the face of it. The other bill was never presented to me. The word 'refused,' written on the back of it, was written by Mr. David Banks." On cross-examination he said that after he accepted the bill, it was never afterwards presented for payment as far as he recollected, and that, when he accepted it, it was presented only for acceptance. The plaintiff then introduced Hugh Atkinson, who testified as follows: That in December, 1894, he was discount and collection clerk in the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, at Henderson, Kentucky; that the bill in suit, of date November 30, 1894, came to the Farmers' Bank for collection. "Our custom was, when we received paper on the Henderson Hominy Mills, to telephone to Mr. Heilbronner, and he would come up and accept them; and in this case I suppose he came to the bank, as the bill has his acceptance on it." On cross-examination witness said he did not know whether anything further was said to the hominy mills about paying the bill after it was accepted. "The course is, when a draft is accepted, I enter it up, and file it to the date it is due. My father places it in open file, and they are not presented for payment any more. I have no recollection of this particular draft, but I identify it as one that passed through my hands by my writing on the back of it. A great many such drafts come to the bank, and I think we received four or five drawn in favor of the Citizens' Bank of Dyersburg on the Henderson Hominy Mills, and signed like this one is signed. I do not know what became of the draft dated November 30, 1894." David Banks was next introduced for plaintiff, who testified as follows: That he was cashier of the Planters' State Bank of Henderson, Kentucky. "The bill in suit, dated December 1, 1894, passed through my bank, having been sent to it for collection, and was presented by me to the firm of Shelby & Soaper for payment. I telephoned them at the hominy mills that I had the bill for collection, and its payment was refused by them. The word 'refused,' indorsed on the back of the bill, was written by me." On cross-examination witness said he did not remember whether it was Shelby or Soaper to whom he talked through the telephone, but recognized the voice at the time, and knew it was one of them, and then knew which one it was. "The distance from the bank where I was to the hominy mills is about eight or ten blocks. That was the only presentation of the bill I ever made." On re-examination witness said he presented the draft immediately after it reached the bank through the mail, as he was aware of the assignment made by Shelby and Soaper the day before. "My impression is that the assignment was made on the 5th day of December."

The defendant testified for himself as follows: "I reside in Henderson, Kentucky, and am acquainted with the Citizens' Bank of Dyersburg, Tennessee. The Henderson Hominy Mills is located at Henderson, and that bank is located in Dyersburg, Tennessee. My connection with the Henderson

Hominy Mills began on the 8th day of September, 1894, as agent to buy corn on a salary. I operated in the neighborhood of Dyersburg, Newburn, and Yates, and was buying in all the different points along the road. As such agent, I had dealings with the plaintiff bank. I do not remember exactly when that dealing commenced, but it was after I had made contracts for purchasing corn that the Henderson Hominy Mills, through me, made arrangements with the bank to furnish the money to pay for the corn. These contracts were made with the parties who shelled the corn in the shuck, and the Henderson Hominy Mills was to pay them four cents per bushel for shelling the corn; and for every car they loaded I gave them a check on the Dyersburg Bank, and, when I made my rounds, I gave the bank a draft for the whole amount on the Henderson Hominy Mills. The person who did the shelling loaded the corn into the cars, and I paid them by giving a check on the Dyersburg Bank, signed Henderson Hominy Mills, by J. B. Millett. The bank had no money on deposit to the credit of the Henderson Hominy Mills with which to pay these checks. The checks were balanced by a draft for the full amount of the checks up to its date drawn by me on the Henderson Hominy Mills. [Witness produced the stubs of his check book, which were read to the jury, showing the checks given on the Dyersburg Bank for corn purchased for the Henderson Hominy Mills.] The amounts $486.07, dated November 7, 1894; $530.72, dated November 9, 1894; $2,383.17, dated November 17, 1894; $6,845.80, dated November 23, 1894; $2,743.87, dated November 30, 1894; and $2,469.36, dated December 1, 1894,—are amounts for which bills were drawn by me on the Henderson Hominy Mills to take up the checks which had been drawn on the bank, and paid by it, the last two being those for which the bills sued on were drawn. In the bill dated November 9, 1894, is included $2.50 exchange charged by the bank on the bill; in that of date November 17, 1894, is included $5.94 exchange; in that of date November 23, 1894, $17.11 exchange; in that dated November 30, 1894, $6.85 exchange; and in that dated December 1, 1894, $6.17 exchange. The bank knew that I was buying corn as agent for the Henderson Hominy Mills and it was the understanding and agreement between the bank and myself that the amounts paid by the bank of the checks drawn by me were to be covered by drafts on the Henderson Hominy Mills. My salary was in no way dependent on the payment of these drafts." W. W. Shelby was next introduced by defendant, who testified as follows: "I was one of the members of the firm of Henderson Hominy Mills. Am acquainted with the defendant Millett. He was our agent for purchasing corn in Dyersburg. Millett was authorized to give drafts on us in payment for corn bought by him. He gave a number of drafts on us, several of which were paid. I had no communication with the plaintiff bank, except that I received a letter from them, the same which is here now shown me." The said letter was read in evidence to the jury, and is in words and figures as follows:

Dyersburg, Tenn., Nov. 16, 1894.

Henderson Hominy Mills, Henderson, Ky.:—

Gentlemen: Your Mr. Millett is buying quite a lot of corn in this vicinity, and has made arrangements with us to handle his drafts on you. We have reason to believe that he is your representative, but, as the drafts are drawn without B. of L. attached, we prefer to have you authorize us to pay all his drafts.

Yours truly,

A. R. Woollen, Asst. Cashier.

"In answer to that letter, I wrote and placed in the mail the letter a copy of which is here now shown me." The defendant then offered to read to the jury the said copy, to which plaintiff objected; but its objection was overruled, and plaintiff excepted, and the defendant then read the said copy in evidence to the jury, which is in words and figures as follows:

Henderson, Ky., 11/17/94.

A. R. Woollen, Assistant Cashier, Dyersburg, Tenn.:—

Mr. J. B. Millett is our duly-authorized agent, and all his drafts will be promptly paid. He is a man in whom we have the greatest confidence, and will, without doubt, deal fairly with your people.

Yours truly,

Henderson Hominy Mills.

W. W. Shelby, Manager.

The appellee was recalled, and testified as follows: "I stated to the bank that I was the authorized agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills; and they gave me a blank book to give them checks, and when I came back I would give them a draft for the whole amount. The bank knew that I was the authorized agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills, and furnished a book containing the blank checks which I was to use in drawing on it for the money paid for the corn." Witness produced one of the checks taken from the said book, filled out in pencil, which was read to the jury, and is as follows:

Dyersburg, Tenn., Dec. 4, 1894.

No. —.

Citizens' Bank: Pay to the order of Hall & Co. ($313. ¹⁷/₁₀₀) three hundred & thirteen ¹⁷/₁₀₀ dollars. Buying Department Henderson Hominy Mills, for 1 car load of corn.

Henderson Hominy Mills,

By J. B. Millett.

"That was the form of the check which I drew on the bank in payment for corn bought by me."

Plaintiff then introduced A. R. Woollen, who testified as follows: "I was assistant cashier of the plaintiff Citizens' Bank at the 44 L. R. A.

time the bills in suit were drawn, and had been since March 1, 1889. The bills in suit were made by Mr. Millett, to take up checks on the bank given by him for corn bought for the Henderson Hominy Mills. Mr. Millett was introduced to us by Mr. Sugg as representing the Henderson Hominy Mills. He had come over to buy corn for them, and he made with the bank an arrangement to have it pay the checks of the Henderson Hominy Mills drawn by him for the corn as he bought it; and at convenient periods he was to give the bank his draft on the Henderson Hominy Mills, to take up the checks for the amount that had been paid by the bank at that time. The bank never requested him to draw any draft, but that was done at his own motion, and there was no understanding or agreement between him and the bank that they were not his individual drafts or that he was not to be responsible on them. Nothing was said about that." On cross-examination witness said the bank did not request Millett to draw these two drafts. They were drawn in pursuance of the arrangement previously made, and to cover the amounts that had been taken out for the Henderson Hominy Mills for the payment for corn. Witness said he had written a letter to Shelby which had been previously read. Witness made no inquiries about Millett except to find out whether he was the authorized representative of the hominy mills; made no inquiries as to his solvency. He received the letter written by Mr. Shelby, a copy of which had been read to the jury. On re-examination, witness said the arrangement before stated was made with Millett before the receipt of the letter from the Henderson Hominy Mills, and that the bills in suit were accepted as the bills of Millett.

The court then instructed the jury as follows: "(1) The court instructs the jury to find for the plaintiff the two bills filed, and read them, with interest from the date at which they were presented to the hominy mills for payment. (2) But if the jury find from the evidence that Millett was the agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills, and the plaintiff knew that fact, and gave credit solely to said hominy mills, and these bills were drawn by Millett merely as evidence of the amount due said bank by said hominy mills, not intending to bind himself, and the plaintiff knew such to have been his purpose or intention when they accepted said bills, they will find for the defendant." To the giving of which instructions appellant objected and excepted. The plaintiff offered instructions A, B. and C, which were refused by the court, with exceptions. The instructions are as follows: "(A) If the jury believe from the evidence that the bills of exchange in the petition mentioned were drawn by the defendant J. B. Millett in pursuance of an agreement by him with the plaintiff that his drafts on the Henderson Hominy Mills were to be given for the money plaintiff might advance on their checks made by said Millett, then they will find for the plaintiff. (B) If the bills sued on were made by Millett in payment of moneys advanced by plaintiff on the checks of the Henderson Hominy Mills made by him, and signed them in his own name, without notification to plaintiff that they were not to be binding on him, then they must find for plaintiff as to said bills. (C) If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant Millett made an arrangement with the plaintiff by which they were to handle his drafts on the Henderson Hominy Mills for money that he might need in buying corn for said mills, and the bill sued on were drawn in pursuance of such arrangement, then Millett is bound by said bills, and the jury will find for plaintiff thereon." Appellee asked instructions X and Y, which were refused by the court, with exceptions. Said instructions are as follows: "(X) On motion of defendant Millett the court instructs the jury that, upon the pleadings, the defendant is entitled to a verdict, and they are directed to find for the defendant. (Y) If the jury believe from the evidence that Millett is the agent of the Henderson Hominy Mills, engaged in the purchase of corn for said mills, made an arrangement with the plaintiff bank to pay for the corn purchased by drawing the checks of said hominy mills on said bank, and at intervals to draw bills upon the mills in favor of the bank for the amount of said checks, and the bills in suit were so drawn and accepted by the bank, with the knowledge that the defendant Millett was drawing said bills simply to settle the amount advanced by the bank on the purchase of corn, they will find for the defendant Millett."

The first contention of appellee is that the petition is insufficient, for the reason it does not aver protest of the bills, or that protest was waived, and therefore the judgment should be affirmed, without regard to any other question involved. But it will be seen that each bill has indorsed on the face thereof "No protest," which, being a part of the bill in suit, the petition and bill together show a right to recover, and it was not necessary to specifically aver a waiver of protest. If there had been any interlineation or change in the bill after it was signed, the defendant should have taken advantage of that by answer. We think the evidence establishes due presentation of the bills for payment; hence the only questions for decision are whether the bills were executed without any consideration and whether the appellee was entitled to plead and prove that the agreement between him and appellant was, in substance, that he was not to be bound upon the bills, but that they were accepted and treated alone as the obligation of the hominy mills. So far as the plea of no consideration is involved, it is sufficient to say that the existence of the debt against the hominy mills was a sufficient consideration to bind the appellee, and render him liable for the debt, if he in fact agreed to pay the same or to be bound therefor. The bills in suit clearly import an obligation upon the part of the appellee to pay the same; and unless he escape liability on account of some arrangement between him and appellant, judgment should have been rendered against him for the amount of the bills.

It is insisted for appellee that he was entitled to allege and prove the alleged agreement between him and appellant to the effect that he was not to be bound upon the bills; while it is earnestly contended for appellant that appellee could not be heard to plead and prove any such agreement, the same being in contradiction of the written agreement, and contrary to the law in such cases. We deem it unnecessary to discuss or review all the authorities cited by counsel, but will first notice some of those relied on by appellee. The appellee cites Story, Bills, § 187, which seems only to go to the extent of holding that the plea of no consideration is good as between the drawer and the payee. Appellee also cites 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 3d ed. § 311. We quote as follows: "It will be seen from preceding sections that if an agent should in his own name draw a bill of exchange on his principal for a debt of the latter, he will be personally responsible to the drawer in the case of the default of the principal, although upon its face the bill was drawn on account of his principal. And it is stated in the American Leading Cases to be the general rule that whenever an agent puts his name to a negotiable instrument, as a party to it, he is legally liable to the promisee and to indorsees upon it." Section 311 says: "The English cases clearly bear out these views. But the weight of authority in the United States is otherwise, though the cases are not uniform. If the drawer signs himself 'A. B., Agent,' and the payee takes the bill so drawn on his principal debtor, to whom he has given credit, and to whom he looks for payment, it has been said that there is really no valuable consideration for his liability. But the debt of another is a valuable consideration, and, if the agent intended to be bound upon the draft, no other consideration will be necessary. Bills are constantly drawn for accommodation, and the transaction might be construed as intended to be of this character. We think, however, that a bill drawn by 'A. B., Agent,' might well be distinguished from a note so signed, for the language is not inconsistent with the idea that the drawer signs as agent of the drawee whose name is disclosed upon the face of the instrument; while in a note none but the maker's name is disclosed. Therefore parol evidence might well be admitted to show the real circumstances of the case from which might be inferred the understanding of the parties. When there is no intimation of agency accompanying the drawer's name, the case presented is more difficult. This view, however, may be presented when the buyer has parted with his goods upon faith of the principal's credit; but, dealing with his agent, he then has funds in the principal's hands, and it is his draft that the principal would honor, provided he knew the fact that he was indebted to the drawer." Without quoting the entire section, it is sufficient to say that the doctrine contended for by appellee is not well sustained by the authorities supra. It will also be seen that the draft in question was simply signed "J. B. Millett," with direction to charge to his account.

In 3 Kent, Com. 4th ed. pp. 80, 81, it is said that, as between the original parties to negotiable paper, the consideration may be inquired into. In Parsons on Notes & Bills, 2d ed. p. 93, cited by appellee, it is said, commencing on page 92: "If an agent signs a note with his own name alone, and there is nothing on the face of the note to show that he was acting as agent, he will be personally liable on the note, and the principal will not be liable. And although it can be proved that the agency was disclosed to the payee when the note was made, and it was the understanding of all parties that the principal, and not the agent, should be held liable, this will not generally be sufficient to authorize the discharge of the agent, or to render the principal liable on the note. But the principal will be liable under such circumstances on the original consideration for which the note was given. And there may be cases in which the agent would not be personally liable on the bill or note, though there should be nothing on the face of the instrument to indicate the agency. Thus, if an agent, in the execution of his agency, incurs a debt on behalf of his principal, and draws on his principal a bill for the amount thereof in favor of the creditor, it has been held that the agent will not be held liable on the bill, if it was the understanding of the parties that he acted as agent merely, and did not intend to make the debt his own. The principal object in drawing the bill in such cases is to certify to the principal the amount due the creditor, and the agent may, it seems, defend on the ground of want of consideration. Of course, this will not apply to a subsequent bona fide holder without notice. And if an agent draws a bill on a third person in his own name, but there is sufficient evidence on the face of the instrument to inform the drawee that he is to pay the amount on account of the principal, and not on account of the drawer, the drawee, having paid the bill, will not be entitled to maintain an action for money paid against the agent. Thus, where an agent of the owners of a steamboat drew a bill in his real name, and directed the drawee to charge the amount to account of steamer Walter Scott, it was held that the agency of the drawer was apparent on the face of the bill, in consequence of this direction, which negated the idea that he was to be personally bound." The most that can be sustained from the foregoing is that in some instances the agent has been allowed to escape liability by proving a parol agreement between him and the payee that the agent was not to be personally liable on the bill.

We will now proceed to notice some of the authorities relied on by appellant. In Story 44 L. R. A.

on Agency, 9th ed. § 155, it is said: "If, from the nature and terms of the instrument, it clearly appears, not only that the party is an agent, but that he means to bind his principal, and to act for him, and not to draw, accept, or indorse the bill on his own account, that construction will be adopted, however inartificial may be the language in furtherance of the actual intention of the instrument. But, if the terms of the instrument are not thus explicit, although it may appear that the party is an agent, he will be deemed to have contracted in his personal capacity; and there is no difference on this point whether the instrument be a deed or an unsealed contract. Thus, if an agent should execute a deed in his own name, and should thereby, 'for and on behalf' of his principal, covenant, etc., he would be personally bound thereby, and not his principal. So, if an unsealed instrument should purport to be a memorandum of agreement between A B, on behalf of C D, of the one part, and E F, of the other part, to execute a lease of certain premises of the principal, it would be held to be the contract of the agent, and binding on him personally. A fortiori, an agent will be held to be personally bound if the name or character of the principal should not appear on the instrument, or if it should appear that no other person than himself could be legally bound by it, although he should sign his name thereto as agent, or as acting in an official capacity." In § 156, after some preliminary remarks, the author gives the further illustrations: "Thus, if a broker should sell goods, and draw upon the buyer for the amount in his own name, in favor of his principal, if the bill should be dishonored he would be personally liable, unless some special words were used in the bill to prevent it. And this liability would not only extend to third persons, but even to his principal, although he was known to be a mere agent; for in such a case the bill imports upon its face a personal liability as drawer in favor of all persons who are or become parties to the bill, and there is nothing in the character of an agent which excludes such personal liability, if he chooses voluntarily to incur it in favor of his principal, as well as in favor of third persons. So, if a known agent should draw a bill on a third person in favor of the payee, and direct the drawee to place the amount to the debit of his principal, he would be personally liable on the bill to the payee, unless he use other words to exclude it." It is said in § 157: "Precisely the same personal liability will attach to an agent, who in his own name signs a note as maker, or a bill as drawer, or accepts a bill, or indorses a bill or note generally; for in such a case, although he is a known agent, the making or accepting or indorsing of the instrument is treated as an admission that it is his personal act, not only in respect to third persons, but also in respect to his principal."

In Pentz v. Stanton, 10 Wend. 275, 25 Am. Dec. 558, the court, in discussing the liabilities of parties to bills, and testimony admissible to show the real contract, quotes with approval from other decisions cited: "The parol testimony explaining and showing the real nature of the transaction was decided to be inadmissible, on the ground that it contradicted or varied the written contract. Judge Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, says that 'no person in making a contract is considered to be the agent of another, unless he stipulates for his principal by name, stating his agency in the instrument which he signs.' This principle has been long settled, and has been frequently recognized. 'Nor do I know,' he continues, 'an instance in the books, of an attempt to charge a person as the maker of a written contract appearing to be signed by another, unless the signer professes to act as by procuration or authority, and stated the name of the principal on whose behalf he gave his signature.' He also discusses at length . . . the admissibility of parol evidence in such cases to show the real character of the transaction, and holds it to be utterly incompetent on the ground which has already been stated. [Quoting Mayhew v. Prince, 11 Mass. 54; Meyer v. Barker, 6 Binn. 228.] It is well settled that if a private agent draw a bill or enter into any other contract in his own name, without stating that he acts as agent, so as to bind his principal, he will be personally liable. [Quoting Chitty, Bills, 36, and cases cited; 5 Taunt. 749; 2 Marsh. 454; 5 East, 148; 1 Bos. & P. 368; 1 T. R. 181.] It is not sufficient to charge the principal or protect the agent from personal responsibility merely to subscribe himself as agent, if the language of the instruments imports a personal contract on his part. [Quoting Thacher v. Dinmore, 5 Mass. 299, 4 Am. Dec. 61; Forster v. Fuller, 6 Mass. 58, 4 Am. Dec. 87; Buffum v. Chadwick, 8 Mass. 103; Van Reimsdyk v. Kane, 1 Gall. 630; Chit. 52; Clark v. Van Reimsdyk, 9 Cranch, 155, 3 L. ed. —.] But where the name of the principal appears on the face of the instrument or contract, and it is evident that the agent did not intend to bind himself personally, but acted merely on behalf of the principal, if he acted by competent authority, the principal, and not the agent, will be bound." In [Thomas v. Bishop] 2 Strange, p. 955, it is said: "A bill of exchange is a contract by the custom of merchants, and the whole of that contract must appear in writing."

In [Thomson v. Davenport] 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. Hare & W. Notes, *368, 369, 7th Am. ed. it is said: "It has been said that if a contract in writing, without naming his principal, so that he appears upon the writing to be himself the principal, does not a creditor who seeks to show that, while thus professedly contracting for himself, he really contracted for a principal, endeavor to infringe this rule of evidence by adding to the written contract a new term at variance with the written terms? This question, it is, however, apprehended, must receive different answers upon different occasions, answers varying according to the object with which it is sought to introduce the parol testimony, which, it is submitted, can never be heard for the purpose of discharging the agent, but may always be so for that of charging the principal. That parol evidence can never be admitted for the purpose of exonerating an agent who has entered into a written contract in which he appears as principal, even though he should propose to show, if allowed, that he mentioned his principal, at the time of entering into it, seems to be now well established." Numerous decisions are quoted by the author. It is further said in Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 Maule & S. 345, by Lord Ellenborough: "Is it not an universal rule that a man who puts his name to a bill of exchange makes himself personally liable, unless he states on the face of the bill that he subscribes it for another, or by procuration of another? . . . Unless he says plainly, 'I am the mere scribe,' he becomes liable." In the case of Nash v. Towne, 5 Wall. 703, 18 L. ed. 530, which was an action upon a bill of exchange, the court said: "Parol evidence can never be admitted for the purpose of exonerating an agent who has entered into a written contract in which he appears as principal, even though he should propose to show, if allowed, that he disclosed his agency, and mentioned the name of his principal, at the time the contract was executed. Where a simple contract, other than a bill or note, is made by an agent, the principal whom he represents may in general maintain an action upon it in his own name, and parol evidence is admissible, although the contract is in writing, to show that the person named in the contract was an agent, and that he was acting for his principal. Such evidence, says Baron Park, does not deny that the contract binds those whom on its face it purports to bind, but shows that it also binds another; and that principle has been fully adopted by this court. Cases may be found, also, where it is held that the plaintiff may prove by parol that the other contracting party named in the contract was but the agent of an undisclosed principal, and in that state of the case he might have his remedy against either, at his election. Evidence to that effect will be admitted to charge the principal, or to enable him to sue in his own name; but the agent who binds himself is never allowed to contradict the writing by proving that he contracted only as agent, and not as principal."

In 1 Randolph on Commercial Paper, § 382, it is said: "The liability of the agent to the principal is next to be considered. Where the agent draws a bill of exchange on his principal by his authority, the principal is not, in general, liable as drawer. Nor is it necessary in such case that the agency of the drawer should be expressed on the face of the bill, if it is drawn in fact for a debt of the principal. Where the drawer of a bill is the agent of the drawee, it is held in England that he is liable both to the payee and to subsequent parties, although known by them to be acting as agent merely. In the United States a different rule seems to have been laid down, and it has been held that the agent who draws a bill on his principal for goods sold him, disclosing the principal, is not liable to a payee who has knowledge of the agency. But, if the agent draws the bill on his principal in his individual name, he will be liable as drawer to the payee and subsequent parties, even though the bill is drawn expressly chargeable to the principal's account, and though the payee knows of the agency." In 1 Parsons on Bills & Notes, p. 102, it is said: "It is the general rule in regard to simple contracts that parol evidence may be received to make unnamed principals liable, or to give them the benefit of the contract, for this leaves the actual party liable as before, and therefore cannot be considered as varying the contract. But such evidence cannot be received to discharge the actual signer on the ground of his agency, for this would be to vary the contract. In reference to negotiable paper, however, the rule, as we have seen, is more strict. For parol evidence is not admissible either to discharge an actual signer, or to charge one whose name does not appear on the instrument. The reason for this is that, from the nature and purpose of negotiable paper, no person should be held as a party to it whose name is not written upon it, as such paper ought to contain in itself all its own evidence, and thus be independent of extrinsic proof. One who puts his name on negotiable paper will be liable, personally, as we have seen, although he acts as agent, unless he says so, and says also who his principal is,—that is, unless he uses some expression equivalent, to use Lord Ellenborough's language, to 'I am the mere scribe.' For if the construction may fairly be that while he acts officially, or at the request of others, or for the benefit of others, yet, what he does is still his own act, it will be so interpreted." In 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 305, it is said: "The party so signing must have intended to bind somebody upon the instrument; and, no promisor but himself thereon appearing, it must be construed as his note, or as a nullity. And, though he term himself 'agent,' such suffix to his name will be regarded as a mere descriptio personæ, or as an earmark of the transaction, and may be rejected as surplusage. And this principle applies although it could be proved that the payee knew of the agency when the note was made, and it was understood that the principal, and not the agent, should be bound, for such evidence would vary the terms of the written note. But, under such circumstances, if the note were not paid, the principal might be sued upon the original consideration. However, if the payee, with full knowledge of the agency and of the principal's liability, and relying solely on the agent's credit, took his individual note, the principal cannot be resorted to at all." In a late case in New York the note was signed simply "J. S. M., Agent." It was alleged to have been given for goods sold by the defendant, a lady, probably the agent's wife, and recovery against the alleged principal was sustained. This decision is in conflict with the general current of authority. The true principle has been thus stated by the United States Supreme Court: "Parol evidence can never be admitted to exonerate an agent who has entered into a written contract in which he appears as principal, even though he should propose to show, if allowed, that he disclosed his agency, and mentioned the name of his principal at the time the contract was executed."

We have been referred to no decisions of this court applicable to the case at bar. It seems manifest that the decided weight of authority is—if, indeed, there be any authority to the contrary—that the first paragraph of the answer constituted no defense, except so far as the plea of no consideration was relied on; and, that being true, the testimony as to the agreement or understanding between appellant and appellee that appellee should not be bound on the bills was incompetent, and could not authorize a verdict in defendant's favor. We have already seen that there was no proof to sustain the plea of no consideration. It further appears in this case that the appellant lived in the state of Tennessee, distant from the home of the hominy mills, as well as from appellee's residence; and it seems clear that the agreement at the commencement of the business transaction was that appellee should give the checks of the hominy mills on appellant to the persons from whom he purchased corn, and that from time to time he would give his draft to appellant upon the hominy mills for the sums so paid out by the bank on the checks as aforesaid; and it seems certain that appellant, for some time, relied entirely upon that agreement or contract, and cashed the checks of the hominy mills, signed by appellee as agent, without knowing in fact, except from appellee, that he was the authorized agent of the hominy mills. It may seem hard for appellee to pay the debts sued for, but would it not be still harder upon appellant to lose the money which it had advanced relying upon the promise of appellee to do that which in fact he did do,—that is, give his own bill in consideration of the money furnished by the bank at his instance and request, although he was merely the agent of the hominy mills?

From the foregoing, it will be seen that the court erred in giving the second instruction complained of. Instruction A, asked for by plaintiff, should have been given. Instruction B was more favorable to appellee than he was entitled to. Instruction C should have been given. Instructions X and Y, asked for by appellee, were properly refused.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial, and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Jonathan P. PALMER
v.
MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

(92 Me. 399.)

1. A private individual who has procured the arrest of an innocent person by an officer without a warrant cannot justify by showing that he acted in good faith, without malice, and upon a belief of guilt founded upon reasonable grounds.
2. The unreasonable refusal of a passenger to state his name when asked by a conductor to whom he tenders a mileage ticket if the name thereon was his own does not justify the conductor in procuring his arrest without a warrant, on the charge of fraudulently evading payment of fare.
3. The settlement of an unwarranted prosecution of a passenger for alleged fraudulent evasion of the payment of fare, made by payment of the fare due and all costs of prosecution, and by an acknowledgment by the conductor of complete satisfaction "for evading his railroad fare," is not a bar or waiver of a cause of action by the passenger for false imprisonment.
4. Ten dollars is a sufficient compensation for a passenger's injured pride, wounded sensibility, and mortification caused by public arrest, where it was procured by a conductor in the belief that the passenger was fraudulently evading payment of fare, when he in fact tendered a valid mileage ticket, but unreasonably refused to state whether the name on the ticket was his own.

(January 12, 1899.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County made during the trial of an action for false imprisonment which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Overruled. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Drummond & Drummond, for defendant:

The right to issue a ticket which is not transferable necessarily carries with it the right to require the identification, in a reasonable manner, of the party producing it with the party to whom it was issued. When a particular method of identification is made a condition precedent to the validity of the ticket, the courts have invariably held that that method must be observed by the holder of the ticket, and in case it is not that the conductor can rightfully refuse to accept the ticket.

Wood, Railroads, § 347, p. 1395; Cody v. Central P. R. Co. 4 Sawy. 114; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bannerman, 15 Ill. App. 100; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 149, 33 L. ed. 292; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. &

S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Cloud v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 14 Mo. App. 136; Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 364; Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Tex. 61; Bowers v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 158 Pa. 302; Bethea v. Northeastern R. Co. 26 S. C. 91; Rawitzky v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 40 La. Ann. 47; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Va. 1.

When the holder has neglected to identify himself he has not complied with the terms of his contract, and the conductor is not obliged to accept the ticket, and upon refusal to pay fare can rightfully eject him from the train.

Cloud v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 14 Mo. App. 136; Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 364; Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Tex. 61; Bethea v. Northeastern R. Co. 26 S. C. 91; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 149, 33 L. ed. 292.

Whether the particular manner of identification adopted by the conductor was reasonable or not is entirely immaterial, because the plaintiff absolutely refused to identify himself at all.

Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Tex. 61.

The provisions that the ticket is "good only for the person in whose name it is issued," and that "conductors are authorized to obtain the signature of holder of the ticket for identification," necessarily imply that the plaintiff, when he offers his ticket, should show, if requested, that he is the "person in whose name the ticket was issued," and if he refuses to do so he is not entitled to ride upon it.

Ripley v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 31 N. J. L. 388; Bethea v. Northeastern R. Co. 26 S. C. 91; Norfolk v. W. R. Co. v. Wysor, 82 Va. 250; Downs v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77; Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Tex. 61; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bannerman, 15 Ill. App. 100; Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 364; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290; Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 63 Me. 208, 18 Am. Rep. 220; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 12 Am. Dec. 138.

The reasonableness of a particular practice adopted by railroad companies in fulfilling their obligations to passengers is a question of law.

South Florida R. Co. v. Rhodes, 25 Fla. 40, 3 L. R. A. 733; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 128; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wysor, 82 Va. 250; Chilton v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 114 Mo. 88, 19 L. R. A. 269; Avery v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 121 N.

NOTE.—For liability of carrier on account of false arrest of passenger, see note to Mulligan v. New York & R. B. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 791; also Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 14 L. R. A. 798; Palmer v. Manhattan 44 L. R. A.

R. Co. (N. Y.) 16 L. R. A. 136; Central R. Co. v. Brewer (Md.) 27 L. R. A. 63; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Kan.) 29 L. R. A. 466; and Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Walker (Ark.) 40 L. R. A. 473.

Y. 31; Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 406; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittmore, 43 Ill. 420, 12 Am. Dec. 138; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 35 Am. Rep. 278; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lyon, 123 Pa. 140, 2 L. R. A. 489; State v. Gould, 53 Me. 279; Keeley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 67 Me. 163, 24 Am. Rep. 19; Eaton v. McIntire, 88 Me. 578.

Having, by his action in settling the controversy in the way that he did, led the conductor and the judge to believe that he acknowledged his guilt, it is too late now to deny it.

His action was tantamount to a plea of guilty, and he is now estopped to deny it.

Caffrey v. Dragan, 144 Mass. 294; Joyce v. Parkhurst, 150 Mass. 243.

Messrs. Hanly & Libby, Levi Turner, and T. J. Boynton, for plaintiff:

The charge covers the whole question submitted to the jury, and is in entire harmony with the doctrine laid down by this court in the case of Gee v. Patterson, 63 Me. 49.

The verdict of a jury is not lightly to be set aside.

Cunningham v. Magoun, 18 Pick. 13; Lavigne v. Lewiston Mills Co. (Me.) 10 Atl. 62; Nash v. Somes (Me.) 10 Atl. 447.

There was no attempt to commit a crime. The plaintiff had no intention of evading his fare, but if he had in fact evaded his fare, the offense was complete and ended before the arrest of the plaintiff by officer Norman.

Bigelow, Torts, p. 136; Bouditch v. Balchin, 5 Exch. 378; Baynes v. Brewster, 2 Q. B. 375; 2 Addison, Torts, § 802.

To justify an arrest without warrant for a misdemeanor, even by a constable, the offender must still be found in the very act of committing the offense.

McLennon v. Richardson, 15 Gray, 74, 77 Am. Dec. 353; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141.

Personal judgments conclude only the parties to them and their privies. The bar must be mutual to the parties in the later action.

Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 98; Petrie v. Nuttall, 11 Exch. 569; Corbley v. Wilson, 71 Ill. 209, 22 Am. Rep. 98; Buttrick v. Holden, 8 Cush. 233; Kingston's Case, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 679.

The payment of money by the plaintiff to the court at Brunswick was made under duress of imprisonment by an abuse of legal process. The criminal process against the plaintiff was instituted for the purpose of extorting money from him in settlement of a civil claim. Such an arrest is false imprisonment by all who directly or indirectly procured the same or participated therein for any such purpose.

Hackett v. King, 6 Allen, 58; Taylor v. Jaques, 106 Mass. 291.

Savage, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Trespass for false imprisonment. The verdict was for the plaintiff for $550. The case comes up on exceptions by the defendant, and on motion to set aside the verdict, on the grounds that it was against law, and 44 L. R. A.

against the weight of evidence, and that the damages are excessive. Substantially the same legal propositions are presented under the motion as under the exceptions. It will be more convenient to consider the motion first, for the conclusion which we think must be reached under the motion will necessarily dispose of the exceptions.

There is little dispute as to the essential facts. The questions at issue are chiefly legal ones. In January, 1896, the plaintiff purchased from the defendant, and there was issued to him, a mileage book or ticket with coupons, one to be detached for each mile the purchaser should travel. By the purchase of this book, the plaintiff became entitled to travel 1,000 miles on the defendant's railroad. Upon the ticket was a contract, which was signed by the plaintiff at the time of purchase. This contract discloses that one of the conditions under which the ticket was sold was the following:

"That it is good only for the person in whose name it is issued, and, if presented by any other person, the right to any remaining rides to which the purchaser might have been entitled shall be forfeited; and the conductor shall be authorized to take up this ticket, and return the same to the general ticket office as forfeited, and conductors are authorized to obtain the signature of the holder of the ticket for identification."

In June, 1896, the plaintiff was a passenger on the defendant's train from Rockland to Brunswick, and, in payment of his fare, tendered to the conductor the mileage ticket above referred to. The conductor was not personally acquainted with the plaintiff, and, for identification, he asked the plaintiff if the name upon the ticket, "Jona. P. Palmer," was his name. The plaintiff refused to say whether it was or not, though he told the conductor that the ticket was his own. The conductor then declined to accept the ticket, and asked the plaintiff to pay a cash fare, which the plaintiff refused to do. As the plaintiff was leaving the train at Brunswick, without further payment or tender of his fare, the conductor caused him to be arrested by a constable, without a warrant, for fraudulently evading the payment of his fare; and this is the arrest complained of. The plaintiff was immediately taken before the municipal court of Brunswick, where the conductor made a complaint, under oath, against him, under Rev. Stat. chap. 51, § 78, which provides that whoever "fraudulently evades payment" of fare over a railroad "by giving a false answer, or by traveling beyond the place to which he has paid, or by leaving a train without paying, forfeits not less than $5, nor more than $20, to be recovered on complaint." The plaintiff pleaded "Not guilty." The plaintiff then paid his fare and the costs of prosecution to the judge of the court. An acknowledgment of "complete satisfaction" was filed by the conductor, and the plaintiff was thereupon discharged without further prosecution. No question is raised but that the conductor was acting within the scope of his authority as a servant of the defendant corporation.

The defendant endeavors to justify the arrest. It claims that the conductor had a lawful right to ask the plaintiff, as a means of identification, if the name on the ticket was his name, and that it was the plaintiff's duty to answer truly; and, further, that if the conductor had reasonable cause, from the plaintiff's conduct, to believe that he was fraudulently evading the payment of his fare, and did so believe, the conductor was justified in causing the plaintiff's arrest by an officer, as he was in the act of leaving the train, although the officer had no warrant.

The discussion will be simplified somewhat if we state at the outset two propositions, about which, we think, there can be no real controversy: First, the offense for which the plaintiff was arrested was simply a misdemeanor; secondly, the plaintiff was not guilty in fact. It cannot be said, in any view of the case, that the plaintiff fraudulently evaded the payment of his fare. He owned the mileage ticket. He had a right to travel upon it. He tendered it to the conductor. There was no fraudulent evasion of payment. There was on his part only a wilful, unreasonable obstinacy, which arose, perhaps, from a mistaken sense of pride.

The precise question to be decided, therefore, is whether a private individual who has procured the arrest of an innocent person for a misdemeanor, by an officer without a warrant, can justify by showing that he acted in good faith, without malice, and upon a belief of guilt founded upon reasonable grounds. We think the question must be answered in the negative.

This is a suit, not for malicious prosecution, but for a false imprisonment. It is not for a misuse or an abuse of legal process, but for an arrest without legal process. The action must be sustained, unless the defendant can show a legal justification for causing the arrest to be made.

The principles which, by the common law, regulate the right to arrest, or cause an arrest, without warrant, have been long settled both in this country and England; and by these principles the rights of these parties must be determined. Unless modified by statute, they are recognized by the courts, almost without exception. They are designed to promote the safety of the public and the due administration of public justice, on the one hand, and, on the other, to afford the citizen security against unwarrantable restraints upon his personal liberty. We shall state these principles somewhat more fully, perhaps, than the particular question under consideration requires; but a full statement is valuable by way of illustration, and for the purpose of showing the clear distinction between the powers of an officer and those of a private individual.

By the common law, an officer may arrest for felony, without warrant, upon reasonable grounds of suspicion. 2 Addison, Torts, § 802; Samuel v. Payne, 1 Dougl. 360; Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354; 1 Hale, P. C. 567; Burke v. Bell, 36 Me. 317; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. 281; Holley v. M'ia, 3 Wend. 350, 20 Am. Dec. 702; Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; Wills v. Jordan, 20 R. I. (Part 3) 236, 44 L. R. A.

41 Atl. 233; Doering v. State, 49 Ind. 56, 19 Am. Rep. 669; Eanes v. State, 6 Humph. 53, 44 Am. Dec. 289; Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 29 L. ed. 458; Holden v. Hall, 4 Hurlst. & N. 423 [Griiffin v. Coleman, 4 Hurlst. & N. 269]. And for making such an arrest, the officer is justified, although it turns out that no felony has, in fact, been committed. Beckwith v. Philby, 6 Barn. & C. 635; Simmons v. Vandyke, 138 Ind. 380, 26 L. R. A. 33, and the cases cited above. But an officer may not arrest on information or suspicion, without a warrant, for a misdemeanor, unless it was committed in his presence. 2 Addison, Torts, § 804; 4 Bl. Com. p. 292; 1 Hale, P. C. 567; People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480; Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 29 L. ed. 458; Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445; Com. v. Ruggles, 6 Allen, 588; Com. v. McLaughlin, 12 Cush. 615; State v. Lewis, 50 Ohio St. 179, 19 L. R. A. 449; Pow v. Beckner, 3 Ind. 475; Webb v. State, 51 N. J. L. 189; Krulevitz v. Eastern R. Co. 143 Mass. 228. In the last-named case, the plaintiff had been arrested, at the request of a conductor, by an officer, without a warrant, for a refusal to pay fare. We have cited these cases in extenso, because nearly all of these contain valuable discussions of this subject. In many of these cases it seems to have been held that the authority of an officer to arrest for misdemeanor, without warrant, is limited to breaches of the peace or affrays committed in his presence (see also Com. v. Wright, 158 Mass. 149, 19 L. R. A. 206), though the offense has actually been committed, but elsewhere (Scott v. Eldridge, 154 Mass. 25, 12 L. R. A. 379). But in still other cases the authority is extended to all crimes committed in the presence of the officer. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain, 81 Md. 87, 28 L. R. A. 688, and cases cited there. But the authority of a private individual is much more limited and confined. He may arrest for felony, but he does it at his peril. If called upon to justify, it has been held by some courts that he must show that the felony had actually been committed, and that he had reasonable grounds for believing the person arrested to be guilty. Wakely v. Hart, 6 Binn. 316; Davis v. Russell, 5 Bing. 354; Allen v. Wright, 8 Car. & P. 522; Reuck v. McGreggor, 32 N. J. L. 70; Holley v. M'ia, 3 Wend. 350, 20 Am. Dec. 702; Keenan v. State, 8 Wis. 132; Beckwith v. Philby, 6 Barn. & C. 635; Russell v. Shuster, 8 Watts & S. 308; Burns v. Erben, 40 N. Y. 463; 2 Addison, Torts, § 803; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 202. But it has been held by other courts, and perhaps with better reason, that he must show that the person arrested was actually guilty of the felony. Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. 281; Com. v. Carey, 12 Cush. 246; Morley v. Chase, 143 Mass. 396. So he may arrest for an affray or a breach of the peace committed in his presence, and while it is continuing. 1 Russell, Crimes, 272; 1 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. 82; Timothy v. Simpson, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 757; Knot v. Gay, 1 Root, 66; Mayo v. Wilson, 1 N. H. 53; Phillips v. Trull, 11 Johns. 486; Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 29 L. ed. 458; Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445.

But a private individual may not arrest for misdemeanor, on suspicion, no matter how well grounded. And as, in case of felony, he is bound to show that the felony has been committed, so, in case of affray or breach of the peace committed in his presence, he must show that the party arrested by him was guilty. Nor can a private individual justify, if he procure the arrest of an innocent person for a misdemeanor, by an officer, without warrant. In such case he is answerable. He can no more lawfully cause such an arrest than he can make it himself. Hobbs v. Branscomb, 3 Campb. 420; Hopkins v. Crowe, 7 Car. & P. 373; Derecourt v. Corbishley, 5 El. & Bl. 188; Price v. Seeley, 10 Clark & F. 28; Collett v. Foster, 2 Hurlst. & N. 356; Veneman v. Jones, 118 Ind. 41; Holley v. Mix, 3 Wend. 350, 20 Am. Dec. 702; Samuel v. Payne, 1 Dougl. 300. In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cain, 81 Md. 87, 28 L. R. A. 688, a case analogous in some respects to the one at bar, the plaintiff, by the procurement of the conductor, was arrested as he left the train, by an officer, without warrant. The charge was disorderly conduct on the train. The railroad company was permitted to justify by showing that the charge was true in fact, and that the disorderly conduct amounted to a breach of the peace, for which the conductor, as a private individual, would have been authorized to arrest had he been physically able to do so. The court said that "the act of the conductor in telegraphing for a policeman, and within a short space of time thereafter handing the plaintiff over to the officer, was in no respect different from a formal arrest of the plaintiff by the conductor in the midst of the riot and disorder." In the case at bar, however, the charge was not true, and herein lies one distinction at least, and a vital one. Furthermore, the alleged offense here was not a breach of the peace.

Revised Stat. chap. 133, § 4, provides that every officer shall arrest and detain persons found violating any law of the state until a legal warrant can be obtained. But this statute does not aid the defendant. The plaintiff was not found violating any law of the state. The constable had no lawful authority to arrest him for a misdemeanor of which he was not guilty, on information merely, without a warrant.

We conclude, therefore, that the arrest of the plaintiff was unlawful. And, as already intimated, this conclusion disposes of the first two of the defendant's exceptions; for, assuming that the conductor had a right, as a matter of law, to make the inquiry he did, as a means of identification, and assuming that, by the plaintiff's conduct, the conductor had reason to believe, and did believe, that the plaintiff was fraudulently evading the payment of his fare, still, as we have seen, all this would have afforded no justification in law.

But the defendant further contends that the proceedings had before the municipal court of Brunswick should operate as a bar to this action. The plaintiff paid his fare which he owed, and the costs of prosecution. 44 L. R. A.

The conductor acknowledged "complete satisfaction to Jonathan P. Palmer for evading his railroad fare as per my complaint," and thereupon the plaintiff was discharged. The defendant claims that this settlement should be regarded as an admission by the plaintiff of his guilt. If it were so, we do not see how this could aid the defendant, in view of the uncontroverted facts in this case, or under the law. But it seems to us rather that the settlement was equivalent to an entry of "nolle prosequi upon payment of costs." If this settlement could be regarded as authorized by Rev. Stat. chap. 133, § 18, which may well be doubted, it would operate only as a bar to a civil remedy by the railroad company for the injury for which the plaintiff was prosecuted criminally. Id. § 19. The plaintiff "settled" with the state, but the defendant did not settle with the plaintiff. The defendant relies upon Caffrey v. Dragan, 144 Mass. 204, and Joyce v. Parkhurst, 150 Mass. 243. In those cases it was held that parties who had been arrested without warrant, for intoxication, and had been released without formal complaints having been made against them, had, by their requests and agreements, waived the right to maintain actions for false imprisonment against the officers. But in this case there is no evidence of any agreement on the part of the plaintiff to waive or release his claim against the defendant.

There was no judgment in the criminal case against this plaintiff. If there had been, it would not have estopped him from maintaining this civil action. Bigelow, Estoppel, 100. It is the opinion of the court, therefore, that the plaintiff's remedy is not barred and has not been waived. This conclusion disposes of the defendant's third and last exception.

The verdict for the plaintiff was not against law, nor against the weight of evidence. Are the damages excessive? The principles upon which damages are to be assessed in this class of cases were elaborately discussed by this court in Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475. We need state here only the conclusions. Where the justification for an arrest fails, as in this case, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, at least, compensatory damages,—damages for the necessary consequences of the act complained of, although the defendant may have acted in good faith, without malice, and upon reasonable grounds to believe that the plaintiff was guilty of the offense for which he was arrested. If the plaintiff claims punitive damages, or damages for his injured feelings, the spirit and conduct of the defendant may be inquired into, to enhance or aggravate, and as well, the plaintiff's own conduct, and the provocation by him, if any, to mitigate, the damages. Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475; Phillips v. Trull, 11 Johns. 486; Reuck v. McGregor, 32 N. J. L. 70; Beckwith v. Bean, 98 U. S. 266, 25 L. ed. 124; Chinn v. Morris, 2 Car. & P. 361; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 207.

Tested by these principles, we think the verdict in this case is unmistakably too large. In his charge, the presiding justice permitted the jury to assess "a fair and just compensation for the injured pride, the wounded sensibility, the humiliation and mortification of a public arrest." These are, indeed, proper elements of damage; but, in view of all the circumstances of this case, the jury made an undue allowance for them. The damages to the plaintiff in his person, and for loss of time and expenses, were little more than nominal. Nearly the whole of the verdict must have been given as punitive damages, or as damages for the injury to the plaintiff's feelings. But, whichever it was, it is too large. The fault in the first instance was the fault of the plaintiff. He was traveling on a mileage ticket, which could be lawfully used by no other person than the one to whom it was issued. It was the right, as it was the duty, of the conductor, if in doubt, to make himself reasonably certain of the identity of the person presenting it. As one means of identification, the contract upon the ticket itself provided that the conductor might require the signature of the holder of the ticket. But this provision did not exclude other simpler and easier, and equally reasonable, methods of identification. The method adopted by the conductor was a reasonable and lawful one. He simply asked the plaintiff if the name on the ticket was his name. This was asked on three several occasions; and three times the plaintiff refused to give the information desired. He says he told the conductor he was under no obligation to give his name. The uncontradicted testimony of bystanders is to the effect that he also told the conductor that it was "none of his business." A frank and truthful answer, such as it was his duty to make, would have prevented all trouble. No question is made but that the conduct of the conductor was gentlemanly. The plaintiff was wilful, obstinate, evasive. He chose to regard the inquiry of the conductor as an affront to his honesty or dignity. His wrong was, however, only fancied. We think the plaintiff's conduct gave the conductor reason to believe—and he says he did believe—that the plaintiff was attempting to ride upon a ticket not his own, and which he had no right to use. This, of course, is not a justification; but it deserves full consideration, in determining whether punitive damages are allowable, or in estimating the injury to the plaintiff's wounded sensibilities.

Under all the circumstances, we think $10 will be ample compensation.

The entry will be: Exceptions overruled.

If the plaintiff files a remittitur of all the verdict in excess of $10 within thirty days after the rescript is received, motion for new trial overruled; otherwise, motion sustained.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Michigan, ex rel.
Fred A. MAYNARD, Attorney General,
Appt.,

v.
Village of HOLLY.

(.....Mich.....)

The offer of a reward for testimony that shall secure the conviction of persons who set fire to buildings within city limits is within the general power to make regulations for the safety and general welfare of the inhabitants.

(April 4, 1899.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Oakland County granting a temporary restraining order only instead of a permanent injunction in a suit to enjoin defendant from paying certain rewards which had been offered for the discovery of persons who had set fire to certain buildings within the village. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Davis & Bromley and Sam J. Patterson, for complainant:

A municipality has not under its general welfare clause the power to offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of criminals.

NOTE.—As to offers of reward, see also Haskell v. Davidson (Me.) 42 L. R. A. 155, and footnote thereto; also Smith v. Gentry (Ky.) 42 L. R. A. 302; and Morris v. Kassling (Tex.) 11 L. R. A. 398, and note.
44 L. R. A.

Loveland v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 367; Abel v. Pembroke, 61 N. H. 359; Hanger v. Des Moines 52 Iowa, 193, 35 Am. Rep. 266; Winchester v. Redmond, 93 Va. 711; Croft v. Danbury, 65 Conn. 294; Butler v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 498; Murphy v. Jacksonville, 18 Fla. 318, 43 Am. Rep. 323; Baker v. Washington, 7 D. C. 134; Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me. 174; Patton v. Stephens, 14 Bush, 324.

Messrs. Spaulding, Norton, & Dooling, with Mr. Charles F. Collier, for defendant:

Municipal corporations have such powers as are expressly granted, and also such implied or incidental ones as are necessary to carry into effect the express powers and to effectuate the object of corporate existence.

The power to prevent danger from fire is the incidental one belonging to all municipal corporations.

2 Bacon, Abr. 147; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 141-143.

Even in the absence of express statutory authority this power is inherent in the municipality.

Crawshaw v. Roxbury, 7 Gray, 372; Mead v. Boston, 3 Cush. 404; Brown v. Bradlee, 156 Mass. 28, 15 L. R. A. 509; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 139, p. 208; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. ed. 1878, 606; York v. Forscht, 23 Pa. 391; Shaub v. Lancaster City, 156 Pa. 362, 21 L. R. A. 691; Montgomery County v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 174; Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 134, 73 Am. Dec. 634, citing with approval Freeman v. Boston, 5 Met. 56; Loring v. Boston, 7 Met. 411; Janvrin v. Exeter, 48 N. H. 83, 2 Am. Rep. 185; Pilie v. New Orleans, 19 La. Ann. 274.

The municipalities in England had the power to offer a reward for the apprehension and conviction of incendiaries. The borough government is akin to our village or city government.

E. A. Freeman, City and Borough, McMillan's Mag. May, 1889; York v. Forscht, 23 Pa. 391.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The village of Holly offered a reward for testimony that should secure the conviction of the persons who had set fire to certain buildings within its limits, and work was done upon the case by Sargeant and Green, and a deputy sheriff named Botsford. The reward seems to have been earned, and the council passed a resolution that unless, within ten days, the parties claiming the reward should agree to arbitrate the question of who was entitled to it, the village attorney should cause a bill of interpleader to be filed against them. Nothing was done, however, under this resolution, and some time afterwards the attorney general filed the bill in this cause to restrain the payment of the reward to the persons named, or any of them. Such persons were not made parties to the suit. A decree was made restraining payment until a judgment should be obtained against the village. The complainant has appealed, and claims that the decree should have allowed a perpetual and unqualified injunction against the payment of the money. As the village has not appealed, we must assume that it is satisfied with the decree, and the only question before us is whether the complainant was entitled to a broader decree.

Holly was incorporated under the general law for the incorporation of villages, which authorizes it to provide for the preservation of public property, and to adopt ordinances and make other regulations for the safety and general welfare of the inhabitants, not inconsistent with the general laws of the state. The authorities are not harmonious upon the subject of rewards. The Massachusetts courts seem to recognize the existence of an implied power to offer rewards for the apprehension of incendiaries who have destroyed property within the city, from what is called the "general welfare clause." Shute v. Taylor, 5 Met. 61; Loring v. Boston, 7 Met. 411; Mead v. Boston, 3 Cush. 406; Crawshaw v. Roxbury, 7 Gray, 374; Brown v. Bradlee, 156 Mass. 28, 15 L. R. A. 509. In New Hampshire the authority is expressly conferred. See Janvrin v. Exeter, 48 N. H. 83, 2 Am. Rep. 185. In Pennsylvania, municipalities have the authority to offer rewards in such emergencies. Shaub v. Lancaster City, 156 Pa. 366, 21 L. R. A. 691; York v. Forscht, 23 Pa. 391. 2 Bacon, Abr. 147, supports the doctrine that the power to prevent fires is incidental to all municipalities; while Mr. Dillon says: "The governing body of a municipal corporation (which has express power to protect the property and promote the welfare of its inhabitants) may, it has been held, offer a reward for the detection of offenders against the general safety of its people, as, for example, those guilty of the crime of arson within the corporate limits. The contrary doctrine has also been held." [1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 139, p. 208.] The California supreme court is said to uphold the power, but we are unable to verify it from the citation given. Some of the states deny it. The latest case seems that of Winchester v. Redmond, 93 Va. 711, where authorities supporting it are collected. Of these some apply to other offenses, the commission of which affects the inhabitants of the city only in common with those of the state outside of the city. Thus, in Baker v. Washington, 7 D. C. 134, it was held that the defendant had not authority to offer a reward for the capture of the slayer of President Lincoln. A similar case, involving a reward for murder, is that of Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me. 174. Patton v. Stephens, 14 Bush, 326, applied the same rule to a reward offered for the apprehension of one who, through forgery, had embezzled the city funds. The case of Hanger v. Des Moines, 52 Iowa, 193, 35 Am. Rep. 206, was another case of reward for the detection of a murderer. Butler v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 498, was not a case of arson, and seems to be within the principle of the preceding cases. The rewards in all of these cases are open to the criticism that they were not offered to preserve the welfare of the inhabitants of the municipality, as contradistinguished from those of the general public. The case of Murphy v. Jacksonville, 18 Fla. 318, 43 Am. Rep. 323, is not in point, because governed by a prohibitive statute, which, in the absence of a "general welfare clause" (which does not appear), is a sufficient reason for the decision. Croft v. Danbury, 65 Conn. 298, is in point, and supports Winchester v. Redmond.

The danger of conflagration in cities and villages necessitates preventive measures that are not common in sparsely-settled districts, and such municipalities are authorized to expend large sums for apparatus to extinguish them. But these only serve to prevent the spread of fires. A determined incendiary in a city is a menace which cannot be safely disregarded, and may call for more than the ordinary methods to guard against his acts. We think the "general welfare clause" is sufficiently broad to cover the employment of private detectives, through rewards, in such emergencies. We consider its exercise as "contravening no provision of the Constitution, . . . and made in the exercise of the police power necessary to the safety of the city," and, we may add, impliedly conferred upon it. See Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 580, 50 Am. Rep. 830.

The decree is affirmed, with costs.

The other Justices concur.

Hazen S. PINGREE, Governor,

v.

Roscoe D. DIX, Auditor General.

TECUMSEH TELEPHONE COMPANY

v.

Roscoe D. DIX, Auditor General.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Specific taxes within the meaning of the Michigan Constitution, which appropriates them to educational funds and excepts property paying such taxes from the rule of uniformity, do not include an ad valorem tax on property such as a tax on telegraph and telephone lines levied by a state board in lieu of all other taxes.
2. A tax on telegraph and telephone lines under Pub. Acts 1881, No. 166, which is levied by the state board at the average rate of taxes (general, municipal, and local) levied throughout the state during the previous year, in lieu of all other taxes, violates the rule of uniformity imposed by Const. art. 14, § 11, as the rate of taxation is determined in a different way, and is different in amount, from that imposed upon other property.
3. The rule of construction by long and continued usage should be applied to a constitutional provision only in cases of doubt.

(April 26, 1899.)

PETITIONS for writs of mandamus to compel respondent to transfer the proceeds of a tax upon telephone lines from the primary school fund to the general fund of the state, and to require him to cease the collection of the tax as a special tax on the ground that it was unconstitutional and void. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Benton Hanchett, for relator:

The tax in question is not a specific tax; it is an ad valorem or property tax.

The taxation is by assessing the value of the property as the property, real and personal, in a city is assessed by the assessing officers of the city, viz., at its cash value.

In both cases the taxation is by levying a rate per cent of tax upon the value of the property taxed. One is as much as the other a taxation of property by the levy of a per cent of tax upon the value of that property.

The Constitution clearly distinguishes between taxes which are specific taxes and taxes which are not specific taxes, and the distinction is this: Taxes which are levied upon capital, or occupation, or upon income, and which are not based upon valuation of property, are specific taxes, while taxes which are imposed upon the valuation of property are not specific; they are what is known as property or ad valorem taxes.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68; Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325.

For statutes which were adopted prior to the Constitution granting special charters, in which specific taxes were imposed, the following may be referred to, viz.:

NOTE.—As to taxes on property in specie, see also Reelfoot Lake Levee Dist. v. Dawson (Tenn.) 34 L. R. A. 725; Levi v. Louisville (Ky.) 28 L. R. A. 480.
44 L. R. A.

Act No. 47, Laws 1837, p. 76, § 32, p. 87; Laws 1846, Act No. 42, p. 37, § 33, p. 61; Act No. 113, p. 170, § 31, p. 191; Act No. 137, p. 227, § 22, p. 234; Laws 1848, Act No. 199, p. 278, § 26, p. 290; Act No. 262, p. 294, § 26, p. 307; Act No. 234, p. 351, § 26, p. 363; Laws 1848, Act No. 62, p. 59, § 18, p. 65; Laws 1848, Act No. 74, p. 76, § 4; Act No. 77, p. 81, § 4; Act No. 85, p. 94, § 4; Act No. 111, p. 127, § 6; Act No. 113, p. 131, § 4; Act No. 115, p. 156, § 4; Act No. 116, p. 138, § 4; Laws 1849, Act No. 64, p. 57, § 4; Act No. 68, p. 62, § 4; Act No. 72, p. 67, § 4.

Distinct from these taxes which were designated specific taxes were taxes which, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, were assessed upon the property upon the basis of its valuation.

Rev. Stat. 1838, title 5, pp. 75-85; Rev. Stat. 1846, title 5, p. 102.

Taxes which are imposed upon capital or occupation or income, without taking into account the valuation of the property, and taxes which are levied upon the property upon the basis of its assessed valuation.

The designation of specific taxes by the authorities is the same as that which has been applied by the legislation and by the Constitution of this state.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 17; Cooley, Taxation, 2d ed. 238; Black, Tax Titles, § 83; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 425; State v. North, 27 Mo. 464; Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 497; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. State, 64 Tex. 274, 53 Am. Rep. 758; Brookfield v. Tooev, 141 Mo. 619; State, Garth, v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280.

The imposition of a specific sum to be raised, or a specific rate, or ratio, of tax to be raised upon property on the basis of its valuation, is not the imposition of a specific tax; it is an ad valorem property tax.

Brookfield v. Tooev, 141 Mo. 619; Chambers v. Durfee, 100 Mich. 112.

Imposing these taxes for the use and benefit of the university is not applying them in paying the interest upon the primary school fund, or interest upon the university fund.

The university fund is a fund held by the state, upon which the state pays an annual interest to the Board of Regents of the university, and was created from the proceeds of the university lands granted to the state by the following acts:

2 U. S. Stat. pp. 277, 279, § 5; 4 U. S. Stat. p. 180; 5 U. S. Stat. p. 59; Mich. Laws 1836, pp. 57, 59; 1 How. Stat. pp. 36, 37; Mich. Const. 1835, art. 10, § 5; Mich. Rev. Stat. 1838, p. 42; Const. 1850, art. 13, § 2.

The primary school fund was created in like manner, from the proceeds of the lands granted to the state for the use of schools under the following acts:

2 U. S. Stat. pp. 277, 279; 5 U. S. Stat. p. 59; 1 How. Stat. pp. 36, 37; Mich. Const. 1835, art. 10, § 2; Act 104, Laws 1837, p. 209.

The statute imposing a tax must not provide for such partial imposition of the taxes.

Such action would disregard all uniformity and be a means of applying favoritism of the grossest kind in distributing the burden of taxation.

People, St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal Co., v. Auditor General, 7 Mich. 84; Mote v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; People, Detroit & H. R. Co., v. Salem Twp. Board, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; Jones v. Detroit Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 273; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 610, 615, 633; 1 Desty, Taxation, §§ 41, 206, 207; Burroughs, Taxation, § 51, p. 61; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 59, 60; Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1; Zanesville v. Richards, 5 Ohio St. 589; Wasson v. Wayne County Comrs. 49 Ohio St. 622, 17 L. R. A. 795; Fields v. Highland County Comrs. 36 Ohio St. 476; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 513, 18 L. R. A. 729; Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana, 28; Fletcher v. Oliver, 25 Ark. 289; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Worthen, 46 Ark. 312; Oheapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 19 W. Va. 408; Adams v. Mississippi State Bank, 75 Miss. 701; State, Garth, v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howe, 32 Kan. 737; Railroad & Teleph. Cos. v. Board of Equalizers, 85 Fed. Rep. 302; Bureau County Supers. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 44 Ill. 229; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Boone County Supers. 44 Ill. 240; Mich. Const. art. 10, § 1; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432.

Mr. Ashley Pond, also for relator:

The taxes in question are not "specific taxes" within the intent and meaning of that term as used in article 14 of the Constitution.

Perry, Principles of Political Economy, 557; Colton, Public Economy, 516; Amasa Walker, Science of Wealth, 339; Cooley, Taxation, 175; Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 497.

The distinction between specific and ad valorem duties or taxes has been continually kept in mind and emphasized in the legislation of Congress from the earliest custom acts to the present time.

Benton, Thirty Years in Congress.

The legislation of this state, prior to and up to the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1850, fully recognized the character of specific taxes and the difference between such taxes and ad valorem taxes, that is, taxes based upon an assessment or valuation of property, as a reference to such legislation will demonstrate.

Rev. Stat. 1838, chap. 8, p. 102; Rev. Stat. 1846, chap. 21, p. 121.

A franchise tax is a tax upon the right or privilege to be a corporation, and to do business within the state in a corporate capacity.

Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025.

But in this state specific taxes may be imposed upon natural persons not exercising or possessing any franchise.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68; Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325.
44 L. R. A.

Messrs. Charles D. Joslyn and Charles Flowers also for relator.

Mr. Carey W. Duntun for relator Telephone Company.

Mr. Henry M. Cheever, with Mr. Horace M. Oren, Attorney General, for respondent:

The practical construction of the act of 1881 by the legislature, the state officers appointed to execute the statute, and the taxpayer for eighteen years preclude inquiry now as to the constitutionality of the statute.

Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 83 Am. Dec. 728; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 115; Atty. Gen. v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94; The Laura, 114 U. S. 411, 29 L. ed. 147; People, Platt, v. Oakland County Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 282; People, Atty. Gen., v. Bank of Pontiac, 12 Mich. 527; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 24 Mich. 389; Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co. 66 Mich. 611; State v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 481.

Section 11, art. 14, of the Constitution of 1850 is as follows: "The legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation except on property paying specific taxes, and taxes shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law."

The general canon of construction of any writing is that a thing may be within the meaning and not within the words, or within the words and not within the meaning.

Detroit Sisters of Charity v. Detroit, 9 Mich. 94; Detroit v. Kush, 82 Mich. 532, 10 L. R. A. 171.

The legislature under this provision of the Constitution is to provide a uniform rule of taxation except on property paying specific taxes.

Property paying specific taxes is exempt from the operation of the command of the Constitution that taxes shall be uniform.

The words "specific taxes" in this Constitution mean that which is applied to a specific purpose, not that which is raised in a specific way.

The word "such" in § 11, "taxes shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law," refers back to the clause immediately preceding, "except on property paying specific taxes."

It allows an assessment to be made in any manner which the legislature may designate.

A provision of a Constitution may or may not be self-executing.

Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. 499, 10 L. ed. 519; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg, 43 U. S. App. 726, 75 Fed. Rep. 876, 21 C. C. A. 546, 34 L. R. A. 393; Peck v. Miller, 39 Mich. 594; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3003.

The provision of our Constitution with regard to the way in which specific taxes shall be applied is affirmative and mandatory and self-executing.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

The use of the word "specific" in the Revised Statutes of 1835, as applied to taxation, is almost the same as the word "license."

Rev. Stat. 1835, p. 102.

By the Revised Statutes of 1846, specific state taxes and duties are imposed: (1) upon banks, on their capital stock; (2) upon railroad, canal, and turnpike corporations upon the capital stock, which is made in lieu of state, county, and town taxes, and brokers, and exchange dealers, and hawkers, peddlers, and auctioneers are charged with specific taxes.

Rev. Stat. 1846, p. 121.

The word "specific" as employed in the Constitution of 1850 does not refer to the sort of taxes which are spoken of in the Revised Statutes of 1835 and 1846.

Such taxes on business devoted to local purposes are not state taxes such as the Constitution requires to be applied to education.

Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406, 20 Am. Rep. 654.

Specific taxes other than those named in the Constitution may be imposed.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

Sometimes the word "specific" is the reverse of "general."

Chaloner v. Bolckow, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 933.

Sometimes, and indeed usually, in reference to public burdens, the word "specific" is employed in the customary revenue and tariff laws. But this special and limited meaning and application of the word "specific" as applying to the manner of imposition, never has been introduced into the general tax laws of either the United States or any state, and the use of the word in our Constitution is entirely exceptional and sui generis.

Since nowhere does the Constitution fix the method by which these specific taxes shall be levied and assessed, therefore it is the purpose to which the tax must be applied which fixes its character as specific or general.

Jones v. Detroit Water Comrs. 34 Mich. 273.

The discretion of the legislative power is supreme in the matter.

Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 20 L. ed. 414; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 Mich. 193; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Porter, 17 Ind. 380.

There is no limit to the power of the legislature to tax, unless found distinctly in the Constitution.

State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, Taylor v. Secor, 23 L. ed. 663; Union P. R. Co. v. Cheyenne, 113 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 1098; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 33 Fed. Rep. 121.

Distribution among the several counties is a matter for regulation by the legislature Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683.

The general right to make exemptions is involved in the right to apportion taxes, and must be understood to exist wherever it is not forbidden.

Butler's Appeal, 75 Pa. 448; People v. 44 L. R. A.

Coleman, 4 Cal. 46, 60 Am. Dec. 581; State v. North, 27 Mo. 404; Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; State, Hall, v. Parker, 33 N. J. L. 312; Indianapolis v. Sturdevant, 24 Ind. 391.

An act of the state legislature not prohibited by the express words of the Constitution or by necessary implication cannot be declared void as a violation of that instrument.

In a case of doubt every presumption not clearly inconsistent with the language and subject-matter is to be made in favor of the constitutionality of the state legislation.

Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; Atty. Gen. v. Preston, 56 Mich. 177; People, Detroit & H. R. Co., v. Salem Trop. Board, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; People, Twitchell, v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 150; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 297; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 333.

The expediency or policy of the exercise of the will of the legislature is not to be considered by the court at all.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406, 20 Am. Rep. 654; East Saginaw Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 292, 2 Am. Rep. 82; People, St. Mary's Falls Ship Canal Co., v. Auditor General, 7 Mich. 84; Chippewa County Supers. v. Auditor General, 65 Mich. 408; Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 331; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 3d ed. § 561.

The legislature has the power to impose taxation of this character, because it is not forbidden by any express provision of the Constitution.

Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 567; Salem Iron Factory Co. v. Danvers, 10 Mass. 514; Toll Bridge Co. v. Osborn, 35 Conn. 7; Lenaue County Sav. Bank v. Adrian, 66 Mich. 273.

Mr. John J. Speed, also for respondent: The requirement of uniformity does not prevent the division of things taxable into classes and the imposition of taxes which, while bearing equally upon the different members of each class, bear unequally upon the classes in the aggregate.

New Orleans v. Davidson, 30 La. Ann. 554, 31 Am. Rep. 228; New Orleans v. People's Bank, 32 La. Ann. 82; New Orleans v. Dubarry, 33 La. Ann. 481, 39 Am. Rep. 273; Durach's Appeal, 62 Pa. 491; Weber v. Reinhard, 73 Pa. 370, 13 Am. Rep. 747; State v. North, 27 Mo. 404; Glasgow v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 479; American Union Exp. Co. v. St. Joseph, 66 Mo. 675, 27 Am. Rep. 382; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Taylor County, 52 Wis. 37; State, Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469; State v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 73 Me. 518; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 20 L. ed. 414; Gibbons v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 404, 29 L. ed. 680; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 33 Fed. Rep. 121; Cooley, Const. Lim. 514, 515; Cooley, Taxation, 32, 34; State Bd. of Assessors v. Central R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 279; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa. 343; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580; Edge v. Robertson, 28 L. ed. 798; Pa- cific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810.

Rules must not be variable in their application to the subject of taxation, included in the classification of property.

State, Central R. Co., v. State Bd. of Assessors, 48 N. J. L. 20, 57 Am. Rep. 516.

The statute now in question provides for an assessment by a state board. It is constitutional in that respect.

Central Iowa R. Co. v. Wright County Supers. 67 Iowa, 199; Franklin County v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 12 Lea, 521.

The specific taxes exempted from the uniform rule to be established as provided by § 11 are upon property.

At the adoption of the Constitution there was a system of general taxation, and it may be fairly argued that the term "specific" was used as opposed to this general system; and the convention held in mind the taxation of the rights and privileges specially as a better means of equalizing taxation and as a condition of their existence, and as such it was to be regarded as a tax on business or on tangible franchises or privileges.

The mode was not essential. It might be a tax on property or apportioned on another basis.

Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 800, 33 L. ed. 1029; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 36 L. ed. 164, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57; Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 206, 231; Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 21 L. ed. 888, 896; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 33 Fed. Rep. 126; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810; State v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 73 Me. 518.

The rate of taxation is fixed by reference to certain facts. The legislature may delegate its power to determine such facts or state of facts upon which the law makes or intends to make its own action depend.

Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294.

There is no difference in principle between the tax at a certain definite rate on the poles and wires of a telephone company and a tax of 4 per cent on the value of the ore mined by copper companies, where in either case it is apparent it was intended as an exaction for a privilege.

If in any sense the tax is specific, the money must be paid into and form part of the school fund, and it is immaterial that the statute does not refer to the Constitution to fix the purpose to which it is to be applied.

Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

Mr. Alfred Russell, also for respondent:

The practical construction of the telephone and telegraph taxation act of 1881, in connection with the Constitution, recognized by the legislature, by the state officers, and by the taxpayers for the long period of eighteen years, precludes attack upon the constitutionality of the law at present.

Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 83 Am. Dec. 728; People, Twitchell, v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 151.

Necessarily the legislature has the power 44 L. R. A.

to consider various elements in arriving at the amount of a specific tax, because the legislature cannot act arbitrarily and capriciously.

Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. of Mass. 125 U. S. 530, 31 L. ed. 790.

The requirement of a uniform rule as to taxation simply means that the taxation of all objects or property which are of the same class shall be uniform; and the taxation of property in that class may be different from what the taxation of property of another class is.

The Constitution is conformed to no matter what the mode of assessment, if the result of the assessment is that the property is assessed at its true value in money.

Wagoner v. Loomis, 37 Ohio St. 571; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Poe, 61 Fed. Rep. 449; State, Poe, v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 492; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Poe, 64 Fed. Rep. 9; Sanford v. Poe, 37 U. S. App. 378, 69 Fed. Rep. 546, 16 C. C. A. 305; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. of Mass. 125 U. S. 530, 31 L. ed. 790; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 171, 41 L. ed. 960.

It is of small importance whether the tax be denominated a specific tax or not, for the reason that under the Ohio cases the tax which we are discussing does provide a uniform rule of taxation, and provides the purpose to which the tax shall be devoted as required by § 14, art. 14.

Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. 284, 21 L. ed. 164; Auditor General v. State Treasurer, 45 Mich. 161.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the year 1881 the legislature passed an act (No. 168, Pub. Acts 1881) entitled "An Act to Provide for the Assessment of Telegraph and Telephone Lines within the State of Michigan." Its provisions are, in substance, that the auditor general, state treasurer, and commissioner of the state land office shall assess telegraph and telephone lines at their true cash value, and levy a tax upon said assessment at a rate which shall equal the average rate of taxes (general, municipal, and local) levied throughout the state during the previous year, to be ascertained from the records and files of the auditor general's office, which tax shall be in lieu of all other taxes. This tax has since been paid, and the auditor general has treated it as a specific tax, and credited the amounts collected to the educational fund, under the provisions of § 1 of article 14 of the Constitution, which provides: "All specific state taxes, except those received from the mining companies of the Upper Penin-eula, shall be applied in paying the interest upon the primary school, university, and other educational funds, and the interest and principal of the state debt, in the order herein recited, until the extinguishment of the state debt, other than the amounts due to educational funds, when such specific taxes shall be added to and constitute a part of the primary-school interest fund. The legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient, with other resources, to pay the estimated expenses of the state government, the interest of the state debt, and such deficiency as may occur in the resources." The application of the governor is for a mandamus to compel the auditor general to transfer to the general fund, from the primary-school fund, the amount of moneys collected under the act mentioned, and now on hand, upon the ground that the tax provided in said act is not a specific tax. The Tecumseh Telephone Company's application is based upon the same ground, and asks that the tax be canceled, upon the further contention that the tax, not being a specific tax, is not levied in conformity to other provisions of the Constitution, viz., §§ 11 and 14 of article 14, which are as follows:

"Sec. 11. The legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation, except on property paying specific taxes, and taxes shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law."

"Sec. 14. Every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax shall distinctly state the tax, and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object."

The auditor general has answered both petitions; claiming that the tax is specific, and not a property tax, and that, if it be determined otherwise, the tax is valid.

In addition to the sections quoted, §§ 10 and 12 of article 14 of the Constitution are as follows:

"The state may continue to collect all specific taxes accruing to the treasury under existing laws. The legislature may provide for the collection of specific taxes from banking, railroad, plank road, and other corporations hereafter created."

"All assessments hereafter authorized shall be on property at its cash value."

The first question presented, then, is, Does act No. 168 of the Laws of 1881 provide for a specific tax, within the meaning of the Constitution? If it does, it disposes of the cases, and both applications should be denied.

Amasa Walker, in his Science of Wealth, at page 339, says that: "Duties are generally of two kinds,—specific and ad valorem. Specific duties are imposed by the pound, yard, gallon, etc." The late Mr. Justice Cooley, in his work on Taxation, 2d ed. p. 238, uses a similar classification as to taxes, and says of specific taxes that, "under this head may be ranged those which impose a specific sum, by the head or number, or by some standard of weight or measurement, and which requires no assessment, beyond a listing and classification of the subjects to be taxed." He describes ad valorem taxes as follows: "Ad Valorem Taxes. A large proportion of the duties on imports are of this description, and so, sometimes, are many of the taxes which make up the internal revenue. The statute laying them prescribes the rule, but requires the action of appraisers in apportioning them between individuals. By far the larger proportion of all state taxation is also upon property by a valuation, and effect can only be given to it by means of assessors, who value the property and apportion the tax by their estimate." A similar description of specific taxes is found in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 17. In Colton's Public Economy, at page 576, it is said: "A specific duty is assessed by income,—as so much a yard, per gallon, per cwt., per caldron, etc.; the instrument of measure being such as the article requires." Perry, in his Principle of Political Economy, says: "What is the difference between specific and ad valorem taxes, and why should the student take careful note of them, both singly and combined? These terms are used more particularly in relation to tariff taxes, but there is nothing in the distinction itself so to limit its application. A specific tax is a tax of so many cents or dollars on the pound, yard, gallon, or other quantity measurable. An ad valorem tax is a tax of so much per centum on the invoiced or appraised money value of the goods subject to the tax." Bouvier's Dictionary, tit. Ad Valorem, says "Ad Valorem. (Latin.) According to the valuation. Duties may be specific or ad valorem. Ad valorem duties are always estimated at a certain per cent on the valuation of the property." Black's definition is: "Ad Valorem. According to value. Duties are either ad valorem or specific; the former when the duty is laid in the form of a percentage on the value of the property; the latter where it is imposed as a fixed sum on each article or class, without regard to its value. The term 'ad valorem tax' is as well-defined and fixed as any other used in political economy or legislation, and simply means a tax or duty upon the value of the article or thing subject to taxation." Black, Tax Titles, § 83, says upon the subject that: "Difference between Specific and Ad Valorem Taxes. In regard to specific taxes, no other apportionment is requisite than that necessarily prescribed by the statute which lays the tax. The share of each taxpayer is completely determined by his condition with reference to the number of the given articles in his possession, or their weight or measurement, or with reference to the fact of his pursuing the particular avocation taxed, or enjoying the particular franchise, or otherwise, as the case may be. But the case is different with respect to ad valorem taxes. Here the intervention of ministerial officers is necessary to effect the apportionment between individuals. Assessors are called upon to estimate the value of the property to be taxed, and apportion the shares according to their valuation." This distinction has been recognized as applied to duties for many years. Benton's Thirty Years in Congress says of the custom's act of 1833: "Specific duties had been the rule, ad valorem the exception, from the beginning of the collection of the custom-house revenue. The specific duty was a question in the exact sciences, depending upon a mathematical solution, by weight, count, or measure." In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 180, 6 L. ed. 66, p. 188, Chief Justice Marshall said: "The framers of the Constitution, and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said." Quoting this language, Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, said at page 58: "This is but saying that no forced or unnatural construction is to be put upon their language, and it seems so obvious a truism that one expects to see it universally accepted without question; but the attempt is so often made, by interested subtlety and ingenious refinement, to induce the courts to force from these instruments a meaning which their framers never held, that it frequently becomes necessary to redeclare this fundamental maxim."

It is urged that the framers of the Constitution used the term "specific tax" in a different and broader sense, and that, in contradistinction to the uniform tax contemplated by § 11, it should be construed to mean any tax on property not conforming to such uniform rule. We have only to examine the statute in force at the time the Constitution was adopted, to see that the term "specific tax" was known and applied in this state previous to the meeting of the constitutional convention. Title 5 of the Revised Statutes of 1846 is divided into chapters 20 and 21. The former treats of the "Assessment and Collection of Taxes;" the latter, "Of Specific Taxes and Duties,"—thus indicating that specific taxes and duties embraced taxes other and different from those ordinary taxes which were provided for in chapter 20, and which were assessed and collected locally. An examination of chapter 21 will show that the term "specific taxes" was used in conformity to the definitions hereinafter given. Thus banks were taxed a specified per centum upon the amount of capital stock paid in. A similar tax was imposed upon railroad, canal, and turnpike companies. These taxes were payable to the state treasurer. It will be noticed that they were not based upon the actual value of the real and personal property in possession of the company at the time, but upon the amount of capital that had been previously invested in their business. The interposition of no assessing officer was required to value the property. Reports to the state treasurer were required (see Rev. Stat. p. 214); and presumably he was to determine the amount, and collect the tax, after making a deduction from the amount of capital stock equal in amount to such property, real and personal, of the banks, as was locally assessed and taxed. The legislature of 1846 to 1849, inclusive, passed many acts—some general and some special—imposing taxes of this kind upon corporations created by them, such as railroads, plank roads, and mining companies. The briefs of counsel refer to 44 L. R. A.

them, and we will not repeat the citations. Without exception, they provide for reports from which the amount of taxes were computed. Other recognized specific taxes, such as taxes upon brokers, peddlers, etc., were included in chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes. It even seems to have been thought advisable to distinguish duties from them. Accordingly the title mentions them, and the chapter (21) imposes ad valorem duties upon property sold at auction, and spirituous liquors. In view of these laws, some of which continued in force after the adoption of the Constitution, we are satisfied that the convention understood the meaning of the term "specific taxes," and used it in no other than the common and well-settled sense of the term, which they understood to imply a tax which was made specific in rate and arbitrary in its standard, requiring no assessment beyond a mathematical computation. Of such taxes, Mr. Cooley says: "License taxes, and other taxes on business or occupations, stamp taxes, taxes on franchises, and privileges, are usually specific, as are also many excise and custom taxes. As regards all such taxes, the law by which they are laid is of itself a complete apportionment. Ministerial officers have nothing to do but to list the subjects of taxation; classify them, where that is necessary; ascertain the number, weight, measurement, etc.; and collect the sum which the law has definitely fixed. If the taxes are stamp or license taxes, even the listing may not be required; but the individual who is to pay them will purchase his stamp or his license by voluntary payment, as he may have occasion." Cooley, Tax'n, 175. If the tax in this case is clearly an ad valorem tax, if it is a tax on property,—and this cannot be questioned, because the title and the act both call it a tax on telegraph lines, which are property,—there is nothing in the law to indicate that an occupation tax or tax upon business was intended, even were we to hold that its ad valorem feature would not necessarily preclude its being denominated a specific tax. It follows that the auditor general should not treat this as a specific tax, by crediting it to the educational fund.

It remains to inquire whether this tax can be sustained as an ad valorem tax. We have seen that the Constitution requires uniformity of taxation, except as to property specifically taxed. Not being a specific tax, this must comply with this requirement, which it can hardly be said to do. It is to be assessed according to its cash value, which is a compliance with section 12; but if assessment as a whole, and not locally, and by a state board, and not by a local board, as in ordinary cases, can be said to be permissible,—which we do not decide,—the fact remains that the rate is determined in a different way, and is different in amount, from taxes imposed upon other property which contributes to state taxes. We must infer that this is a state tax, for it is payable to the state treasurer, and the law does not provide for its application to local purposes. The taxes generally assessed for the state bear a proportion to the amount to be raised, and all taxable property, except that paying specific taxes, is charged with a given and equal per centum upon its assessed value. That cannot be said of this property, for the rate is to be the average of all taxes raised for all purposes,—local as well as state. It is not a specific tax, and it is not within the uniform rule of taxation prescribed for other property, and the law providing for it must therefore be held void.

Counsel urge that this statute has been a law since 1879, recognized by the departments as valid, and acquiesced in by the corporations taxed under it, and by the public, and ask us to apply to this case the doctrine that "long and continued usage furnishes a contemporaneous construction which must prevail over the mere technical import of words." This principle should be applied more cautiously to Constitutions than to laws. The inference that the public is satisfied with a construction of a law giving it an effect which the legislature might have lawfully provided, and which would not be disputed, had its language shown an intent to do so, is much greater than in the case of a constitutional provision, where the question arises, not in regard to legislative intention, but to legislative power. And, if we could eliminate this distinction, the ability to easily change the law by legislative action would give more force to a construction in conformity to usage than would be justified in the case of a constitutional provision, which cannot be so readily altered. It is a rule which should not be applied, except in cases of doubt. Mr. Cooley, in Constitutional Limitations (page 71), says: "Acquiescence for no length of time can legalize a clear usurpation of power, where the people have plainly expressed their will in the Constitution, and appointed judicial tribunals to enforce it. A power is frequently yielded to merely because it is claimed; and it may be exercised for a long period in violation of the constitutional prohibition, without the mischief which the Constitution was designed to guard against appearing, or without anyone being sufficiently interested in the subject to raise the question, but these circumstances cannot be allowed to sanction a clear infraction of the Constitution. We think we allow to contemporary and practical construction its full legitimate force when we suffer it, where it is clear and uniform, to solve in its own favor the doubts which arise on reading the instrument to be construed." The rule of contemporaneous construction was applied in the case of McPherson v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 377, 16 L. R. A. 475, where the question was, What was meant by the language of the Federal Constitution which provides that "each state shall appoint in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct a number of electors, equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in the Congress?" The opinion in that case, and in the case of Detroit v. Chapin, 108 Mich. 136, 37 L. R. A. 391, review the authorities sustaining that rule. In the latter case it was held that the question must be a doubtful one, to 44 L. R. A.

permit contemporaneous construction to have weight. Again, this usage has not the force that it would otherwise have, because the law was not passed until nearly thirty years after the adoption of the Constitution. To apply this principle would be to hold, in substance, that the practical construction of a department, acquiesced in by those affected by the law, possibly satisfied with it because of the favorable consideration that it gives them, has made necessary or proper a construction of the Constitution, upon a most important subject, which, in the absence of the practice under it, would not be indulged.

The applications must be granted,—that of the telephone company, as prayed; that of the governor, to the extent of requiring the amount collected under the law, and now in the hands of the treasurer, to be credited to the general fund. Costs will not follow.

All the other Justices concur with Hooker, J.

Montgomery, J., concurring:

I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice Hooker. I think it cannot be maintained that a tax on property based on assessments is a specific tax. The definition of "specific tax" stated by Judge Cooley is a tax which "imposes a specific sum, by the head or number, or by some standard of weight or measurement which require no assessment beyond a listing and classification of the subjects to be taxed." Cooley, Tax'n, 2d ed. 238. It is true, the capital stock of a corporation may be made the basis of the levy of a specific tax or franchise tax, but this is a method of measuring the tax without resort to assessment. In Burroughs, Tax'n, 168, referring to the Federal decisions on the subject, the author states: "When the tax is on the nominal capital of a bank, without regard to the value of the property of which it is composed, such a tax is annexed to the franchise as a royalty for the grant, and is a tax on the franchise, and not on property." But the Supreme Court of the United States, in Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 195-226, 41 L. ed. 683-697, in speaking of a tax imposed under the Nicholls law of Ohio, which is, in this respect, similar to the statute involved in this case, say, "The taxation is essentially a property tax." So, in State, Poe, v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 492, the court labored to show that the tax under the Nicholls law was a property tax; i. e., that the good will embraced the value of the taxable property, and might be considered in assessing the value of the property as property. It was said: "If, by reason of the good will of the concern, or the skill, experience, and energy with which its business is conducted, the market value of the capital stock is largely increased, whereby the value of the tangible property of the corporation, considered as an entire plant, acquires a greater market value than it otherwise would have had, it cannot properly be said not to be its true value in money, within the meaning of the Constitution because good will and other elements indirectly entered into its value." The authoritative decisions under the Nicholls law (i. e., that of the Ohio supreme court and that of the Federal Supreme Court) both rest upon the ground that the tax imposed was a tax on property, and not a tax on franchise or privilege. The distinction between a franchise tax and a tax on property is well illustrated by two decisions of the Federal Supreme Court. In New York Bank of Commerce v. New York City & County Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451, it was held that, as a tax on the national securities cannot be levied by a state or local municipality, the same result could not be reached by taxing the value of the stock of a bank which was wholly invested in such securities. But in the case of Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 611, 18 L. ed. 907, the court had under consideration the statute of Massachusetts which provides for a tax on the average amount of deposits standing on the books of the institution. The court held this a tax on the franchise, and not a property tax. Referring to the case of New York, Bank of Commerce, v. New York City & County Tax Comrs. the court said: "The statement of that case shows that the assessment was made under a then recent law of the state, which required the tax to be imposed upon a valuation of the stock, like the property of individual citizens, and not, as formerly, on the amount of the nominal capital, without regard to the depreciation. Prior system of taxation in that state was different, and this court admits that, according to that system, it was immaterial as to the character of description of the property which constituted the capital, as the tax was one annexed to the franchise as a royalty for the grant, and was imposed wholly irrespective of the character of the property." In Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904, the court went still further. There the tax was assessed upon the excess of the market value of the capital stock over the assessed value of the real estate and machinery of the corporation. The court held this to be a tax on franchise, and not on property. So, in the same case, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts had reached the same result. The reasoning by which the result was reached is shown by reference to the opinion of the court in Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 12 Allen, 302. The court says: "The statute does not require that there should be any return made of the personal property held by corporations to the board of commissioners, who are to fix the amount on which the assessment is to be reckoned; nor is there any valuation or estimate of such property to be made in order to arrive at the amount of the excise or duty." In the same opinion the court says: "It certainly cannot be contended that the legislature can legitimately impose a tax on property in the name or under the guise of laying an excise or duty. Such legislation would be a palpable evasion of a distinct and clearly-defined constitutional restriction, and would substitute an unequal and arbitrary system of taxation upon property for one which was intended . . . to be 44 L. R. A.

equal and proportional." In no case to which my attention has been called has a tax imposed on the property of a corporation at a valuation fixed by assessors been treated as a tax on a franchise, as distinguished from a tax on property. The case last cited comes the nearest to so holding of any, and this makes the market value of the shares the basis, and distinctly negatives the right to so treat a valuation fixed by assessment. The case of Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 497, distinguishes between a specific and an ad valorem tax. The test adopted is whether the tax is assessed on value, and, as the statute under consideration so provided by clear implication, it was held not to provide a specific tax. See also Brookfield v. Tooley, 14 Mo. 613. It is contended, however, that the specific taxes provided for in our Constitution may be taxes on property, and that this implies that they may be assessed upon value. I do not think the latter proposition is necessarily a sound deduction from the former. The exception from the rule of uniformity provided by § 11, of property paying specific taxes, does not necessarily imply that specific taxes may, in one sense, be laid upon property. In one sense, specific taxes are laid on property when the capital stock of the corporation or its gross earnings is made the basis for a levy; and yet, as we have seen, taxes so levied are specific taxes, or taxes on the franchise, with accepted definitions. The argument made, that the statutes in force when the Constitution was adopted, and which are continued in force, provided for taxes on property which were by the Constitution treated as specific taxes, is sufficiently answered by my brother Hooker. As pointed out by him, none of these acts provided for an assessment on the property according to value, but the rate was fixed and calculated on the basis of capital invested, without regard to depreciations. Is the tax imposed uniform with that imposed on other property bearing the same relation to the state? Treating the tax imposed as one on property, based on valuation, and not as a specific tax, the corporations and associations mentioned in this act can no more be discriminated against, as to the assessments made or taxes exacted, than can merchants, manufacturers, or farmers. The tax levied in this act is the average rate of all taxes levied by the state, counties, and municipalities throughout the state. A telephone company in Tecumseh, where the local taxation added to the state tax may not exceed 1½ per cent, may, under this act, be required to pay 2½ per cent. Under the Atkinson bill, a railroad in the Northern Peninsula is required to pay the same rates as one having a terminus in Detroit, and extending through territory in which local improvements are expensive, and schools are maintained at great cost.

Grant, Ch. J., and Moore and Long, JJ., concur with Montgomery, J.

Grant, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the opinion of my Brothers Hooker and Montgomery, but desire to express my views somewhat more fully. Our Constitution authorizes only two kinds of taxes,—one, specific, imposed without regard to the value of the thing taxed; the other, general, based upon assessed cash value, and requiring uniformity. The principal question for determination is, Is the tax imposed by this act a specific tax? If it is a specific tax, the act is valid; if it is not a specific tax, it is void, for noncompliance with § 14, art. 14, of the Constitution, which provides that “every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax shall distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied, and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object.” This law does not provide the object to which the tax is to be applied. This is so obvious, that I spend no time in discussing it. When a tax is specific, the Constitution fixes the object to which it is to be applied. It appears to me impossible to read the definitions of the lexicographers and the decisions of the courts without reaching the conclusion that the terms “specific tax” and “ad valorem tax” have a well-defined meaning; and in the Constitution of this state, as well as in the statutes and decisions, these definitions are clearly recognized. Concise definitions are given in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 17, note 3, and Cooley, Const. Lim. 238. As these are found in the opinions of my brothers, I will not restate them. These two definitions are, in substance, the same as given by other authorities, both legal and lay. A tax based upon the assessed cash value of property assessed is not a specific tax. It is an ad valorem tax, and any enactment by a legislature that it is a specific tax does not make it so; otherwise the legislature could determine what was meant by the use of terms in the Constitution which have a well-defined meaning. The fact that, in imposing a specific tax, the value of the thing taxed is taken into consideration in determining the amount of it, does not change the nature of the tax. A tax upon the capital stock of a corporation, paid or unpaid, or upon its bonds issued or money borrowed, is just as much a specific tax as is so much per article upon the thing produced. The real value of the capital stock is not its par value. It would probably be safe to say that there is not a corporation in this state whose stock, paid or unpaid, at its par value, is its real value, or whose indebtedness in money borrowed represents its value. It is a well-known fact that the actual value of many of our mining corporations is many times greater than the par value of the stock, while that of others is many times less than the par value. So a tax upon the bonds or upon the borrowed money of a corporation is not a tax upon the value of the corporation. The next day the money borrowed may be put into improvements which will increase the real value of the property much greater than the amount of the money borrowed, while in other instances it will be a loss. All such taxes are not taxes upon value, but upon the specific thing regardless of its real value. It is undoubtedly true, as argued by the learned counsel for the relator, that value enters into every specific tax. The people do not tax, specifically or otherwise, worthless property. Probably the specific tax on a ton of copper or silver would be placed at a much higher sum than a tax upon a ton of iron, but this fact does not change the nature of the tax. I speak of this because it is argued that when the framers of the Constitution, in § 10 of article 14, provided: “The state may continue to collect all specific taxes accruing to the treasury under existing laws. The legislature may provide for the collection of specific taxes from banking, railroad, plank road and other corporations hereafter created,”—they used the term “specific” with reference to its meaning in the laws as they then existed. This is conceded to be correct; and Messrs. Hanchett and Pond, who, at the request of the governor, have appeared as counsel for the respondents, also argued that the term was so used in all laws prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1850, where a tax upon value was understood to be a specific tax. We have examined all the laws referred to, and we do not find that in any single act passed prior to 1850 is there any language to justify the conclusion that the term “specific tax” was used to apply to an ad valorem tax, as in the act under discussion. In all these acts, —and they were many,—the only thing to be done was for the ministerial officer to list the property, and the law stepped in and determined the tax. There was no officer of the state appointed to assess the value. The real value was wholly immaterial, and not to be considered. The money borrowed might be invested profitably or unprofitably. The tax was on the specific thing, and not upon value. This is the criterion to determine whether the tax is specific or ad valorem. There is nothing, therefore, in these acts, to show that the legislature had ever intended to impose a specific tax upon an ad valorem assessment. On the contrary, we think the plain conclusion is that the framers of the Constitution used these terms within the definitions above given. In Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 497, the court says: “The term ‘ad valorem tax’ is as well defined and fixed as any other used in political economy or legislation, and simply means a tax or duty upon the value of the article or thing subject to taxation.” It is stated by one of the learned counsel for the relator, in his brief, that the specific taxes levied prior to the adoption of the present Constitution were not, with possibly one exception, levied upon an assessed value. That exception, I suppose, was under the law approved April 25, 1846; being an act declaratory of the interests of the state of Michigan in mines and minerals. Section 4 of that act (being § 2557 of the Compiled Laws of 1857) provided for a “specific tax of 4 per cent, to be in lieu of all other state taxes . . . to be assessed thereon upon the average yield and value of such ores.” This is called a specific tax in the law, and is a specific tax, being a tax upon the specific article produced, and recognizes a proper principle in specific taxation, viz., that of considering value an element in fixing the amount. But there was no attempt to assess and tax the entire property of the company. A specific tax may be so much per pound, or so much per dollar upon the value of the article produced. In neither case is any attempt made to assess and tax all the property of the corporation.

In Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68, at pages 89 and 90, Justice Campbell, in a dissenting opinion, after referring to §§ 11 and 12 of article 14, says: "Taking these sections together, and reading them according to their natural construction, the conclusion seems unavoidable that taxation by an assessed valuation of property must be the rule, and specific taxation the exception." The points in that case upon which the court disagreed were (1) whether the power given by the Constitution to continue specific taxes, and to impose specific taxes on corporations thereafter created, limited the right of specific taxation to such cases, or left the legislature at liberty to apply it to other branches of business; (2) whether it was repugnant to that clause of the Federal Constitution which gives Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states. That case was referred to in Kitson v. Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325, which again recognizes the two classes of taxation permissible under our Constitution,—the one an assessment upon the property at its cash value; and the other, specific taxes not based upon value. Both an ad valorem and a specific tax may be imposed. State v. North, 27 Mo. 464, upheld an ad valorem tax on the goods of merchants, and also a tax on their occupation, to be collected in the form of a license. In Brookfield v. Tooley, 141 Mo. 619, an ordinance of the state levied a license tax of 1 per cent per annum upon the cash value of the stocks of merchants. The court held that this was a property tax, pure and simple, and to call it a tax upon occupation was a misnomer. It was held to be void because not uniform upon all the personal property of the city, because it levied $1 upon every $100 of assessable personal property belonging to the merchant, and exempting all personal property not belonging to merchants. So, in State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, a succession tax levied upon the appraised value of the whole estate left by the deceased, and requiring the personal representatives to pay it, was held to differ in no particular from a general tax upon property, and void because it violated the constitutional requirement of uniformity. In Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, the statute required every railroad in the state to pay to the state an annual excise tax for the privilege of exercising its franchises in the state; the amount to be determined by the gross transportation receipts of each corporation, person, or association. No question of specific or ad valorem taxes was involved. The Constitution of Ohio required that laws should be passed taxing by uniform rule all moneys, securities, investments in bonds, stocks, and in joint-stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real or personal property, according to its true value in money. It also provided that the general assembly "shall provide by law for taxing the notes, or bills discounted or purchased, moneys loaned, and all other property, effects or dues of every description (without deduction) of all banks now existing or hereafter created, and of all bankers, so that all property employed in banking shall always bear a burden of taxation equal to that imposed on the property of individuals." The legislature provided for different modes and agencies to determine the true value of property liable to assessment. This law came before the supreme court of Ohio in Wagoner v. Loomis, 37 Ohio St. 571. The result of the law was an unjust discrimination against railroad companies, but this was held to be the fault of the assessing officers, and not of the law. If the officers had performed their duty, the assessment would have been as nearly equal as human judgment could make it. A statute of the state of Maine provided that every telegraph corporation, company, or person should annually pay into the state treasury a tax of 2½ per cent on the value of any telegraph line owned by said corporation, company, or person within the limits of the state, including all poles, wires, insulators, office furniture, batteries, and instruments, and any circumstances or conditions which affected the value of the property. The second section of the act provided for a return to the secretary of state, to be made under the oath of the superintendent of the company. The governor and council were then required to determine the valuation and assess the tax. The telegraph company claimed that the act was void, under article 9, § 8, of the Constitution of Maine, which is as follows: "All taxes upon real and personal estate assessed by authority of this state shall be apportioned and assessed equally according to the just value thereof." The opinion concedes that, if the act imposed a tax upon property, it was void, and then proceeded to demonstrate that it imposed a "tax or excise upon a specific use of the property, and therefore was not within the limitation of the Constitution." The opinion states that the law does not cover all the property of the company, and concludes that the purpose was to levy a tax upon the use or business of the company, and that in reality such was the tax imposed. I do not wish to be considered as assenting to the reasoning of that case. It seems to me a fair deduction from reading the act, which is given in full in the opinion, that the intention was to cover all the property of the company, and put a tax upon the valuation of all its property, but the court held otherwise; and that is the distinguishing feature of the case. In determining the character of this tax, the court says: "The name is not material. It is the nature of the tax imposed which settles the question as to its validity. If the tax is upon the property as such, it is illegal, by whatever name we may christen it. If upon the franchises, it is clearly within the legislative power, though the name be omitted, and though the value of the franchises may be ascertained by an estimate of certain property." The title of the act here in question is, "An Act to Provide for the Assessment and Taxation of Telegraph and Telephone Lines within the State of Michigan," etc. Section 3 of the act requires the board to assess "said telegraph and telephone lines at the true cash value thereof." If our statute includes all the property of the company, and imposes an ad valorem tax upon it, then the Maine case supports the contention of those attacking the validity of the act. The evident design was to place this property upon an equality, so far as possible, with other property of the state, to make it bear its fair share of the public burdens. The act has none of the features of a specific tax. We are not now concerned with the question whether the appointment of a board to assess the property of these corporations is valid. Some of the authorities already cited support it. So, also, do Central Iowa R. Co. v. Wright County Supers. 67 Iowa, 199; Franklin County v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 12 Lea, 521. I see no objection to this mode of assessment, when the design and effect of the law are to place the property of these corporations upon the same basis as other property of the state.

Anna VOSS et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Children to whom a policy of insurance on their father's life is payable, if their mother be not living at his death, have a vested, though contingent, interest, and on the death of one of them before the mother's death his interest will descend to his widow and children.
2. An insurance policy issued without change, except as to amount, from one which was surrendered merely for reduction, is to be construed with reference to the interest of a beneficiary who has died before the surrender, as of the date of the original contract.
3. One of two beneficiaries in an insurance policy cannot maintain an action to enforce the policy without making the other a party.

(January 3, 1899.)

NOTE.—On the question, Who are "heirs" within the meaning of life insurance policies?—see note to Hubbard v. Turner (Ga.) 30 L. R. A. 593.

For the similar question, Who are "legal representatives" within the meaning of such policies?—see note to Rose v. Wortham (Tenn.) 80 L. R. A. 609.

44 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of the amount alleged to be due on a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John G. Hawley, for plaintiffs in error:

If a person, for whose benefit a policy of insurance is taken out dies before the policy is payable, the heirs of that person succeed to his or her rights.

Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 42 Conn. 60; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Fish, 59 N. H. 126.

Messrs. Moore & Goff, for defendant in error:

The word "children" cannot be extended to include grandchildren.

Re Chapoton, 104 Mich. 11; Re Curry, 39 Cal. 529; Adams v. Law, 17 How. 417, 15 L. ed. 149; Reeves v. Brymer, 4 Ves. Jr. 698; Pride v. Fooks, 3 DeG. & J. 252; Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 518; Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige, 328, 32 Am. Dec. 641.

To reach the construction contended for by plaintiff, two steps from the letter of the policy must be taken.

The first step is to hold that the word "children" includes grandchildren.

The second step is to hold that grandchildren, though designated by the word "children," do not take per capita, but only by representation through their deceased parent.

Winsor v. Odd Fellows' Ben. Asso. 13 R. I. 149.

In Small v. Jose, 86 Me. 120, construing a policy of life insurance, the words "the surviving children" were held not to include grandchildren.

To the same effect are Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Webb, 54 Ala. 688; Russell v. Russell, 64 Ala. 500; United States Trust Co. v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 115 N. Y. 152.

Joseph Engelking, an alleged child of Katharina Engelking, is not made a party to the suit.

Even if it should be held that "children" means grandchildren and widows, there is no right of recovery shown by the declaration, in the plaintiffs.

Continental Ins. Co. v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co. 93 Mich. 139; Herriter v. Porter, 23 Cal. 385; Logan v. Caffrey, 30 Pa. 196; Colvin v. Corwin, 15 Wend. 557; Alcott v. Hugus, 105 Pa. 350; Smith v. Jones, 15 Johns. 229; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 Mich. 614.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a life insurance policy issued by the defendant company to George Engelking, and payable to Katharina Engelking as beneficiary. The declaration recites: "For that whereas, the said Anna Voss is the widow of George Voss, deceased, and the said other plaintiffs are children and heirs of the said George Voss; and whereas, the said George Voss was in his lifetime one of the two children of Katharina Engelking, deceased; and whereas, the said Katharina Engelking was in her lifetime the wife of George Engelking; and whereas, heretofore, to wit, on the 22d day of December, A. D. 1866, at the city of Pittsburgh, in the state of Pennsylvania, the said defendant, for good and sufficient consideration to it in hand paid by the said George Engelking, did make, execute, and deliver to the said George Engelking its certain policy of insurance, wherein and whereby the said defendant expressly promised and agreed to and with the said George Engelking that, upon the death of the said George Engelking, the said defendant would pay to the said Katharina Engelking, or, in the event of her prior decease, to her children, the sum of $5,000; and thereupon, afterwards, to wit, on the 27th day of December, 1878, the said sum so payable was, by the mutual consent of the parties, reduced to $3,000 the said policy in all other respects remaining in full force; and thereafter, to wit, on the 23d day of December, 1882, the said sum so payable was, by mutual consent of the parties, further reduced to the sum of $2,500, the said policy in all other respects remaining in full force; and thereupon, afterwards, to wit, on the 31st day of December, 1883, the said sum so payable was, by the mutual consent of the parties, further reduced to the sum of $2,000, the said policy in all other respects remaining in full force; and thereupon, afterwards, to wit, on the 22d day of December, 1885, the said sum so payable was, by the mutual consent of the parties, further reduced to the sum of $1,500, the said policy in all other respects remaining in full force; and whereas, then and there, to wit, at Pittsburgh, on December 22, 1866, the said George Voss and Joseph Engelking were the children, and the only children, of said Katharina Engelking; and whereas, afterwards, to wit, on the 1st day of April, A. D. 1887, at the said city of Pittsburgh, the said Katharina Engelking died, the said George Engelking still living; and whereas, afterwards, to wit, on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1888, the said George Engelking died at the said city of Pittsburgh, the said policy of insurance being then in full force, leaving surviving the said plaintiffs and said Joseph Engelking, the said George Voss and the said Joseph Engelking being the persons named in said policy of insurance as the children of said Katharina Engelking; and whereas, the said George Voss died, to wit, at the city of Detroit, on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1880, leaving him surviving, the plaintiffs in this suit, his widow and children, as hereinbefore recited; and thereupon, afterwards, to wit, on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1897, the said defendant, in consideration of the premises, undertook and faithfully promised the said plaintiffs to pay them, the said plaintiffs, the sum of $750, one half of the sum secured by the said policy of insurance, whenever thereafter requested so to do, yet the said defendant has not, although often requested so to do, paid to the said plaintiffs the said sum of money, or any part thereof; to the damage of the said plaintiffs," etc. A demurrer was interposed to this declaration and the demurrer sustained in the court below. Plaintiffs bring error.

44 L. R. A.

Inasmuch as the policy sued upon is contained in the record, and is treated by counsel in their briefs as a part of the declaration, we quote from its provisions. It is recited therein that the insurance company does "hereby insure the life of George Engelking," etc., "for the time of his natural life, in the sum of $1,500, for the sole use and benefit of Katharina Engelking, wife of said insured; the said sum insured to be paid at the office of this company, in Hartford, Connecticut, to the said assured, or her legal representatives, within ninety days after due notice and satisfactory evidence of the death of said insured during the continuance of this policy; or, if the said assured be not then living, the said sum insured shall be payable as above to her children, or to their guardian, if under age," etc. It appears from the declaration that George Voss, one of the alleged children of Katharina Engelking, the beneficiary, died in 1880, and that his mother, Katharina Engelking, died April 1, 1887, nearly seven years afterwards. Defendant's contention is that, as this contract of insurance (when it was reduced to $1,500, and a new policy issued, dated December 22, 1885) was made after the death of George Voss, therefore no money could be payable to these plaintiffs, the widow and children of George Voss, unless the word "children" should be construed to mean grandchildren. There might be some reason for this contention if the contract of insurance had been made originally in 1886; but, on the contrary, the contract was made December 22, 1866. George Voss was then living. The contract was, from time to time thereafter, surrendered for reduction only. The form of the contract was the same as in the original, and undoubtedly each new contract of reduction was based upon the same application, the only changes made being to reduce the amount. The contract, then, must be construed as it stood in 1866, except as the amount has been reduced to $1,500. Katharina Engelking, or her legal representatives, was to receive this sum on the death of George Engelking; but, if she was not living at the death of her husband, the payment was to be made to her children. Katharina Engelking was not living at the time of the death of the assured. Her son George also died before that time, leaving children, who are plaintiffs here. Had Katharina Engelking lived beyond the life of her husband, she would have been entitled to the moneys. She died before the assured, and consequently had George, her son, lived, he, with the other child, if living, would have been entitled by the terms of the policy to receive the moneys thereon. Can it be said that it was within the terms of this policy, or within the contemplation of the parties, that should Katharina die before the assured, leaving no children, but grandchildren, that the policy should lapse? We think not.

In the case of Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 42 Conn. 60, 19 Am. Rep. 530, it appeared that Betsey A. Palmer insured the life of her husband, Benjamin W. Palmer, in the sum of $3,000, payable to herself, if living; if not, to their children. She died before her husband. Amos F. Palmer, one of the children, also died during the lifetime of his father, leaving issue, Charles P. Palmer. The question reserved for the supreme court was whether Charles P. Palmer took an interest in the policy, or whether the whole sum insured vested in the surviving children. It was said by the court: "Amos F. Palmer [the son of the assured] at the time of his decease had an interest in this policy which was transmissible by descent; and consequently the respondent, Charles P. Palmer, is entitled to that portion of the fund which his father would have taken if living." One of the reasons given by the court for that holding was that "the moment this policy was executed and delivered it became property, and the title to it vested in someone; . . . [that it vested in the payees]. These payees consisted of two parties, the wife and the children. As only one party could take and enjoy the property ultimately, it did not vest in all as tenants in common; nor did it vest in either so as to give a right to the present enjoyment of it. It was not, however, a mere expectancy nor a naked possibility, but it was a possibility coupled with a present interest. It was visible, tangible property, and, like any other insurance policy, it was capable of assignment and had an appreciable value. Each party took a conditional, not an absolute, right to the whole policy. It was not a condition precedent, but subsequent. The title vested in point of right immediately, but was liable to be divested upon the happening of a subsequent event. The right to the policy, in a strict sense, was not contingent. The possession and enjoyment of the fund thereby created were postponed to the future, and were contingent. This contingency applied to both parties,—to the wife as well as to the children. Her enjoyment of the fund depended upon her surviving her husband; the children's upon her husband surviving her. In respect to each, it was a then present right to the future enjoyment of property, but it was liable to be defeated by a subsequent contingency, and was certain to be defeated as to one of them. That such a right is recognized as property, and is transmissible to heirs, is a proposition abundantly established by the authorities."

The general rule is that, where the contingency is of such a nature that no interest vests until the happening of the event upon which the estate depends, nothing is transmitted to the heirs. So, too, if the death of a party in whom a contingent interest is vested is an event by reason of its happening before some other event upon which the estate is given to others, the heirs take nothing. In the present case, however, the widow was to take the whole on condition she survived her husband; but, if she departed this life before him, the fund was to be paid in full to her children. These children, then, as in the case of Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Palmer, were vested with this fund on condition that the mother died before the assured. This event happened. The right was more than a mere expectancy or naked possibility. It was a possibility coupled with an interest, which was transmissible to the heirs of the children. This rule was adopted in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Fish, 59 N. H. 126; Winslow v. Goodwin, 7 Met. 363. See also Lockwood v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. 108 Mich. 334. The rule is stated by Chancellor Kent (4 Kent, Com. p. 261), that "all contingent and executory interests are assignable in equity, and will be enforced if made for a valuable consideration; and it is settled that all contingent estates of inheritance, as well as springing and executory uses and possibilities coupled with an interest, where the person to take is certain, are transmissible by descent, and are devisable and assignable." Redf. Wills, p. 389, also lays down the rule that "it seems to be settled beyond all question that all vested estates, even though liable to be defeated by conditions subsequent, are transmissible, and by consequence devisable."

The policy expressly provides that it shall not be assigned, and there is nothing contained in it giving the assured the right to name new beneficiaries. It is therefore certain that George Voss, at the inception of the contract contained in the policy, had a vested interest therein, though contingent, and at his death that interest descended to his widow and children, and they may maintain an action therefor.

The declaration sets forth substantially that Katharina Engelking, at her decease, left two children her surviving. It nowhere appears but that the other child is still living. If so, that child, or the representative of that child, is equally interested in this litigation, and should share the proceeds of this policy with the widow and children of George Voss. That child is not made a party to this suit. The plaintiffs cannot be permitted to thus split up the demand. It is a single cause of action, and the plaintiffs cannot present a part of it in this action, and leave the rest to be litigated in another suit. The rule was settled in Continental Ins. Co. v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co. 93 Mich. 139, and the cases there cited.

The demurrer must be sustained on this ground, but without prejudice to the bringing of an action, in which all the necessary parties are joined.

The other Justices concur.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Montana, ex rel. E. W. KNIGHT, JR., et. al., Appts.,
v.

HELENA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY,
Respt.

(.....Mont.....)

The operation of a line of street railway which has been abandoned cannot be specially enjoined as a legal duty by writ of mandate, where the right of the corporation to use the streets was given by ordinances granting it the franchise and easement of maintaining its railway in the street, subject to forfeiture for failure to operate it, and there is no express provision requiring the maintenance or operation of the line.

(March 31, 1899.)

APPEAL by relators from a judgment of the District Court for Lewis and Clarke County denying a writ of mandamus to require defendant to operate a portion of its street-railway system. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Clayberg, Corbett, & Gunn for appellants.

Messrs. Toole, Bach, & Toole and Massena Bullard, for respondent:

The writ of mandate will not be granted unless the court can place its finger upon a specific duty imposed by the law.

Before the city authorities have directed us what to do there is no positive duty to run the cars at any particular time or times.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington Territory, Dustin, 142 U. S. 492, 35 L. ed. 1092.

A contract to run cars could not be enforced by a mandamus.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 25, 321; State, Mount Pleasant Cemetery Co., v. Paterson, N. & N. Y. R. Co. 43 N. J. L. 505.

There is no particular service which, under any circumstances this court can compel. To merely operate a road is too indefinite.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 538, 539, 561.

A distinction is to be made between a street-railway franchise, granted by the legislature, and the permission of a municipality to the occupation of its streets by a railway company; the latter is not a franchise, but a license, which may be forfeited or abandoned.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 977; Galveston City R. Co. v. Galveston City Street R. Co. 63 Tex. 529; Chicago City R. Co. v. People, Story, 73 Ill. 541; Belleville v. Citizens' Horse R. Co. 152 Ill. 171, 26 L. R. A. 681; People v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 106; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington Territory, Dustin, 142 U. S. 498, 35 L. ed. 1094.

A permission to occupy streets with a railroad track should plainly appear and not be left to be derived by doubtful implication from the generality of language.

Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Chicago, 121 Ill. 176.

There was no authority in the city council at the time of the passage of ordinances Nos. 20 and 212 to grant the franchise mentioned therein, and hence there was no authority to impose a condition that the road should be continuously operated under that franchise.

San Antonio Street R. Co. v. State, Elmdorf, 90 Tex. 520, 35 L. R. A. 602; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington Territory, Dustin, 142 U. S. 492, 35 L. ed. 1092; Com. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 12 Gray, 180; State, Atty. Gen., v. Southern Minnesota R. Co. 18 Minn. 40; People v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 58, 58 Am. Rep. 484.

Per Curiam:

Relators applied to the district court of Lewis and Clarke county for a peremptory writ of mandamus requiring the respondent, a street-railway company, to operate a portion of its system. The affidavit in support of the petition or application discloses the following facts: That respondent is a corporation under the laws of Montana, and for several years last past has been, and now is, engaged in the business of operating street railways in the city of Helena; that on July 13, 1889, and on October 8, 1890, by two several ordinances of the said city there were granted to the predecessors in interest of the respondent the right, license, franchise, and easement of laying down and maintaining in certain streets of Helena a street-railway track, and of operating a line of street cars thereon, by which ordinances it was, among other things, substantially provided that unless the grantees, or their successor or assigns, should within a certain period of time construct and operate a designated portion of the line of railway, the right and privilege so granted would be forfeited as to the parts of the line where the failure occurred; that by § 12 of article 8 of chapter 19 of the Revised Ordinances of the City of Helena of 1890, it is provided: "On all routes the cars shall be run for such number of hours each day, and at such intervals, and allowed to stand for such length of time at either terminus of the road, as the city council may from time to time direct by resolution or order;" that in 1894 respondent succeeded to the rights of the original grantees named in the ordinances; that the respondent, after acquiring the rights granted by the ordinances, operated the railways from 1894 until June 30, 1898, and that on or about the date last mentioned it refused to run its cars on its line known as the "Lenox Addition Line," or to operate the same, although requested so to do, and has abandoned the same, and threatens to, and will, unless otherwise directed, take up and destroy the track built to and through the Lenox addition; and that the railway company is fully equipped with apparatus necessary for its operation. Respondent demurred for insufficiency. The demurrer was sustained, and a judgment entered dismissing the application. Relators appeal.

NOTE.—For mandamus to compel the operation of a railroad or street railway, see also State, Little, v. Dodge City, M. & T. R. Co. (Kan.) 24 L. R. A. 564 and note; also Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Hunt (Ill.) 26 L. R. A. 44 L. R. A.

224: People, Cantrell, v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. (Ill.) 35 L. R. A. 656; San Antonio Street R. Co. v. State, Elmdorf (Tex.) 35 L. R. A. 662; and State, Grinsfelder, v. Spokane Street R. Co. (Wash.) 41 L. R. A. 515.

See also 45 L. R. A. 837.

The writ of mandate may be issued to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Code Civ. Proc. § 1961. Is the operation of the line of street railway which respondent has abandoned an act specially enjoined as a legal duty? We think it is not. It does not appear that the charter of respondent, or the statute under which it was organized, requires it to maintain or operate a line of railway; nor is it claimed that the state has delegated to respondent the right to exercise the power of eminent domain. It does not appear, indeed, whether it owes its existence to a special act of the legislature, or to a compliance with the terms of some general act authorizing the formation of corporations thereunder. At the argument the statement was made that respondent was organized and exists under chapter 25, div. 5, Comp. Stat. 1887, entitled "Corporations for Industrial or Productive Purposes;" but nothing contained in that chapter may be so interpreted as to impose upon the respondent the obligation to continue the operation of any portion of its system of railways. The ordinances of the city are barren of language expressing or implying the intention of the council to impose such duty. On the contrary, they merely grant the right and privilege of constructing, operating, and maintaining railways in particular streets. The precise point arose in State, Elmendorf, v. San Antonio Street R. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 12, where the court held that, under such circumstances as those presented in the case at bar, the specific duty was imposed upon the corporation to operate its line, and that mandamus would issue to compel performance. The case was taken to the supreme court by writ of error to the court of civil appeals, and in the court of last resort the judgment was reversed. San Antonio Street R. Co. v. State, Elmendorf, 90 Tex. 520, 35 L. R. A. 662. The question received the most careful consideration of the supreme court of Texas, and its opinion, which was filed in 1897, is the latest enunciation of the principles applicable thereto. So clearly and accurately does the court state the reasons for its decision, that we, believing them sound, and controlling the determination of this cause, quote and adopt the following: "It is one thing to hold that a company which has accepted a charter authorizing it to construct a line of railroad, with power to condemn property, and has constructed and is maintaining its line, may be compelled to so operate its line as reasonably to meet the necessities of the public; and, as we think, it is quite a different one that a railroad company, by the acceptance of its charter, which simply makes it lawful to construct and maintain a railroad, assumes an obligation to construct it, and to maintain its operation so long as its corporate existence may continue. . . . The legislature, in creating a corporation, has the power to give it an option to do or not to do the acts which it is authorized to perform. On the other hand, it may impose upon the corporation, as the law of its creation, the obligation to exercise to their fullest extent the powers which are granted. In either case the proposed corporators may accept or not; and in the latter, if they do accept, they may be compelled by mandamus to perform the duties so imposed. But to say that in granting a charter to do a public service there is no difference between making it lawful to do an act, and imposing it as an obligation to perform it, is to say that, by reason of the public interest involved, language is to have a different construction and effect from what it would have in statutes in general or in private contracts. Expressions may be found in the opinions of courts which countenance that doctrine, but we think there it is based upon an assumption that cannot be maintained upon sound principle. In legislating, the lawmaking power undertakes to determine what is to the interest of the public, and, under the limitations of the Constitution, it is the sole judge of what will promote the public utility, and must be presumed to be capable of expressing its will in intelligible words. When, therefore, a corporation, whether quasi public or purely private, is granted the privilege of doing an act, and there are in its charter no express terms which make it obligatory to do the act, or other words from which by fair construction that intention can be gleaned, we do not see upon what sound principle the duty can be imposed. The allegations in the petition in this case show that the respondent company was chartered merely for the purpose of constructing and operating street railways in the city. The special act merely gave it the right of corporate existence for the purpose indicated. Tugwell v. Eagle Pass Ferry Co. 74 Tex. 480, 492. The streets were under the control of the city council. The company could do nothing without the consent of the council. The franchise in question was granted by the city council, and the claim is that it is by virtue of that concession, and its acceptance by the company, that the duty arose. But the ordinance (which is quoted above) merely grants 'the privilege' of constructing and maintaining street railways over the lines therein designated. No clearer words of mere permission could have been employed. Not only this, but there is in the ordinance neither sentence, phrase, nor word, that indicates that it was the intention of the council to make it a condition of the acceptance of its grant that the company should be bound to construct and operate railways over the streets which were therein specified. The company are required to observe all the ordinances of the city then existing, but it is not averred that there was any ordinance in existence at the time of the acceptance of the franchise which imposed that obligation. . . . It is clear that the ordinance in this case neither by express terms nor by implication imposes the duty upon the company. If the duty to construct and maintain the line is to be established, it must be upon the assumption that every privilege granted by a legislative body in reference to matter of public interest imposes upon the grantee who accepts it the duty to perform the acts he is allowed to perform. The assumption, in our opinion, is, as we have already intimated, not based upon sound reason; and is in opposition, at least, to the weight of authority. . . . We are of opinion, also, that the fact that the road has been constructed and operated, and that a part is now operated, makes no difference. Under the grant of a privilege to construct and maintain, if, after acceptance, it is permissive only to construct, it is not obligatory to maintain. But we do not hold that the company can, against the will of the city, operate a part of its line, and not the whole. A privilege to establish an entire line of street railway may be granted when the privilege of constructing and operating a part only would not be, and for a failure to operate a part it would seem that the whole might be forfeited. It seems to us that the remedy in this case is to forfeit the franchise to operate the branch line in controversy. . . . We would not be understood as holding that the common law does not impose some duties upon companies chartered as common carriers, which may be enforced by mandamus, although no mention of such duties may be found in their charters. All carriers who undertake to transport goods or passengers for the public assume certain duties to the public; but certainly carriers who are not corporations may at any time discontinue the business, if they elect to do so; and we see no good reason why corporations may not discontinue their enterprises, when the charter does not in express terms or by fair implication forbid it. If it is the will of the legislature, or of a municipal body to whom the power to confer the privilege may have been granted, to impose upon the corporation the duty to construct and to continue to operate the work, instead of a mere permission to do so, it is not difficult so to provide by incorporating into the grant some language which evinces that intention." See also Booth, Street Railways, § 65.

If the council, by resolution adopted or order made under the authority of § 12 of article 3 of chapter 19, supra, should attempt to regulate the running of the cars on a portion of the system not abandoned, but in operation, a question different from that involved in this case, and requiring the application of other principles, would be presented.

The judgment is affirmed.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

V. A. UPCHURCH, Appt.,
v.
STATE of Texas.

(86 Tex. Crim. Rep. 624.)

1. Under a statute permitting discharge of the jury in a felony case upon one of them becoming sick or in case of accident or circumstance occurring to prevent their being kept together, the necessary facts must be judicially determined, and if the judge, when absent from the courtroom, and in the absence of the prisoner, acts upon representations made to him, and excuses a juror, the prisoner will be entitled to release.

2. A plea of former jeopardy should be sustained where after the evidence for the state had been introduced at the former trial the judge, when absent from the courtroom, and in the absence of the prisoner, released a juror upon representations as to the dangerous sickness of his wife which resulted in the discharge of the jury without a verdict.

(December 22, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for McLennan County convicting him of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Former jeopardy by reason of the discharge of the jury in the prisoner's absence.

- I. Introduction.
- II. General rule.
- III. Plea allowed.
- IV. Plea disallowed.

This note is confined to the consideration of the question of former jeopardy by reason of the discharge of the jury in the prisoner's absence, and does not deal with cases which in any way involve the question of his consent to such discharge.

I. Introduction.

The cases would seem to be in harmony in holding that the defendant in a criminal prosecution has a right to be present in court at the time the jury is discharged before they have arrived at a verdict,—especially where his absence is not due to his own voluntary or unlawful acts.

See also 48 L. R. A. 254.

The case of UPCHURCH v. STATE fully supports the holding of the courts in this direction, and is in full accord with the principles declared in the earlier cases of Rudder v. State, 29 Tex. App. 262; State v. Sommers, 60 Minn. 90; State v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 487, 19 Am. Rep. 719; State v. Alman, 64 N. C. 364, 367; Ex parte Tice, 32 Or. 179; and other cases infra, II., III.

A distinction is clearly drawn between a discharge of a jury in the presence of the prisoner and a discharge in his absence, in the case of Maden v. Emmons, 83 Ind. 331, infra, III., which also supports the above rule.

The cases also appear to be unanimous in holding that if the absence of the prisoner is due to his own voluntary and unlawful act he cannot object to the court's action in discharging the jury. This is shown by the cases of People v. Higgins, 59 Cal. 357; Alston v. State, Messrs. Sam B. Thomas, F. H. Robertson, and John W. Davis for appellant.

Mr. Mann Trice, for the State:

The action of the trial court in discharging juror Abbott upon receipt of information that his wife was sick and would probably die before morning, and subsequently discharging the entire panel, thereby making mistrial of the cause, is amply supported by Code Crim. Proc. art. 737, which provides: "If, after the retirement of the jury, in a felony case, any one of them becomes so sick as to prevent the continuance of his duty, or any accident or circumstance occur to prevent their being kept together, the jury may be discharged."

See Ellison v. State, 12 Tex. App. 580; Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 240; 1 Thomp. Trials, § 90.

109 Ala. 51, 53; Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, 72 Am. Dec. 195.

II. General rule.

In Bishop's Crim. Proc. § 272, subd. 2. It is said, if any fact is to be established requiring or necessitating the discharge of the jury before the verdict, as the sickness of one of the panel, plainly the prisoner must be present.

The principle of law which governs the court in this class of cases is that a prisoner accused of felony must appear in person in all proceedings had in his case and the rule therefore necessitates his presence in a capital case through every stage of the trial. Rudder v. State, 29 Tex. App. 262.

While the inability of the jury to agree may be such a necessity as will entitle the court to discharge them, yet if the defendant is prosecuted for a felony he has the right, unless he has waived it, to be present at the time of such discharge; and if in such a case the jury is discharged without the consent of the defendant and during his enforced absence, he cannot be again tried for the same offense, and his plea of former jeopardy will stand. State v. Sommers, 60 Minn. 90.

The case of State v. Hurlburt, 1 Root (Conn.) 40, was also one in which the court held that the defendant must appear or there would be no propriety in receiving a verdict, but the report only shows that the defendant was out upon bail, and it does not further appear whether his absence was voluntary or otherwise.

The discharge of the jury must, however, arise from a necessity determined by law. Miller v. State, 8 Ind. 325.

III. Plea allowed.

In UPCHURCH V. STATE the above statement of the law by Mr. Bishop is upheld and commented upon. In this case the action of the court in discharging the jury was held to be without authority of law, and the defendant was therefore ordered to be discharged upon his plea of former jeopardy. The action of the judge in discharging the jury was not in open court. It was at night some distance away from the courtroom and in the absence, not only of the jury, but of the prisoner and his counsel. It was also taken on the ex parte statement of an officer of the court that someone had informed him that the wife of one of the jurors was very sick.

One of the grounds of the decision of the court in the above case was that the defendant had a right to be heard at the time of the discharge of the jury, and was not forced to wait until a subsequent term in order to ascertain whether the court's action in so discharging the jury was correct or not.

44 L. R. A.

The rule that the prisoner must be present and consent to the discharge is not arbitrarily applied to all times and conditions as it only applies to express waiver by defendant. Contingencies may arise in which the law enters the waiver for him, that is, so far as he might object to again being placed upon trial, for instance, the sickness or death of the judge or a juror pending trial. The necessities of such case force a mistrial by operation of law.

1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 1032; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 272; State v. Smith, 44 Kan. 75, 8 L. R. A. 774.

Henderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and given ten years in the

In Rudder v. State, 29 Tex. App. 262, the defendant's plea of former jeopardy in a prosecution for murder in the second degree was upheld where the jury at the former trial had failed to agree upon their verdict and were discharged by the court without the consent, and in the absence, of the defendant, who was confined in the county jail under order of the court, and over the objections of his counsel. In this case the jury had been absent some forty-eight hours.

It is perfectly settled that in a trial for felony no order which may prejudice the prisoner can rightfully be made in his absence. State v. Alman, 64 N. C. 364, 367. In this case the prisoner was indicted for murder, and the jury were discharged during his absence, and also during that of his counsel, upon their reporting to the court that they were unable to agree upon a verdict after a deliberation of about forty-five hours. The court ordered the prisoner discharged.

And the discharge of the jury worked a release of a prisoner indicted for an attempt to kill where the cause was submitted to the jury, who reported to the judge that they were unable to agree, whereupon he discharged them without notice to, or the consent of, the defendant, or of his attorney, and in the absence of both. State v. Shuchardt, 18 Neb. 454. In this case the jury had only been in consultation eleven hours, and not long enough to show that there was no probability of their agreeing, and therefore the court had no power to discharge them on that ground alone, without the consent of the defendant, and it was also shown that the court remained in session for some days afterwards.

The plea of former jeopardy was upheld in Finch v. State, 53 Miss. 363, 365, upon an indictment for grand larceny, where the jury returned into court, announced the prisoner guilty, and were thereupon discharged without the prisoner's presence, who had, by order of the judge, been placed in jail, and the jury were thereupon recalled. The court held that the accused had the right to be present when the verdict was received, and that the court had no right to discharge the jury under the circumstances, and that the defect was not cured by the subsequent recalling of the jury, as they could not after a discharge be lawfully reassembled.

In State v. Smith, 44 Kan. 75, 8 L. R. A. 774, the sickness of one of the jurors was reported to the court in the absence of the prisoner. The judge in open court, and when the defendant's counsel was present, but the prisoner was absent in jail, discharged the panel. On these facts the plea of former jeopardy was penitentiary; hence this appeal. On the trial of the case, appellant interposed a plea of former jeopardy. The plea set out that the case against this defendant had been tried at a former term of the court; that pending the trial, and after all the evidence for the state had been introduced, and the court had adjourned over night, the wife of one of the jurors was reported to be very ill, the report being made to the sheriff. At about 12 o'clock of that night, the sheriff reported the fact, as communicated to him by a neighbor of the juror, Jesse Abbott, that the wife of said Abbott was taken suddenly sick, and not expected to live, said report being made to the judge at his room, some distance from the courthouse; whereupon the court directed the sheriff to discharge said juror, Jesse Abbott, and permit him to go home to his wife, which was accordingly done. In the morning, when the court opened, but eleven of the jurors appeared, defendant and his counsel being present and ready to proceed with the trial. The defendant and his counsel for the first time were then apprised of the action of the judge in discharging said juror. They stated that they were unwilling to proceed without a full jury, and the court then proceeded to, and did, discharge the rest of the jury, on its own motion, over the protest of the defendant, and continued said case until the next regular term of the court. This action of the court was properly excepted to at the time. This plea was in propria forma. On the trial of the case, the judgment discharging the jury at the former trial, and reciting the facts, was presented to the court and the action of the court invoked on said plea, which was overruled, and the plea per-upheld upon the ground that the record ought to show affirmatively the existence of the fact which induced such order and justified the exercise of the power, and, as the sickness did not happen in the immediate presence of the court the fact ought to be established in accordance with the rules which govern in all cases where a fact ought to be judicially established.

And the plea was held to constitute a sufficient bar to any further prosecution in State v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 487, 19 Am. Rep. 719, where the defendant, who was indicted for murder, was absent by reason of his confinement and restraint in jail when the jury were discharged upon their reporting to the court that they could not agree upon a verdict.

In this case the jury had been deliberating on their verdict for thirty-two hours, and their answer showed that there was no probability of their agreeing on a verdict.

The fact that the prisoner was not present was the ground of the holding of the court in the above case, as the court distinctly states that in that case the discharge of the jury would have been proper if the defendant had been present in court, even though he had objected to the discharge, unless he had shown some good ground why the jury should not have been discharged, and that in such a case the discharge could not have been pleaded in bar of further prosecution of the case. State v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 487, 19 Am. Rep. 719.

So, the court upheld the plea of former jeopardy in People v. Cage, 48 Cal. 323, 17 Am. Rep. 436, for the reason that if the jury were unable to agree they should have been called into court and have announced their inability in the presence of the court and of the defendant, and that in the absence of this or some equivalent showing, the court was not authorized to make an order of discharge upon that ground. In this case the defendant was tried and convicted of murder in the first degree. And after the jury had retired to consider their verdict the court ordered the sheriff to proceed to the door of the jury room and inquire if they had agreed upon a verdict, to which they replied that they had not and could not agree, and the sheriff reported their reply to the court, whereupon the court ordered an adjournment of the term, which would not by operation of law have expired until the evening of the ensuing day.

And the court upheld the plea of former jeopardy in Nolan v. State, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281, 53 Ga. 137, where the defendant was indicted for murder and the jury returned a verdict of voluntary manslaughter and were discharged in the absence of his counsel, and also that of the defendant who was in jail, and without his consent.
44 L. R. A.

In this case the court distinctly pointed out that the mischief was done by discharging the jury without any legal necessity and without obtaining from it something that the law could recognize as a verdict, the error lying in the receiving of a formal verdict in the prisoner's absence, as he had a right to such a verdict as each of the jurors would avow before his face.

In Maden v. Emmons, 83 Ind. 331, which was an indictment for larceny, the jury, while deliberating upon their verdict, dispersed without the knowledge of the court, counsel, or of defendant, upon their discovering that one of their number was not a resident of the county, and it was held that this was equivalent to an acquittal and placed the defendant in a position of former jeopardy upon a subsequent trial.

In the above case the court pointed out that a discharge of a jury may be proper where it appears that one of them is absent, but drew a distinction between a discharge when the prisoner is present and when he is not so present.

In State v. Leunig, 42 Ind. 541, the defendant indicted for murder was out on bail and during the adjournment of the court, while the jury were deliberating upon their verdict, the bailiff took the jury into a public square where he left them, and went to the defendant's saloon, and got some beer and gave it to the jury to drink without the consent or knowledge of the court. The court discharged the jury and also the defendant. It was held upon appeal that as the discharge of the jury was unnecessary there was no error in discharging the defendant. In this case it does not further appear whether the defendant was present in court at the time of the discharge of the jury or not.

The case of Ex parte Tice, 32 Or. 179, 192, although it does not raise the exact point, cites with approval the decision of the court in State v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 487, 19 Am. Rep. 719, to the effect that even where grounds for the discharge of a jury do exist the prisoner must be present when the order discharging the jury is made. In that case the jury were discharged on a Sunday as they had failed to agree on a verdict, and the court stated that there was no power to so discharge them, as § 208, Hill's Anno. Laws, was limited by § 928, and that the business referred to in the latter section, which might be presented on a Sunday, did not include the discharge of a jury.

The case of Miller v. State, 8 Ind. 325, also supports the above theory, but inasmuch as the defendant's appeal from an order of the court denying his motion for discharge was not prop-mitted to go to the jury, and the defendant excepted. The matters contained in the plea on the trial of the case were presented to the jury, and proof made, said proof being in substantial accord with the statement heretofore made, the main points of which were not controverted, but conceded to be true. When the jury were charged, appellant asked a charge, in substance, directing the jury to find that said plea of former jeopardy was true, and to acquit the defendant thereon. This was refused by the court, and an exception reserved. The court's charge on this point was as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case bearing upon the issue of former jeopardy, that the wife of the juror, Abbott, was sick, and that her condition upon the night in question was such that it was necessary that Mr. Abbott be with her immediately, then, if you so find, you will find said plea to be untrue; but if you find that said Abbott's wife was not sick, or that if she was sick, that her condition was not such that created a necessity that said Abbott should go to the bedside of his wife, then, if you so find, then you will find said special plea true, or, if you have a reasonable doubt thereon, then you will find said special plea to be true. But, in determining this issue, you must consider all of the facts and circumstances as they appeared upon the night in question, to wit: May 2d, 1895, and not as they appear at this day." So the question as to former jeopardy, which involved the action of the court in discharging the jury, is fairly and properly presented to this court for determination. It is not necessary in this case to discuss the question as to whether it is competent for the court, under our Conerly taken the defendant's motion was dismissed. See this case infra, III.

In State v. M'Kee, 1 Ball. L. 651, 21 Am. Dec. 499. It is said that the discretion of the court in discharging a jury is a legal discretion, and must be exercised in conformity to known rules. In this case the jury were discharged by the court upon the ground that the foreman had declared that he would not convict the defendant or any other white person of murdering a slave. It does not, however, appear whether the defendant was present or not at the time of the discharge.

The case of Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed, 550, also shows that the prisoner must be present during the trial and until final judgment is rendered, and that if he is absent either by reason of his imprisonment or by his escape, there is a want of jurisdiction. This case, however, was not one of a discharge of a jury by the court, but was one in which the prisoner escaped from custody during the time in which the jury had retired to consider their verdict, and was not present in court at the time of the verdict rendered.

In Jones v. State, 97 Ala. 77, the jury returned their verdict at night after the adjournment of court, and the same was received by the clerk and read, whereupon the jury disbanded and went to their homes. The discharge of the jury under such circumstances was held to be unauthorized and to operate as an acquittal of the defendant. The record in this case did not show that the prisoner was present, but it showed that this proceeding was had without any instruction from the court, and without the consent or sanction of the defendant or his attorney.

IV. Plea disallowed.

In State v. Wamire, 16 Ind. 357, it is said to be settled in that state that the court is not bound to discharge the jury because of the voluntary absence of the defendant during the trial, where he was present at its commencement.

There was held to be no former jeopardy in a case in which the court discharged the jury in consequence of the act of the defendant in voluntarily absenting himself from the court, as in that case he made it impossible for the jury to render a verdict, and created the necessity of a discharge without a verdict. People v. Higgins, 59 Cal. 357. In this case the defendant fled during the progress of the trial, and the efforts of the court to procure his presence were unsuccessful.

A plea of former jeopardy was held not to 44 L. R. A.

contain sufficient merit to overrule a demurrer. In a case in which the trial was not concluded on the day on which it began, and upon the court convening again the defendant did not appear and was not present to answer the charge, whereupon the case was withdrawn from the jury who were discharged, and the case continued. Alston v. State, 109 Ala. 51, 53.

And from the case of State v. Battle, 7 Ala. 259, it would appear that upon the defendant's not appearing in court at the time the jury return the verdict the court has power to order the jury to be discharged without giving a verdict, and thus direct a mistrial, and in such a case the defendant cannot take advantage of the discharge of the jury in his absence. In this case the defendant had fled.

In People v. Smalling, 94 Cal. 112, 117, the defendant was not present at the time the jury was discharged, but his presence had been waived by his consent. There was a legal necessity for the discharge of the jury because they were unable to agree. It was held that his objection to the jury's discharge at that time would have been ineffectual, and, as his right to be present had been waived, his plea of once in jeopardy was no bar to a further prosecution.

The plea of former jeopardy was held to be no bar to a further prosecution on the same charge in a case in which the jury were, with the prisoner's consent, instructed to find a sealed verdict if they should agree before the opening of the court on the following day, where, during the night-time, they informed the sheriff they had agreed upon a verdict, which they delivered to the sheriff and dispersed with the consent and permission of the bailiff, but reassembled the next morning and returned their verdict and were discharged by the court. Terwin v. State, 37 Fla. 396.

In this case the real ground of objection to the discharge of the jury was the absence of the defendant's consent thereto, but the case does not show whether he was present in court or not, and the court distinctly points out that the consent of the accused is not necessary to the proper discharge of the jury where such discharge becomes otherwise necessary. Ibid.

In Miller v. State, 8 Ind. 325, the prisoner was indicted for grand larceny, and after the jury had been out twelve hours they returned and stated that they could not agree. He was not brought up from the jail, nor consulted, but the court on its own motion then discharged the jury over the objections of the prisoner's counsel, who moved for the discharge of the prisoner on the ground that the discharge of the jury operated as an acquittal, but the motion stitution and laws, to discharge a juror on account of the sickness of some member of the juror's family, pending the trial of a person charged with felony. The question we will consider is whether or not the court is authorized to take such action as was taken here, in the absence of the prisoner, and not in open court. Our statute provides (Code Crim. Proc. 1895, art. 737) as follows: "If, after the retirement of the jury in a felony case, any one of them become so sick as to prevent the continuance of his duty, or any accident or circumstance occur to prevent their being kept together, the jury may be discharged." Conceding that the legislature had the power to enact this article, and conceding that the severe illness of the wife of a juror is such a circumstance as would authorize the discharge of the jury,—propositions about which we express no opinion, because unnecessary,—still, it was absolutely necessary to judicially ascertain the fact of sickness before the jury could be legally discharged. This apprehends a judicial finding. It is a step in the progress of his trial, and an important one, so far as defendant's rights are concerned. Mr. Bishop says, that in all trials for felony, at every material stage in the trial, it is absolutely necessary that the accused be present, else there can be no valid judgment against him. 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 273. And he also lays down the following: If any fact is to be established requiring or necessitating the discharge of the jury before the verdict, as the sickness of one of the panel, plainly the prisoner must be present. § 272, subd. 2. We also quote from the well-considered case of State v. Smith, 44 Kan. 75, 8 L. R. A. 774. This was a case that came up much in the same way as the case before us, and under a statute somewhat similar to ours, with reference to the discharge of a juror on account of sickness.

was denied and the prisoner was ordered to be taken in custody and held for another jury. The court on appeal held that the prisoner should have been discharged, but as the appeal was irregularly taken it was dismissed. In this case the fact that the jury reported that they could not agree after twelve hours' consultation did not make the discharge a necessity determined by law.

Where during the progress of the trial and in the absence of the prisoner and of his counsel, and without their knowledge, the court of its own motion permitted the jury to separate over an adjournment after instructing them as required by statute, and the defendant, although informed of the fact at the next session of the court, made no objection except in his motion for a new trial, he was taken to have waived any error in the action of the court. Henning v. State, 106 Ind. 386, 55, Am. Rep. 756.

In Wheelock v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 38 S. W. 182, the bill of exceptions showed affirmatively that the jury had been kept together for such a time as rendered it altogether improbable that they would agree upon a verdict, and that the defendant was present and consented to the discharge of the jury, but as he offered no evidence showing that the same was a false and fraudulent entry, and that in truth and in fact he was not present and did not agree to the discharge of the jury, the court affirmed the judgment of conviction, and distinguished 44 L. R. A.

In that case one of the jurors was taken sick, and it was reported to the court, in the absence of the prisoner, that he was unable to be present in the court during the trial, on account of his illness. The judge thereupon, in open court, and when defendant's counsel were present (but the prisoner was absent in jail), discharged the panel, and the question of jeopardy was presented. Among other things, the learned judge, in deciding said case, uses this language: "When an order is made by a trial court discharging a jury without verdict, to which has been committed the question of the guilt or innocence of a prisoner charged with a crime, the record ought to show affirmatively the existence of the fact which induced such order, and justified the exercise of such extraordinary power. . . . Now the record in this case shows that one of the causes for which the trial court is authorized to discharge a jury in a criminal case, by the statute of this state, happened on this trial, to wit, the sickness of a juror. The sickness did not happen in the immediate presence of the court. The juror took sick at home, during a recess of the court, and the fact of sickness had to be established in accordance with the rules that govern in all cases when a fact is to be judicially established, and made a finding upon which to base a legal conclusion or judicial action." And, in conclusion upon this point, the court says: "We think that error was committed in determining the sickness of a juror as a cause for the discharge of the jury, in the absence of the appellants." Now, in the case at bar, the action of the judge was not in open court at all. It was at night, some distance away from the courtroom, in the absence, not only of the juror, but of the prisoner and his counsel. Not only so, but this action was taken on the ex parte statement of an officer of the court that someone had in-the case from that of Rudder v. State, 29 Tex. App. 262, supra, II.

In Shaffer v. State, 27 Ind. 131, the discharge of the jury was held not to work a discharge of the defendant where ample time had been spent in deliberation and they were unable to agree. In this case the record does not show whether the defendant was present in court on the return of the jury, or whether he assented to their discharge, but at the same term he filed a written motion claiming his discharge on the ground that the jury had been discharged without his consent, and that he could not again be put in jeopardy.

In Price v. State, 36 Miss. 531, the prisoner was not present owing to his escape or voluntary withdrawal from the court at the time of the rendition of the verdict and the discharge of the jury by the court. The question of the power of the court to discharge a jury prior to verdict was discussed in this case, but the question of the right of the court to do so without the presence of the defendant was not considered. The case, however, shows that the absence of the defendant at the time the jury return their verdict must not be due to his own unlawful acts, and it may therefore be taken that the voluntary or unlawful absence of the prisoner at the time of the discharge of the jury cannot be taken advantage of by him. See People v. Higgins, 59 Cal. 357, et ubi supra.

E. W.

formed him that the wife of the juror, Abbott, was very sick. Could the court, under such circumstances, make a judicial finding of so important a fact in the progress of this trial—one which involved the discharge of the jury? If so, the discharge of a juror in any case would appear to be a matter entirely within the arbitrary discretion of the judge—a power which he could exercise in the absence of the prisoner, and without any judicial procedure, to ascertain the fact which would authorize his action. Such arbitrary power would place it entirely within the province of a judge to discharge a jury of his own motion, and without investigation. If, in any given case, he should desire the conviction of a defendant, and it should appear that the jury was not likely to convict, that the state had not entirely made out its case, by his arbitrary discretion he could discharge the jury, and upon a subsequent trial, the state being better prepared, secure conviction. This was the practice of the courts in the days of the Stuarts, but happily not so now. It is well settled that the court's discretion is a judicial discretion, and not an arbitrary discretion. Take this case as it appears to us from the subsequent trial, in which the facts were presented; if this investigation had been had when the defendant was arraigned on his first trial, if he had been present, and had objected to the discharge of the jury, and insisted, as he had a right to do, upon an examination as to the necessity for such discharge, the record, as it now presents itself to us, we think, would have shown that there was no such existing necessity for the discharge of the juror. At a subsequent term of the court, not at the time the jury was discharged, evidence was received bearing upon the fact as to whether the juror's wife was sick or not. The testimony received relating to that fact, as we have said above, shows that the jury ought not to have been discharged, but the investigation into the facts should have been made before the jury was discharged, and not at the time the plea was interposed. The defendant had a right to be heard then, and not forced to wait until a subsequent term to ascertain whether the court had acted correctly or not. In Wright v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 158, in a case involving the question of jeopardy, this court used the following language: "Again, the record informs us simply that the court discharged the jury. We are left to inference as to the reasons prompting him to this action. There should have been a judgment of the court finding and declaring that the jury had been kept together such a length of time as to render it altogether improbable that they could agree"—citing Adams v. State, 34 Fla. 185. If the court is to find and ascertain the fact which authorizes him to act in discharging a jury, this apprehends a trial—a trial in open court, in the presence of the accused, and not an ex parte proceeding, at which he is neither present nor consenting.

Because, in our opinion, the action of the court in discharging the jury was without authority of law, the defendant having once been placed in jeopardy, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the defendant ordered to be discharged.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Re Application of Charles KNOWACK and Wife, Respts.,
For Restoration of Their Children in Custody of the CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY of Rochester, New York, Appt.

(158 N. Y. 482.)

The restoration to their parents of infants committed to a charitable institution by a court or magistrate of competent jurisdiction under Penal Code, § 291, is within the general jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York as a court of chancery, and is also within the power conferred on the court by Laws 1884, chap. 438, providing for the return of pauper children to the custody of their parents when the interests of the children shall be promoted thereby, and the parents are fit, competent, and able to give them proper support and education.

(April 18, 1899.)

NOTE.—As to state guardianship of children, see Whalen v. Olmstead (Conn.) 15 L. R. A. 598, and note.

For commitment of children to reformatories without any conviction of crime, see State, Olmson, v. Brown (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 691, and note.

44 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for Monroe County in favor of petitioners in a proceeding to regain possession of petitioner's minor children. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Hopkins, for appellant:

Persons committed by the final judgment of a court or magistrate of competent jurisdiction, in a criminal proceeding, cannot be discharged by the supreme court by virtue of its general equitable powers.

The commitment of these children was a final commitment, in a criminal proceeding, by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Re Forbes, 4 Park. Crim. Rep. 611.

When a child is finally committed to a charitable institution, under § 291 of the Penal Code, there is no way by which the institution can be deprived of its custody except by the consent or in consequence of the misconduct of the institution itself; unless, of course, the commitment is directly and successfully attacked by appeal, under § 749 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or by habeas corpus proceeding.

When a child is finally committed under § 291 of the Penal Code, the right of its parents to its custody absolutely ceases, and thereafter they have no better standing in court, on any question relating to the disposition of the child, than a stranger in blood.

Laws 1896, chap. 272, § 61; People, Zeese, v. Masten, 79 Hun, 580; State, Cunningham, v. Ray, 63 N. H. 406, 56 Am. Rep. 529; People, Van Heck, v. New York Catholic Protectory, 101 N. Y. 195; People, Van Riper, v. New York Catholic Protectory, 106 N. Y. 604; People v. Giles, 152 N. Y. 136; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 14 N. Y. 575.

Mr. Delbert C. Hebbard, for respondents:

The supreme court has jurisdiction of all matters pertaining to the care, custody, and control of infants. In this proceeding it has jurisdiction to order that the above-named infants be returned to their parents when, in the opinion of that court, it will be for the best interests of said children, and when that court is satisfied that the parents are able, fit, and competent persons to have the care, custody, and control of said infants.

De Manneville v. De Manneville, 4 Kent, Com. 195, "note"; Wellesley v. Beaufort, 2 Russ. Ch. 1; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 14 N. Y. 575; People, Johnson, v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. 395.

These children have, since the 5th day of June, 1895, been a charge upon the poor fund of the city of Rochester. They come clearly within the definition of poor persons as found in § 2 of the Poor Laws, 2 Birdseye's Rev. Stat., Code, and General Laws, 2d ed. p. 2294, and as such have been in the care and custody of the Children's Aid Society.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding based upon a petition addressed to the supreme court of the state of New York by Charles Knowack and Johanna, his wife, praying that their four children, now in the custody of the Children's Aid Society of Rochester, be restored to their care and control. At the time this petition was verified, on the 22d of December, 1897, the four children of the petitioners—the only issue of the marriage—were aged, respectively, Frank, twelve years; Gustave, eleven years; Emil, eight years; and Freddie, six years. It appears that some two years before the present application was made, and on the 5th day of June, 1895, these children were committed by a police justice of the city of Rochester to the care of the Children's Aid Society, under § 291 of the Penal Code, on the ground of the intemperance and neglect of their parents. Each child was committed by a separate commitment, which was headed "Destitution Commitment," and recited that the child "was found not having any home or other place of abode, or proper guardianship, being in a state of want and suffering, and destitute of means of support, in violation of statute," etc. The child was to remain in charge of the society "until therefrom discharged in manner prescribed by law, not to exceed the period of its minority." Section 291 of the Penal Code is contained in chapter 3, entitled "Abandonment and Other Acts of Cruelty to Children." This section is somewhat lengthy, and provides that any child, actually or apparently under the age of sixteen years, who is found under certain circumstances, may be duly committed. Subdivision 2 states: "Not having any home or other place of abode or proper guardianship; or who has been abandoned or improperly exposed or neglected, by its parents or other person or persons having it in charge, or being in a state of want or suffering; or [subdivision 3] destitute of means of support," etc. So far as this record discloses the facts, the petitioners do not dispute the regularity of the original commitments, nor does the Children's Aid Society controvert the allegations in the petition and accompanying affidavits. The petitioners aver that whatever ground might have existed on the 5th day of June, 1895, for the removing of the children from their care and custody has been fully and absolutely removed; and that since the last-named day they have been sober, industrious, and have tried by all means possible to live honorable and respectable lives. It further appears that the father and mother are both earning good weekly wages for persons in their position; that they are in comfortable financial circumstances, and have a substantial bank account with the Rochester Savings Bank of the city of Rochester, and own good and valuable chattels and securities; that they are free from all debts, and are in comparatively independent circumstances for persons in their station in life. The petitioners further aver that they are in every way able, willing, and desirous of caring for their four children, who are now a charge upon the poor fund of the city of Rochester for their food, clothing, and care, and that all the facts touching their willingness, ability, and desire are more fully set forth and confirmed by the affidavits attached to the petition. The petitioners further show that they have made frequent demands of the president and other officers of the Children's Aid Society for the return of their children, and that they even offered that the children be returned to them on trial, to be taken away again without resort to law, whenever the petitioners' conduct might seem to the officers of the society to justify such proceeding, but the officers have at all times refused to comply with these demands and requests. It further appears that the children are all anxious and desirous of returning to the home of their parents. Annexed to the petition are a number of affidavits of third parties, corroborating, in detail, the allegations that the petitioners are sober, industrious, and for a long time have been living honorable and respectable lives. The truth of the allegations of the petition and affidavits is admitted; the Children's Aid Society, in substance, demurring to these facts. It is claimed by the learned counsel for the society that persons committed by a final judgment of a court or magistrate of competent jurisdiction in a criminal proceeding cannot be discharged by the supreme court in the exercise of its general equitable powers. Counsel further states that when a child is finally committed to a charitable institution, under § 291 of the Penal Code, there is no way by which the institution can be deprived of its custody, except by the consent or in consequence of the misconduct of the institution itself, unless the commitment is directly and successfully attacked by appeal under § 749 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or by a habeas corpus proceeding.

The main position of the society is based upon an erroneous conception of the situation now presented. This is not a criminal proceeding; there is no prisoner and no crime has been committed. We have already called attention to the fact that the section of the Penal Code (291) under which these commitments were made is contained in the chapter (3) entitled "Abandonment and Other Acts of Cruelty to Children." The state, as parens patrie, by this legislation seeks to protect children who are destitute and abandoned by those whose duty it is to care for and support them. To regard proceedings under this benign statute as criminal in their nature, and hedged about with all of those consequences that follow a judgment of conviction for crime, is to confound remedies. The law relating to the commitment of minors to penal and charitable institutions is largely of American origin, and rests upon statutory provisions. These commitments are naturally relegated into three classes,—commitments as a punishment for crime, commitments where the proceeding is quasi criminal, and commitments for care and guardianship. 30 Cent. L. J. 53. In the first class are cases of actual crime, where the proceeding often results in the commitment of the defendant to a reformatory by reason of his minority, rather than to send him to a penitentiary or state prison, where he would be thrown in contact with hardened criminals. Notwithstanding this consideration extended to the defendant, he stands in the attitude of a criminal duly convicted of crime. The second, or quasi criminal, class may be illustrated by the case of a parent or guardian who makes application and complaint to a magistrate, asking the commitment of a minor child to some reformatory or charitable institution on the ground that he is incorrigible or beyond domestic control. The main object of such a proceeding is to reform a child, if possible, and this commitment is governed by different rules than either of the other classes. The third class, where the state intervenes to care for and protect the homeless and destitute child, is far more numerous, and is the one that embraces the case at bar.

The single question presented by this appeal is whether the supreme court of the state of New York, having general jurisdiction in law and equity, and being vested with all the jurisdiction which was possessed and exercised by the court of chancery in England at the time of our separation from the mother country, except as modified by the Constitution and statutory provisions (Code Civ. Proc. § 217), has power to intervene in this case, and restore these children to the custody and care of their parents. It certainly is a most startling doctrine that a child, who is a public charge and has been committed for such reasons as are disclosed in this case, cannot be restored to parental care and control, where conditions have changed and are such that neither in law nor morals the separation of parent and child should be continued. We are not now called upon to decide what effect legal adoption in good faith by third parties would have on an application like this. The Children's Aid Society stands in this proceeding upon the bald proposition of law already stated, that without its consent to their release these children are to remain in the custody of this institution during their minorities. As the youngest child was only three and one half years of age when thus committed, it would be subjected to legal custody for a period of more than seventeen years. This record fails to inform us as to the charter provisions of the Children's Aid Society. Stripped of all form and technicality, we have this situation: Intemperate parents are deemed to be unfit custodians of their children, and the state steps in and cares for and supports them for the time being. It now appears that the parents have reformed, are living honorable lives, and are abundantly able to care for their children. It seems self-evident that public policy and every consideration of humanity demand the restoration of these children to parental control. If the court of chancery can interfere and take the child from the custody of its parents, it can also intervene and restore it to their care, in the exercise of the same discretionary power. A recent English writer declares that the court of chancery has, from time to time, exercised the widest powers of interference in behalf of infants who stood in need of its protection. Eversley, Dom. Rel. 2d ed. 501. Chancellor Kent said that "courts of justice may, in their sound discretion, and when the morals or safety or interests of the children strongly require it, withhold the infants from the custody of the father or mother, and place the care and custody of them elsewhere." 2 Kent, Com. *205. The arbitrary character of this power is well illustrated in two English cases often cited. Lord Thurlow, in a case where it appeared that the father's affairs were embarrassed, that he was an outlaw and resided abroad, and that his son, an infant, had considerable estate, and that the mother lived apart from her husband and principally directed the child's education, restrained the father from interfering without the consent of two persons nominated for that purpose; and, with reference to the objection that the court had no jurisdiction, he added that he knew there was such a notion, but he was of opinion that the court had arms long enough to reach such a case, and to prevent the father from prejudicing the health or future prospects of the child, and he signified that he should act accordingly. Cruze v. Hunter, 2 Bro. Ch. 510, note, 2 Cox, Ch. Cas. 242. And see Whitfield v. Hales, 12 Ves. Jr. 492. The leading case on this subject is Wellesley v. Beaufort, 2 Russ. Ch. 1, which went on appeal from Lord Eldon to the House of Lords, and in which the learned lord chancellor was unanimously affirmed. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 2 Bligh, N. R. 124; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 5th ed. § 246. Lord Redesdale, in a luminous opinion in the House of Lords, goes over the ground of the jurisdiction of the court of chancery in case of infants. Speaking of the case before him, he said: "Upon what ground is the court required to maintain these children out of their property, and not at the expense of the father? It is because that father is an improper person to have the care of these children; and, as it is proposed that their maintenance and education should be put out of his control, it is therefore as he may refuse to afford them more than will supply them with their bare maintenance, which the law of the country would require from every person who had the means to maintain his children. It is for that reason that the court is to take upon itself, out of the property that those children have, instead of accumulating the income of their property for their benefit, till they should be capable of taking possession of it themselves, to apply a part of it for their maintenance and education." It appears generally in this case that the father was a dissolute and abandoned character, and totally unfit to discharge the duties of a parent towards his children. It was under these circumstances that the court of chancery interfered and took the children from his custody and control. It is such a power as is here disclosed that is now exercised by the supreme court of the state of New York; and, in a case where there has been interference by the court to protect and care for the child at the public's expense, that power seems only to be limited by the necessities of the case, having a due regard for the welfare of the infant. This power is fully recognized in Wilcox v. Wilcox, 14 N. Y. 576, where it was held that a court of equity has jurisdiction and authority to take a minor child from a guardian appointed by a surrogate on the death of its father, and to deliver it to the care and custody of its mother, where this is for the advantage of the child. In the case cited the court was set in motion by a petition of the mother. It appeared that the respondent and Nathan B. Wilcox, the son of the appellant, were married in 1838; they had two daughters, one nine and the other seven years of age; that after the birth of the first daughter her mother was in too feeble health to take care of her, and she was placed and taken care of in the family of her grandfather, where she afterwards continued to reside except during short intervals. Within a few years after the birth of the first child the father failed in business and became intemperate, and the respondent, with her other daughter, went to her father's and there resided with him until his death, in 1852. The father was of large estate, and by his will made ample provision for his daughter and the children. The father of the children died in 1854 without having made any legal disposition or guardianship of the eldest child. A few days after his death the grandfather was appointed by the surrogate the general guardian of the eldest child. The respondent was at this time temporarily absent from the state, and the appointment was made without notice to her or any other relatives. It thus appears that the eldest daughter had been placed in the custody of the grandfather voluntarily, and had remained there for years; and yet, when circumstances had changed, and the mother became possessed of ample means, the court intervened, and restored the child to the custody of the mother, notwithstanding the relations that had grown up in the grandfather's family between the child and other relatives there residing, and without regard to the letters of guardianship that had been duly issued to the grandfather. While the decision in this case was rendered upon a divided court, there was no difference of opinion as to the main proposition that the court was possessed of this power. The only question upon which the judges were at variance was whether the power could be exercised at chambers or at a regular session of the special term. In later cases it has been held that considerations affecting the health and welfare of a child may justify the court in withholding the custody of it temporarily even from the father acting as its legal guardian, and that they were so purely matters of discretion with the court of original jurisdiction that this court will not review the conclusion thereon, unless some manifest error or abuse of power is made to appear. Re Welch, 74 N. Y. 299; People, Pruyne, v. Walts, 122 N. Y. 238. Many other cases might be cited illustrating the general and ample powers of the court of chancery in the premises, but it is unnecessary.

It is urged on behalf of the petitioners and respondents that the restoration of these children can be effected under the general provisions of the poor law of the state (5 Rev. Stat. [Banks & Bros. 9th ed.] p. 3373), on the ground that they have, since the 5th day of June, 1895, been a charge upon the poor fund of the city of Rochester. Section 2 enacts: "A poor person is one unable to maintain himself; and such person shall be maintained by the town, city, county, or state according to the provisions of this chapter." Further on the section provides: "The town poor are such persons as are required by law to be relieved or supported at the expense of the town or city." Section 56 provides, in detail, for the commitment of poor children under sixteen years of age. Chapter 438, Laws 1884, entitled "An Act to Revise and Consolidate the Statutes of the State Relating to the Custody and Care of Indigent and Pauper Children by Orphan Asylums and Other Charitable Institutions," is still in force. See 2 Birdseye's Rev. Stat. 2d ed. p. 2308, where he inserts § 4 of this chapter as § 56d of the poor law. The section deals generally with the removal of children from one institution to another, and also provides for delivery of a child into the custody of the parent. It reads as follows: "But no parent of such pauper child, so in such asylum or other institution as in this section aforesaid, shall be entitled to the custody thereof, except in pursuance of a judgment or order of a court or judicial ofsicer of competent jurisdiction, adjudging or determining that the interests of such child will be promoted thereby, and that such parent is fit, competent, and able to duly maintain, support, and educate such child." We have here disclosed a statutory scheme in regard to the committal and subsequent discharge from custody of poor children that is practically in line with the general chancery powers of the supreme court. In the case of People, Inebriates' Home, v. Comptroller of Brooklyn, 152 N. Y. 399, Chief Judge Andrews, while writing upon a kindred subject, states (at page 407, 152 N. Y.), as follows: "The duty of the state is discharged when it affords necessary relief to those whose support is cast upon the public, and it is plain that it should be given for such a length of time only as necessity demands. There is nothing more to be deprecated than encouragement to pauperism, or the extension of public aid to those who are able to support themselves, or the keeping of inmates in charitable institutions, whether children or adults, beyond the time that they can be self-supporting, or when they could be safely allowed to shift for themselves. Nor are institutions of charity subserving their proper function when they relieve friends or relatives of indigent persons, able and bound to maintain them, from the burden of their support." It is true that the petition in this case is an appeal to the general equitable powers of the court, and is not filed in the statutory proceeding; but it is evident that whether in the supreme court, or based upon the statute, the questions controlling are the same, to wit, the best interests of the child, and the ability of the parent, both moral and financial, to discharge his duty in the premises.

The order of the Appellate Division should be affirmed, without costs.

All concur.

Albert HERTER, Respt.,
v.

Jeremiah MULLEN et al., Appts.

(150 N. Y. 28.)

The retention of one room in a leased building for fifteen days after the expiration of the lease because it is occupied by a member of the tenant's family who is too ill to be safely moved, is not such a holding over, where prior notice of intention to surrender the premises has been given and the usual notice to let has been placed on the building by the landlord, as will create an implied contract or duty imposed by law on the tenant to pay rent for the remainder of a new term after the premises are completely surrendered.

(Gray, Bartlett, and Fann, JJ., dissent.)

(April 18, 1899.)

NOTE.—On the effect of illness to relieve a tenant from the effect of holding over for a short time, the above case is an exceedingly important one.

For another striking case respecting the effect of holding over, see Goldsbrough v. Gable (Ill.) 15 L. R. A. 294.

44 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, in favor of plaintiff upon exceptions ordered to be heard in that court in the first instance which were taken at a Trial Term for New York County in an action brought to recover rent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. Bernard J. Tinney, for appellants: The holding over was unavoidable and in no manner the fault of the tenant. It could not be avoided, and for it defendants are not liable as hold-over tenants for another year, as held by the court below.

Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 291; McAdam, Land. & T. 2d ed. § 21, p. 33; Greaton v. Smith, 1 Daly, 386; Tuomey v. Dunn, 10 Jones & S. 291; Jones v. Shears, 4 Ad. & El. 832.

The defendants, being prevented by the act of God from removing from the demised premises, are not liable.

People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 586; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 174, 175; Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388, Affirming 24 Barb. 174; Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 64, 7 Am. Rep. 415; Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 107, 62 Am. Dec. 142; School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371.

The learned justice, before whom the cause was tried, should have submitted the case to the jury.

Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 291; Smith v. Allt, 7 Daly, 492; Shanahan v. Shanahan, 23 Jones & S. 339; McCabe v. Evers, 30 N. Y. S. R. 833; Manly v. Clemens, 39 N. Y. S. R. 199; Zimmer v. Black, 37 N. Y. S. R. 312; Frost v. Akron Iron Co. 1 App. Div. 449.

The holding over must be shown to be wrongful and tortious.

Schuyler v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 314, 10 Am. Rep. 609; Pickett v. Bartlett, 107 N. Y. 282; Smith v. Allt, 7 Daly, 492.

Where the tenant holds over involuntarily, not for his own convenience, but because he cannot help it, the act is not tortious, and the question should be submitted to the jury to say whether there was such a holding over as entitled the landlord to treat the occupant as a tenant for another year.

Smith v. Allt, 7 Daly, 492.

This action cannot be maintained, for at most all the plaintiff can recover is double the rent for the fifteen days' occupancy of the house, the defendants having given notice of their intention to quit at the expiration of the term created by the lease.

4 Rev. Stat. Banks' 8th ed. § 10, pp. 2457, 2458; Hall v. Ballentine, 7 Johns. 536; Wood, Land. & T. § 558, p. 967; Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 638, 639.

Mr. George Putnam Smith, for respondent:

Upon a tenant's failure to yield the premises at the time provided by the lease the landlord has the option either to treat him as a trespasser and dispossess, or to consider the tenancy renewed for another term of the lease.

Schuyler v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 309, 10 Am. Rep. 609; Adams v. Cohoes, 127 N. Y. 182; Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287; Oussani v. Thompson, 19 Misc. 524; Regan v. Fosdick, 19 Misc. 489.

And neither the notification by the tenant of his intention to depart, or even the posting of a notice "To Let" by the landlord, will create an acceptance of the premises so as to discharge the tenant from liability.

Shanahan v. Shanahan, 23 Jones & S. 339.

The illness of defendants' mother, even if it be considered an "act of God," did not discharge them from liability under their contract.

Regan v. Fosdick, 19 Misc. 489.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's action was to recover rent alleged to be due upon the lease of certain premises for the month of May, 1895, and the six following months of that year. The lease was executed in March, 1894, and was to terminate in one year from the 1st of May following. The defendants, who were the tenants under the lease, vacated the premises on May 15, 1895, but, as it was claimed that they held over after the expiration of the lease for fifteen days, it was held that they were liable for the rent for another year, and the plaintiff recovered for the seven months of the year that had elapsed before the commencement of the action. The rent, by the terms of the lease, was payable monthly, and the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $558.63, being the stipulated rent for the seven months, with interest.

The complaint alleged the making of the lease, the possession thereunder by the defendants, and that they had continued in possession until the time of the commencement of the action. The defendants, in their answer, allege that they surrendered possession of the premises to the plaintiff on May 15, 1895, and that he accepted such surrender; that they had notified him in the month of February preceding that they would not take or keep the house for another year after May 1, 1895, when the term fixed by the lease expired; that, after this notice, the plaintiff was permitted to show the premises to persons wishing to hire or purchase them, and to place upon the house the usual notice that it was to let; that the defendants moved from the house, with all their property and belongings, and that of the family, on the 1st day of May, 1895, before the lease expired, except from the bedroom, where their mother was confined by a dangerous illness until the 15th of May following, when she was removed, and the premises wholly vacated; and that they were forbidden by the physician in charge from moving or disturbing the mother during the fifteen days, and were informed by him that it would imperil her life if an attempt was made to remove her. These affirmative allegations in the answer were pleaded together as a single defense. On the trial it was conceded that the defendants had the affirmative of the issues since the written lease was produced and admitted by the pleadings and the possession under it.

It appears from the record that the defendants' counsel then proceeded to open the case to the jury, and at the close of the opening the court suggested that the controversy would resolve itself into a pure question of law, and that the facts should be agreed upon. The plaintiff's counsel then admitted that the notice from the tenants of their intention to surrender up the premises on the 1st of May had been given in February, as alleged in the answer. The defendants' counsel then stated that the reason for holding over after the expiration of the lease was the sickness of the defendants' mother, she then being a member of their family; and he stated that, unless he could have it admitted as it is pleaded, he wanted no admission whatever. The plaintiff's counsel then admitted that fact, as set forth in the answer. The last clause of the answer contained an allegation that the holding over was with the knowledge and permission of the plaintiff, the landlord, and at the suggestion of the plaintiff's counsel this allegation was withdrawn. The case then states that upon the record and the defendants' counsel's opening, the court, at the request of the plaintiff's counsel, directed a verdict against the defendants for $558.63, and that the defendants excepted to this direction.

It is somewhat difficult to ascertain from the record just what questions were passed upon by the court at the trial. It is clear enough that he held that the defendants were liable for another year's rent from the 1st of May, 1895, notwithstanding the facts alleged in the answer with respect to the illness of the defendants' mother, and the impossibility of her removal without endangering her life. The learned court must also have held that the other allegations of the answer pleaded in connection with the fact just referred to—that, upon the removal of the mother on the 15th day of May, 1895, the defendants surrendered the premises to the plaintiff, and that the latter accepted such surrender—were not available as a defense. In view of the fact that the defendants were requested to withdraw a particular clause in the answer, which was complied with, and of the further fact that the "case" states that a verdict was directed upon the record and the opening of the defendants' counsel, it must, I think, be assumed that the decision was that the answer contained no defense after the allegation had been withdrawn, which stated that the holding over was with the consent of the landlord. After the defendants' counsel had withdrawn this allegation, he stated that he desired to have the other facts admitted just as he had pleaded them, and this request was complied with. The admission, therefore, must be held to cover all the facts affirmatively pleaded in the answer, except the particular allegation which had been withdrawn. After verdict was directed against the defendants, it would not be a fair construction of what took place at the trial to hold that the admission applied only to the single fact of holding over on account of the sickness of the mother. If must, I think, be held that it was an admission of all the facts affirmatively pleaded, except the single allegation which the plaintiff's counsel requested to be withdrawn. The direction having been made upon the opening of the plaintiff's counsel, which does not appear in the "case" and upon the record, the fair construction is that a verdict was directed upon the answer, after modification by the withdrawal of the allegation referred to, and upon the opening of counsel. The record in this connection must mean the pleadings in the case. Kley v. Healy, 127 N. Y. 555. It was therefore admitted by the plaintiff's counsel that fifteen days after the expiration of the term provided by the lease the tenants surrendered the premises to the landlord, and that the latter accepted the surrender. After the surrender, there could be no recovery of rent, since the landlord could not have the use of the premises and the stipulated rent at the same time. When a landlord accepts a surrender of the premises, this act operates to discharge the tenant from all liability for rent in the future; and, if the construction of the proceedings at the trial suggested be the correct one, then the direction of a verdict against the defendants was error.

But, perhaps the most important question in the case arises upon the facts and circumstances which it is claimed constitute a holding over by the tenant after the expiration of the term specified in the lease. For every purpose necessary to the determination of that question we must assume that the facts are as alleged in the answer, since it must have been upon that assumption that the verdict was directed. There can be no doubt that the rule of law is settled beyond debate or controversy which permits the landlord, at his election, to treat the tenant as holding for another year when the latter remains in possession after the expiration of the term. When the demise is for a definite term of one year at a fixed rent, and the tenant holds over after that term expires, the landlord may treat him as a tenant for another year, and collect rent accordingly. Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287; Adams v. Cohoes, 127 N. Y. 175. But the question is whether the tenant did, in fact, hold over after the expiration of the term, within the meaning of that rule. If it is an arbitrary one, applicable under all circumstances and conditions, and to be enforced in every case, without regard to the reason upon which it is founded, it may be said that, in a strict sense, there was a holding over in this case. But this rule that obtains in the relation of landlord and tenant is a part of the common law, the chief merit of which is supposed to consist in its adaptability to changing circumstances and new conditions as developed in the progress of time. It is not an unchangeable code, like that of the Medes and Persians, but a system that has grown up with the growth of civilization, and is capable of being molded to meet the wants of society in every stage of its progress. From the facts disclosed by the answer in this case the tenant vacated the house at the expiration of the term, except one bedroom, in which a member of his family was confined by illness so serious that he was warned by the physician that any attempt to remove her would imperil her life. The decision of the learned trial court in the case virtually holds that on the last day of the tenant's term he was placed in a position where he must either pay rent for another year for a house that he did not intend to occupy or to take the risk of becoming, in a certain sense, responsible for the death of his mother by attempting to remove her from a sick room against the protest of a physician. This would seem to be pushing a rule of law applicable to the relation of landlord and tenant to a point which makes it very unreasonable, if not absurd; and, before assenting to such an application of it, we are naturally forced to inquire whether there was, in fact, any such holding over by the tenant in this case as the rule fairly contemplates. Does a tenant who, on the last day of the term is upon his death bed, or is quarantined in his house by the public authorities to prevent the spread of some dangerous or infectious disease or is insane, or compelled to remain in the house, against his will, by some superior force or stress of circumstances, hold over within the meaning of the law, or in the sense that permits the landlord to treat him as a tenant for another year? The principle upon which the rule is founded is that the holding over is such an act of the tenant that the law implies a contract on his part, or leasing of the premises for another year. But whenever the law implies a contract from the act or conduct of the party, the act itself, whatever it may be, must be voluntary. The law does not imply a contract or obligation from an act of the party which proceeds from mistake or fraud, or which results from force or coercion of any kind, or is due to any stress of circumstances which involves peril to his life or that of some member of his family. To infer a promise or contract from any act plainly resulting from such causes would manifestly be contrary to reason and justice. The question therefore occurs whether the tenant in this case, by failing to remove his mother from the bedroom in the house, or by her presence there during the fifteen days after the expiration of the term, should be held for another year's rent, on the principle that an agreement to hold for another year is to be implied by law from his conduct under the circumstances. If this question must necessarily be answered in the affirmative, there would be no grounds for any further discussion. But it seems to me that, upon reason and all the analogies of the law, a hiring for another year cannot and should not be implied against the tenant under such circumstances. The case is not within the reason of the rule, and therefore is not governed by it. While this court has firmly adhered to the principle that the landlord is entitled to treat the tenant who holds over as lessee for another year, it is plain, from what was said in one of the most recent cases, that the rule was not considered an arbitrary one. On the contrary, it is intimated that it was not so rigid that it could not properly be made to bend in exceptional and peculiar cases. Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287. Where the holding over is wrongful or voluntary, and not unavoidable in the strictest sense, the rule must be permitted to have full application. But where the tenant, as in this case, is obliged to retain a room in the house for a short period of time in order to avoid the peril of exposing a member of his family to danger and death, it cannot properly be said that it is a holding over within the meaning of the law. Where a party acts under such a stress of circumstances, the act cannot be said to proceed from his own volition any more than if he had been detained in the house by the police under the direction of the health authorities.

In Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, this court enforced the rule in a case where the facts were quite different from those appearing in the record now before us. In that case, however, the learned judge who spoke for the court evidently had in mind some case which might be considered an exception to the rule. That is the plain inference from the following paragraph of the opinion: "I do not mean to say that whether there has been a holding over at all may not sometimes be so doubtful upon the facts as to require a submission to the jury. I mean to say that there is no such doubt in the present case. I reserve the question, also, whether there might not be an unavoidable delay, in no manner the fault of the tenant, directly or indirectly, which would serve as a valid excuse. It is enough that here was a holding over not unavoidable, which might have been provided against, and where the chief difficulty grew directly out of the tenant's own wrongful act." In Jones v. Shears, 4 Ad. & El. 832, the defendants had rented a coal mine for twenty-one years, with the proviso that they might terminate the tenancy at any time by giving a previous notice to that effect. The term commenced in April, 1825, and four years thereafter the defendants gave the notice provided for. They, however, continued in possession for two months after the expiration of the time limited by the notice, working the mine. The landlord brought an action for the rent, claiming that the holding over gave him the right to treat them as tenants at the former rent. The defendants claimed that this holding over was not with any intent to waive the notice and renew the tenancy, and that they had the right to show the circumstances under which they so held over. Upon this question of intent they therefore proposed to show that the coal worked by them during those two months was taken from pillars of coal which supported the roof of the mine, and that it was customary for the tenant on leaving the mine to cut away as much coal as could with safety be removed. This evidence was allowed, and Coleridge, J., left it to the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, the defendants held over with the intent to waive the notice and continue the tenancy or not. The jury found a verdict for the defendants, and a subsequent motion for a new trial was denied. Upon 44 L. R. A.

appeal to the King's bench the ruling at the trial was affirmed, Lord Denman, Ch. J., saying: "It was impossible, upon this issue, not to leave the question to the jury, and it was for them to decide whether the parties, by their mode of continuing in possession, showed an intention to waive their notice to quit, and to remain tenants as before." Littledale, J., also said: "I do not know that where a tenant holds over he is always to be considered as bound to hold upon the same terms as far as they are applicable."

Here, however, the question was not whether the parties held over on the terms of the original tenancy, but whether they held over as tenants at all. It was for the jury to say whether the defendants intended to avail themselves of their notice to quit, or whether the acts done by them amounted to a waiver of such notice." In Chitty, Contr. 8th Am. ed. pp. 286, 287, after discussing the effect of the receipt by the landlord of rent after the expiration of the term, and a holding over by the tenant, the learned author adds: "And both the fact of holding over and the payment of rent may be explained so as to rebut the presumption that the parties intended thereby to create a tenancy from year to year." The law in many cases excuses a party from the performance of a contract or some other act when disabled by sickness. Such was the decision of this court in a case where a party had contracted to render personal services for a specified time, but, after a partial performance, was disabled by sickness. It was held that, notwithstanding the nonperformance by reason of this disability, the person rendering the services was entitled to recover upon a quantum meruit. Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388. The disability of a party to do the particular thing or to perform the contract by reason of sickness is held to be a disability by the act of God. So it has been held that sureties upon a recognizance to secure the attendance of the principal at court to answer to a criminal charge may, when sued upon the recognizance, defend upon the ground that the principal was disabled from attending by reason of sickness. People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 586. The general rule is that, where the performance of a duty or charge created by law is prevented by unavoidable accident without the fault of the party, he will be excused. Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415; Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441.

It is important to note with more distinctness the wide difference between this case and Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287. In that case the tenant violated one of the covenants of the lease by subletting the premises. The sub-tenant held over after the expiration of the term, and the tenant was sued for rent upon the principle that the holding over created a tenancy for another year. The tenant sought to excuse the holding over by the allegation that a distant relative of the subtenant, who was in possession, was detained in the house after the expiration of the term by sickness. This court held that, inasmuch as the subletting was in violation of the lease, and was a wrongful act on the part of the tenant, he could not be excused by a situation which was plainly the result of his own violation of a covenant of the lease. It is plain that the situation which it was claimed excused the tenant was of his own creation by putting another party in possession of the premises. The holding over in that case was very properly attributed to the wrongful act of the tenant in putting a stranger into possession of the demised premises.

When a tenant for a year actually holds over after the expiration of the term, the legal consequences which follow are well settled and understood. The landlord may, at his election, treat him either as a trespasser or a tenant for another year; but in any case the fact of holding over must be established. The landlord cannot treat him as a tenant, and collect the rent for another year, unless the facts are such as to justify him in proceeding against him as a trespasser. An act which might ordinarily constitute a trespass when done or committed intentionally or voluntarily, cannot always be such when done or committed involuntarily. Moak's Underhill, Terts., pp. 10, 15. The mere fact that the tenant or some member of his family is obliged to remain in a room in the house after the expiration of the demised term, may not necessarily amount to a trespass. Whether it does or not must depend upon circumstances. If he is detained there by the act of God, or of some superior legal power, or some unavoidable necessity, he is not ordinarily deemed to be a trespasser. A trespass presupposes some wrongful act towards the person or property of another. If the tenant in this case actually held over, the plaintiff could maintain ejectment against him; but, since his intention to remove on the day the lease expired is clear, and this purpose was defeated only by the dangerous illness of a member of his family, it would, I think, be difficult to say that he had such a possession of the house as would support an action of ejectment; and the same facts and circumstances that would protect him from such an action would also defeat the present claim, which is based upon the theory of an implied agreement to lease for another year. I do not mean to say that the facts stated in the answer would be a defense to an action by the landlord for damages based upon the breach of the covenant in the lease to surrender the demised premises at the expiration of the term. A duty or obligation imposed by law and one created by contract or covenant stand upon different grounds when the party seeks to be excused by the act of God, or unavoidable accident, or stress of circumstances. But in this case the right of the landlord to collect rent for the second year does not depend upon any express contract or covenant. It rests wholly upon the legal implication derived from the wrongful act of the tenant in holding over; and if that act was not in fact wrongful, but, under the circumstances, excusable, then there is no basis for any implied promise or agreement. I assume that if the tenant, or some member of his family, should die on the last day of 44 L. R. A.

the term, that no one would then contend that the continued occupation of the house for a few days during the funeral would amount to a wrongful holding over within the meaning of the law. Such an interpretation of a principle of the common law would shock, not only our sense of justice, but every feeling of decency and humanity. The case before us differs from that only in degree. Both cases must be governed by a common principle. It is obvious that in the application of the rule now under consideration to the relation of landlord and tenant there must be a point beyond which we cannot go, and that point is reached when the alleged holding over cannot be attributed, directly or indirectly, to some fault on the part of the tenant. There may be cases in which the occupation of a room in a house after the lease has terminated will not amount to a trespass, or warrant the implication of a lease for another year. Since a party cannot, as a general rule, commit a trespass or make a contract without some effort of volition on his part, an act due to unavoidable accident, or resulting from some overruling necessity or stress of circumstances, can form no basis for imputing a wrong or inferring a contract. It is reasonable, therefore, to conclude from the facts and circumstances stated in the answer that the defendant was not a trespasser during the fifteen days that his mother occupied the room in the house, and could not be removed without endangering her life, nor a tenant for another year. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent from the time when the house was completely vacated.

It may be said that this conclusion is a departure from precedent, but it is not easy to see how it is. No case has been cited, and none has been found, where it was held that such a state of facts or such a situation as is disclosed by the answer amounted to a holding over by the tenant within the meaning of the rule that is invoked by the landlord to sustain this action. Legal rules may sometimes be pushed to a point where they accomplish the grossest injustice, and it then becomes the duty of the courts to limit their application to cases that are within their true scope and fair meaning. We go no further than to say that upon the facts stated in the answer, if conceded or established, there was no holding over by the tenant within any fair or reasonable meaning of the rule which permits the landlord to continue the lease for another year.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

Martin, J., concurring:

This action was to recover seven months' rent of a dwelling house situated upon Madison avenue, in the city of New York. There was a lease between the parties, by which the defendants rented the premises from May 1, 1894, for the period of one year, the rent payable in monthly instalments in advance. The rent for that term has been paid. By this action the plaintiff seeks to recover rent for a portion of the succeeding year, on the ground that the defendants held over after the expiration of their term, and thus became liable for the rent of the premises for that time. The facts are undisputed. The defendants alleged as a defense to the action the making of the contract or lease with the plaintiff; that in the month of February, 1895, before the expiration of their term, they notified the plaintiff that they would not retain the premises for another year, and that after such notice the plaintiff and his agents were permitted to show the premises, and to place the usual notice "To Let" upon them, which remained during the balance of the term. The defendants then specially alleged that on May 1, 1895, the defendants were prevented from yielding up the possession of the premises by the act of God in afflicting their mother, who was a member of their family, with a disease which, at that time, previously, and subsequently, including May 15, confined her to her bed so that it would have endangered her life to take her from the house; that for that reason, and no other, of which the plaintiff had full knowledge and notice, the defendants were obliged to and did occupy a small portion of the premises until May 15; that all their property, furniture, and belongings and their family were removed from the premises, and every part thereof, on May 1, 1895, except from the sick room in which their mother was confined, and that they were forbidden by the physician in charge to remove her until May 15, when she was at once removed. Upon the trial it was admitted that upon the 1st of February, 1895, the defendants notified the plaintiff that on the 1st of May they would give up and surrender the possession of the premises. That they were occupied under the lease was admitted, also the rate of rent, and the fact that the defendants, from necessity, held over after the expiration of the lease some fifteen days. The plaintiff then admitted the facts set up in the answer as to the impossibility of the defendants' surrendering possession at the expiration of the year, so that the question presented is whether, notwithstanding the facts alleged in the answer, the plaintiff was entitled, as a matter of law, to recover rent for the succeeding year, upon the ground that the defendants held over after the expiration of their term.

The admission of the plaintiff amounts to a concession that, by reason of the sickness of the defendants' mother, it was impossible for them to surrender up the possession of the premises to the plaintiff; that, so far as it was possible, they did so; and hence, that their retention was wholly involuntary. If there was any doubt as to the question of impossibility, it should have been submitted to the jury, and the defendants' exception to the direction of a verdict was well taken. Thus, in a word, the question is whether that impossibility justified the defendants' action, or whether, although it was impossible, to surrender the entire premises, the holding of a small part for a few days imposed upon them a liability for rent for the succeeding year. It is well settled that, where a tenant voluntarily holds over after the expiration of his term, he may be held as upon an agreement to hold for a year upon the terms of the prior lease. Conway v. Starkweather, 1 Denio, 114; Commissioners of Pilots v. Clark, 33 N. Y. 251; Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, 289. The basis of this liability is often said to be an implied agreement upon the part of the tenant to hold for another year. While I doubt, as I always have, the propriety of calling this class of obligations implied contracts, but think they are to be regarded as duties which the law imposes, yet, whether they be denominated implied contracts or duties created by law, in either case the right arises upon an implication of law, and in no sense upon an express or absolute contract.

It is also well settled that, where a duty or charge is created by law, and the performance is prevented by inevitable accident or the act of God, without fault of the party sought to be charged, he will be excused, but where a person absolutely, and by express contract, binds himself to do a particular thing, which is not at the time impossible or unlawful, he will not be excused, unless through the fault of the other party. The reason given for the latter portion of this rule is that he might have provided by his contract against inevitable accident or the act of God. Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142; Tompkins v. Dudley, 25 N. Y. 272, 82 Am. Dec. 349; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415. Thus, the most that can be said of the obligation that arises from the relation of landlord and tenant and follows by a general lease is that the tenant is charged with the duty of vacating the premises at the end of his term. If he fails, it is a breach of his duty, and ordinarily the law implies or creates a liability on his part for another year's rent. This being a duty implied or created by law, and not by an express or absolute agreement, it falls within the first part of the foregoing rule, and hence it is obvious that, if the tenant's removal was rendered impossible by inevitable accident or the act of God, he is excused for his omission to surrender the premises, at least so far as it creates a liability for a year's rent which is implied by law. The reason for the distinction between the effect of impossibility of performance, occasioned by inevitable accident or the act of God, upon an obligation created by express contract and upon an obligation which the law implies, has been held to rest "upon the unwillingness of the law to at once create, impose, and exact the performance of an obligation forbidden or rendered impracticable by the interposition of Providence." School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371. Under the principle of the authorities relating to this subject, I think it is clear that, as the obligation sought to be enforced was one created by law, and not by the agreement of the parties, impossibility of performance was a valid excuse, and the defendants cannot be held for the rent for the subsequent year. Moreover, the same result may be reached upon another ground. There are many cases where the courts have implied a condition in a contract to the effect that a party is relieved from its terms where its performance has, without his fault, become impossible. The principle upon which those cases are based is that, when the contract was made, the parties contemplated that the condition which subsequently existed might arise, and render performance impossible, and that the implied condition is to be construed as a part of the existing contract, and thus relieves the party from liability in case that condition arises. Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415; Lorillard v. Clyde, 142 N. Y. 456, 462, 24 L. R. A. 113; Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 507, 14 L. R. A. 215; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 44, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826; Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 269; Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550, 555; Dolan v. Rodgers, 149 N. Y. 489, 492. To hold in this case that this agreement was made upon an implied condition that the defendants should not be required to vacate the premises at the expiration of their term in the event that it was rendered impossible by inevitable accident or the act of God is quite within the principle of the authorities cited. But, be this as it may, it is manifest that the charge or liability which the plaintiff seeks to enforce was created by law, and not by agreement, and that, as its performance was prevented without the defendants' fault, they were excused from the onerous liability which the plaintiff now seeks to enforce. It may well be, and doubtless is, true that the plaintiff may recover for the time the premises were occupied by the defendants, or if, by reason of their failure to surrender up the premises, additional damages follow, that they may be recovered in a proper action so that all damages caused by the defendants' misfortune would be borne by them, but that he cannot recover the rent for the subsequent year upon the implied contract or duty imposed by law seems to me clear.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that the judgment in this action should be reversed, and a new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight, J., concur.

Gray, J., dissenting:

This action was brought to recover of the defendants the rent of certain premises in the city of New York, which had been originally leased to them by the plaintiff for the term of one year from May 1, 1894. The defendants held over for some fifteen days after the expiration of the term, and the rental moneys claimed in the action were for seven months subsequent to May 1, 1895. The defense set up in the answer was, in substance, that, prior to the expiration of the term mentioned in the written lease, the defendants had notified the plaintiff that they would not take the premises for another year, and that they had hired another house, but they had been prevented from yielding up possession "by the act of God in afflicting the mother of these defendants, who was a member of the family of the defendants, with a disease which . . . was so great that it would have endangered her life to have taken her from the room." The lease contained the usual agreement of the lessees to quit and surrender the premises at the expiration of the term. Upon the trial no evidence was given, the facts being then and there stipulated between the parties. The plaintiff admitted that the defendants notified him, in February, 1895, that on the 1st day of May, 1895, they would surrender the possession of the premises, and the defendants admitted that they remained over after the 1st of May without the assent of the plaintiff. The plaintiff admitted to be true the statement of the defendants that the mother of the defendants was ill on the 1st of May, 1895, and in the condition alleged in their answer. Upon these admissions of the parties, the trial judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of rental moneys demanded under the terms of the written lease. To that direction the defendants excepted, and, the appellate division having affirmed the judgment entered against them, they further appeal to this court.

The question thus raised for our consideration is whether the rule of law, which has always controlled in such cases, is to be affected by the fact that the holding over by the defendants was by reason of the illness of their mother, as a member of the family, and therefore, in that sense, involuntary. The doctrine has been long a settled one in this state that a tenant who holds over his term, either is a trespasser or continues to be a tenant, at the sole election of the landlord, and that, in the latter case the legal implication is that he holds at the former rent. As this appeal should be disposed of upon authority, I shall advert to a few cases and to the opinions which have been expressed. The question was early discussed in what may be regarded as the leading case of Conway v. Starkweather, 1 Denio, 113, where the tenant held over his term for the period of two weeks. Bronson, Ch. J., in his opinion, laid down the rule with considerable pertinency, and said that "the tenant has no such election as that which belongs to the landlord. If he holds over, though for a very short period, without any unequivocal act at the time to give his holding the character of a trespass, he is not afterwards at liberty to deny that he is in as a tenant, if the landlord chooses to hold him to that relation. If the tenant may hold over for two weeks, and then say he is not a tenant, I see no reason why he may not give the same answer after holding over as many months or years. The plaintiff's counsel regards the holding over as only presumptive evidence of the continuance of the tenancy, which would have been sufficiently rebutted by the offered proof that the plaintiff, before his term ended, refused to keep the property another year, even at a reduced rent. But such are not my views. I do not think this a case for balancing presumptions, but one where the act of the plaintiff in holding over has given the defendants a legal right to treat him as tenant; and that it is not in his power to throw off that character, however onerous it may be." A number of years later, in the case of Schuyler v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 309, 10 Am. Rep. 609, the defendants had held over for the period of three weeks after the expiration of the lease, and they opposed the claim of the plaintiff to hold them as tenants for the whole year, upon the ground that they had given him notice, before the expiration of the term, that they did not intend to keep the premises for another year, and, with his knowledge, had made arrangements to occupy other premises. Judge Earl, relying on the rule of law as settled by Conway v. Starkweather, and since recognized by other cases, that, where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his term, the law will imply an agreement to hold for a year upon the terms of the prior lease, overruled their contention, and said: "The safe and just rule I believe to be the one established by authority, that a tenant holds over the term at his peril; and the owner of the premises may treat him as a trespasser or as a tenant for another year upon the terms of the prior lease, so far as applicable." Still later, in Adams v. Cohoes, 127 N. Y. 175, Judge Potter, delivering the opinion of this court in the second division, discussed this question in the light of the authorities and observed that "so absolute is the implication, from holding over for a few days only, of a hiring for another year, that the tenant will not be excused from the payment of rent, even where he gave the landlord notice before the end of the term that he did not intend to hire for another year, and had hired other premises, which would be ready for his occupancy in a few days." Finally, we have the case of Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, where the holding over by the defendant was from the 1st to the 4th of May, and it was sought to be excused upon these facts, viz.: That the 1st day of May was a holiday; that on the 2d day of May there was a difficulty in engaging trucks, and that a sick boarder could not be removed with safety until the 4th day. Judge Finch discusses, in his opinion, the efficacy of such a defense somewhat elaborately, and referring to the rule as well settled by authority that where there is a holding over by the tenant the law will imply an agreement to hold for a year upon the terms of the prior lease, makes the following observations upon the argument of the appellant: "The appellant does not deny the rule, but seeks to qualify it so as to mean that it is only where the tenant holds over voluntarily, and for his own convenience, that the landlord's right arises, and that it does not so arise when the tenant holds over involuntarily, not for his own convenience, but because he cannot help it. I am averse to any such qualification. It would introduce an uncertainty into a rule whose chief value lies in its certainty. The consequent confusion would be very great. Excuses would always be forthcoming, and their sufficiency be subject to the doubtful conclusions of a jury, and no lessor would ever know when he could safely promise possession to a new tenant." Again, he says that "if the rule in this case seems to involve a hardship, that is sometimes true of every general rule, however just and wise, but does not justify its abrogation. To sustain this defense would open the door to a destruction of the settled doctrine, and tend to involve the rights of both lessor and lessee in uncertainty and confusion." This is pretty strong language; but the appellants, nevertheless, seek to distinguish the case as an authority, because there it was a subtenant whose illness prevented the surrender of possession, and the question was reserved whether there might not be an inevitable delay, in no manner the fault of the tenant, which would serve as a valid excuse. It is true that there is that much of a distinction between the two cases, but I think the distinction to be somewhat shadowy, so far as the excuse for not yielding up the premises promptly is concerned, and I agree with the reasoning of the opinion at the appellate division in the present case [9 App. Div. 595], that "no such qualification should be, or could safely be, imported into the absolute rule of law. It would make the landlord, rather than the tenant, suffer by reason of a misfortune to the tenant, which he, and not the landlord, should bear the burden of." It seems to me that Judge Finch, in Haynes v. Aldrich, has given a convincing reason against importing any qualification into a well-settled rule of law, by which its application might be rendered uncertain according to the facts pleaded by the tenant. Since the leading case of Conway v. Starkweather, I am not aware of any qualification of the rule having been admitted, and I think that, if a case arises in which it operates harshly, the misfortune is one which, for the sake of the stability of the rule, should be borne by the tenant, rather than by the landlord. The underlying principle is that the rights of the parties are determined by their engagements, and effect must be given to the contract. The doctrine, as settled by the decisions of the courts of this state obtains in many other jurisdictions. Clinton Wire Cloth Co. v. Gardner, 99 Ill. 151; Moore v. Beasley, 3 Ohio, 294; Vrooman v. McKaig, 4 Md. 450, 59 Am. Dec. 85; Bacon v. Brown, 9 Conn. 334; Hemphill v. Flynn, 2 Pa. St. 144; Wolfe v. Wolff, 69 Ala. 549.

44 L. R. A.

This is in no sense to be considered like a case where performance of a condition is prevented by the act of God, nor one where the discharge of an obligation was not fully intended by the parties. It is simply that of a contract which, by its terms, gave the occupancy and use of the premises of the owner for a specified term, and under specified conditions, which fixed the rent to be paid, and which contained the covenant of the lessee to quit and surrender the premises at the expiration of the demised term. The distinction is well settled between an obligation or duty imposed by law and that created by covenant of the party. In the former case, if the party is disabled from performing without any default of his own, the law will excuse him. Illustrations of this are where waste to a tenement is caused by its destruction by tempest or by enemies, or where the contract is for personal services, and the condition of continued existence is raised by implication. But where the party creates a duty by his own contract he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity; because he might have provided against it by his contract. 2 Saund. 422, note 2; Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417, 441; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 64, 7 Am. Rep. 415.

Of course, there was nothing to submit to the jury, and the defendants did not request a submission. All the facts for a judgment were stipulated when the case came on for trial, and they presented the one question for the court whether, in law, they established the plaintiff's right to the rent demanded. I think the judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Bartlett and Vann, JJ., concur.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

James SAMPSON and Wife

v.

John H. BAGLEY, Admr., etc., of Sylvester Grogan, Exr., etc., of Margaret Grogan, Deceased.

(.....R. I.)

1. The liability of a tenant for life for loss by an accidental fire as established by the English statute of 6 Edw. I. chap. 5, known as the statute of Gloucester, does not exist in Rhode Island, as that statute, though in force except as modified, is practically superseded by the Rhode Island statutes.
2. The mere acceptance by a life tenant of a devise of real estate containing a direction to keep in repair does not impose upon him the duty to rebuild in case of the accidental destruction of buildings by fire.
3. A life tenant receiving insurance for the loss of a building by fire must hold any excess of the amount received over the value of his life interest as a trustee for the remainderman, unless the money is used to rebuild.

(February 6, 1899.)

ON DEMURRER to the complaint in an action by a remainderman to recover from the personal representative of a life tenant the value of a dwelling house destroyed by fire while in the possession of the life tenant as such. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel W. K. Allen, for defendant in support of demurrer:

This is an action on the case upon the implied promises of Margaret O'Connell in her lifetime to rebuild said house. The declaration does not state a case wherein the law implies any such promise. The only promise implied is the promise of every life tenant not to commit waste.

White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 674; Re Skingley, 3 Macn. & G. 221.

In relation to the insurance money which it is alleged that Mrs. O'Connell received, it nowhere appears that she received for, or had insured, anything but her life estate. She had a right to insure her life estate, and was entitled to such insurance in full in her own right.

NOTE.—As to the proceeds of insurance on premises held by a life tenant, see also Harrison v. Pepper (Mass.) 33 L. R. A. 239, 44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 525.

Welsh v. London Assur. Corp. 151 Pa. 607.

Messrs. Charles E. Gorman and James T. Eagan, for plaintiffs, contra:

The action is not an action for waste or for damages under the statute, but an action based upon the agreement of the life tenant to repair, created by the devise and the life tenant's acceptance of it.

The statute of Marlbridge made all tenants for life liable for waste committed or suffered.

Coke says: "Since the statute of Marlbridge, if a lessee for life or years had committed voluntary or permissive waste, he should answer in damages."

2 Inst. 145.

By statute 6 Anne, tenants were exempt from liability for loss by accidental fire. This statute has never existed in Rhode Island.

At common law lessees were not answerable for accidents or negligent burning; then came the statute of Gloucester which made tenants for life and years liable to waste without any exception, consequently rendering them answerable for destruction by fire.

Woodfall, Land. & T. 246.

The statute of Anne, chap. 31, excepted from the statute of Gloucester accidental fires, but left it therefore to the parties to contract so as to impose the liability.

Brown v. Quilter, 2 Ambl. 620; White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 674.

To repair was an obligation on a tenant, whether for life or years, imposed by law; so that a tenant to-day who fails to repair would be guilty of waste.

Clemence v. Steers, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621; Fay v. Brewer, 3 Pick. 203.

It is common to include in leases a covenant to repair, and so an action arises on the covenant; but were the lease silent on this matter the obligation to repair would still exist.

White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 674.

While it may be true that the reversioner has no right for want of privity to avail himself of the insurance effected by the life tenant, or to compel its application, still the life tenant's neglect to insure or to apply the proceeds of insurance ought to render him in justice liable.

4 Kent, Com. p. 82; Co. Litt. 53a; Rook v. Warth, 1 Ves. Sr. 462; Brough v. Higgins,

2 Gratt. 408; Graham v. Roberts, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 99.

Under a general covenant to repair the tenant is liable for the destruction of the buildings not rebuilt by him though the destruction may have occurred by fire or other accident.

Phillips v. Stevens, 16 Mass. 238; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray, 103; Ross v. Overton, 3 Call. (Va.) 309, 2 Am. Dec. 552; Scott v. Scott, 18 Gratt. 166; Abby v. Billups, 35 Miss. 618, 72 Am. Dec. 143; McIntosh v. Loun, 49 Barb. 550; Lockrow v. Horgan, 58 N. Y. 635; Schmidt v. Pettit, 1 MacArth. 179; Ely v. Ely, 80 Ill. 532; Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88, 36 Am. Rep. 659.

Even if after lease the fire district is extended and a more expensive building required.

David v. Ryan, 47 Iowa, 642; Harris v. Heackman, 62 Iowa, 411; Cordes v. Miller, 30 Mich. 581, 33 Am. Rep. 430; Wade v. Malloy 16 Hun, 226; Fay v. Brewer, 3 Pick. 203; Sackett v. Sackett, 5 Pick. 191; Wood v. Griffin, 46 N. H. 237.

A general covenant to repair is binding upon the tenant under all circumstances.

Libbey v. Tolford, 48 Me. 316, 7 Am. Dec. 229; Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88, 36 Am. Rep. 659; Magaw v. Lambert, 3 Pa. 444.

The acceptance of a devise creates an obligation which can be enforced in law or equity.

Veazey v. Whitehouse, 10 N. H. 409.

Where a life tenant dies before repairing, the remainderman has an action against his executor for a sum sufficient to repair.

1 Leake, Uses & Profits of Lands, 93; Barthlyany v. Walford, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 630; Woodhouse v. Walker, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 404, 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 609.

At common law all life tenants were liable to the action of waste; no matter what might be the power to repel the waste from being done, if it was committed they were bound to repair. The infant age of the defendant would not free him from the responsibility.

White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 675; Abby v. Billups, 35 Miss. 618, 72 Am. Dec. 143.

The obligation to repair includes the maintenance of the estate and its appurtenances in a serviceable condition.

Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Savitz, 57 Ill. App. 659; Re Skingley, 3 Macn. & G. 221.

The life tenancy and the obligation to repair were created by the same instrument and the acceptance of the devise bound and obligated the devisee for life to perform the condition.

Smith v. Jewett, 40 N. H. 530; Veazey v. Whitehouse, 10 N. H. 409; Wheeler v. Lester, 1 Bradf. 293; Gridley v. Gridley, 24 N. Y. 130; Ditch v. Sennott, 117 Ill. 362; Taylor v. Popham, 1 Bro. Ch. 168; Barnardiston v. Fane, 2 Vern. 366; Hodgson v. Rawson, 1 Ves. Sr. 47; Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 383; Messenger v. Andrews, 4 Russ. Ch. 478.

Apart from the life tenant's agreement to repair, a sound public policy would require that the money received by a life tenant on a 44 L. R. A.

loss by fire should be used in rebuilding; and if not so used, then to pay it over to the remainderman.

Welsh v. London Assur. Corp. 151 Pa. 607.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of assumpsit, and is brought to recover the sum of $3,000, alleged to be the value of a dwelling house which was destroyed by fire during the time it was held by the defendant's testatrix, as life tenant thereof, under the will of Bernard O'Connell. The devise in said will to defendant's testatrix is as follows: "Second. I give and devise to my affectionate and beloved wife, Margaret O'Connell, my house and lot in the village of Wickford, in the town of North Kingstown, with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, for and during her natural life; she to keep the same in repair. At her decease I give and devise said house and lot to my niece Julia O'Connell; to her, her heirs and assigns, forever." The declaration alleges that immediately upon the death of said Bernard O'Connell the said Margaret O'Connell (afterwards Margaret Grogan) elected and decided to accept said devise, and entered into possession of said real estate, and a house then thereon standing, of the value of $2,000, and thereby assumed upon herself the obligation to keep said house in repair, and so promised and agreed to keep said house in repair during her tenancy, to wit, during the continuance of her natural life. It then avers that, while thus in possession of the premises, the house situated thereon was wholly destroyed by fire, and that it was the duty of said Margaret Grogan, under the terms of said devise, and of her promise made upon accepting the same, to rebuild said house, which she failed to do, notwithstanding the fact that she received the insurance money for the insurance which was upon said house when it was burned, whereby the plaintiff Julia Sampson, being the owner of the estate in remainder created by said devise, was damaged in the sum of $3,000, and has become entitled to have and recover the same of the defendant executor. Sylvester Grogan having deceased since the commencement of this action, John H. Bagley, his administrator, has assumed the defense thereof.

The defendant demurs to the declaration on the ground that, as a matter of law, it was not the duty of said Margaret Grogan, under the terms of said devise, to rebuild said house. We agree with the plaintiff's counsel that the action cannot be regarded as an action of waste or for damages, under the statute (R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 268, § 1), but that it is based entirely upon the agreement of the life tenant to repair, created by the devise, and the life tenant's acceptance thereof. So that the case turns upon the legal effect to be given to the language of said devise. But, while this is so, yet as the plaintiff's counsel, both in his elaborate brief and also at the bar, has carefully discussed the law of waste, and as the principles thereof are closely related to the main question involved, we will consider it.

The plaintiff's counsel argues that, even conceding that an action for waste, under the statute (R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 268), cannot be maintained, because the injury to the disherison was caused by accidental fire, yet that the life tenant is liable for all waste; that the statute of this state is like the English statute of Marlbridge, in defining the liability, and like that of Gloucester in declaring a forfeiture and giving a double penalty.

By the ancient common law, not only might he that was seised of an estate of inheritance do as he pleased with it, but, also, waste was not punishable in any tenant, save only in three persons, namely, guardian in chivalry, tenant in dower, and tenant by the curtesy; and not in tenant for life or years. 4 Coke's Inst. 200. The reason of the diversity, as stated by Blackstone, was that the estate of the first three above named was created by the act of the law itself, which therefore gave a remedy against them, but tenant for life or for years came in by the demise and lease of the owner of the fee, and therefore he might have provided against the committing of waste by his lessee, and, if he did not, it was his own fault. Cooley, Bl. Com. bk. 2, p. 282; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 72; 4 Kent, Com. 12th ed. "80; Shrewsbury's Case, 5 Coke, 13. Subsequently, in favor of the owners of the inheritance, Stat. 52 Hen. III. chap. 23, known as the "Statute of Marlbridge," was passed, in A. D. 1207, § 2 of which provides as follows: "Also fermors, during their terms, shall not make waste, sale, nor exile of house, woods, and men, nor of anything belonging to the tenements that they have to form, without special license had by writing of covenant, making mention that they may do it; which thing, if they do, and thereof be convict, they shall yield full damage and shall be punished by amercement grievously." Under this statute the disability of committing waste was made an ordinary and general incident to all kinds of estates for life and for years (Tiedeman, Real Prop. supra), and the actual damages sustained by the reversioner were recovered in an action of waste. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 158. Under the common law, as thus modified by the statute of Marlbridge, only single damages were recoverable by way of punishment for waste, except in the case of a guardian, who also forfeited his wardship by virtue of the great charter. See Stat. 9 Hen. III. chap. 4; Cooley, Bl. Com. bk. 2, p. 283. Thus the law remained until the passage of the statute of 6 Edw. I. chap. 5, in A. D. 1278, known as the "Statute of Gloucester," which provides "that a man from henceforth shall have a writ of waste in the chancery against him that holdeth by law of England, or otherwise for term of life or for term of years, or a woman in dower; and he which shall be attained of waste shall lose the thing that he hath wasted, and moreover shall recompense thrice so much as the waste shall be taxed at." Our statute of waste above referred to is based upon the one last quoted.

44 L. R. A.

Under the law as it stood after the passage of the statute of Gloucester, not only tenants by the curtesy and in dower were held responsible for accidental fires at the common law, but tenants for life and years, created by the act of the parties, were also held responsible therefor as for permissive waste, under the last-named statute. 4 Kent, Com. p. 82. Under the language of this statute, that "he shall lose the thing that he hath wasted," "it hath been determined," says Blackstone, "that the place is included; that if the waste be done sparsim, or here and there all over a wood, the whole wood shall be recovered, or if in several rooms of a house, the whole house shall be forfeited, because it is impracticable for the reversioner to enjoy only the identical places wasted, when lying interspersed with the other." It was waste, under said statute, to pull down a house, or to suffer it to decay. If it was uncovered or ruinous at the commencement of the term, and the tenant suffered it to become more so; if he suffered the house to be burned by neglect or mischance; if it was uncovered by tempest, and he suffered it afterwards to decay; or even if glass or windows were broken,—he was liable for waste. In short, it seems that the only exception to the liability of the tenant for damages to the reversion was where the damage was caused by the acts of God and public enemies, and the acts of the reversioner himself. See Woodfall, Land. & T. 461 et seq.; 4 Coke, 536. "It is common learning," said Heath, J., in Attersoll v. Stevens, 1 Taunt. 198, "that every lessee of land, whether for life or years, is liable in an action of waste to his lessor for all waste done on the land in lease, by whomsoever it may be committed." Chambre, J., in the same case (p. 196), said: "The situation of the tenant is extremely analogous to that of a common carrier. To prevent collusion (and not on the presumption of actual collusion), both are charged with the protection of the property intrusted to them, against all but the acts of God and the King's enemies; and as the tenant in the one case is charged with the actual commission of the waste done by others, so, in the other case, the carrier is charged with actual default and negligence, though he loses the goods by a force that was irresistible, or by fraud, against which no ordinary degree of care and caution could have protected him." Lord Coke is not less explicit, for he says: "Tenant by the curtesie, tenant in dower, tenant for life, years, etc., shall answer for the waste done by a stranger, and shall take their remedy over." 1 Co. Litt. 54a. See also 2 Co. Inst. 145, 303; 4 Kent, Com. p. 77; 1 Co. Inst. 57a, note, 377; 3 Bl. Com. p. 228; Comyn, Land. & T. 188; 1 Gray, Cases on Property, 560. The law of waste, as thus briefly outlined, continued in force in England until the passage of the statute of 6 Anne, chap. 31, in A. D. 1707, which guarded the tenant from the consequences of accidental misfortune in case of fire, by declaring that no suit should be had or maintained against any person in whose house or chamber any fire should accidentally begin, nor any recompense be made by such person for any damage suffered or occasioned thereby. 4 Eng. Stat. at L. p. 314. (10 Wm. III., Anne). This statute was afterwards enlarged by the statute of 14 Geo. III. chap. 78, § 86, passed in 1774, so as to include stables, barns or any other buildings on the estate. 8 Eng. Stat. at L. p. 397 (7 Geo. III.—18 Geo. III.). Speaking of the statute of 6 Anne, Chancellor Kent says: "Until this statute, tenants by the curtesy and in dower were responsible at common law for accidental fires; and tenants for life and years, created by the act of the parties, were responsible, also, under the statute of Gloucester, as for permissive waste." 4 Kent, Com. p. 82. As to the question whether the action for permissive waste lies against a tenant for years, most of the authorities are collected in the notes to Greene v. Cole, 2 Saund. 252, where it is stated as clear law that at common law the action only lay against tenant by the curtesy, tenant in dower, or guardian, but that by the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I. chap. 5) the action is given against lessee for life or years, or tenant per autre vie, or against the assignee or tenant for life or years for waste done after the assignment. Harnett v. Maitland, 16 Mees. & W. 261.

The first practical question raised by the argument of plaintiff's counsel, as aforesaid, is whether the law of waste, as it existed in England after the passage of the statute of Gloucester, and before the passage of the statute of 6 Anne (for the latter statute has never been in force in this state), is so far binding in this state as to hold a life tenant responsible for an accidental fire. We do not think the doctrine of permissive waste has ever been understood to extend so far as to include damages thus occasioned. The rule was adopted in England in very early times, and was then adapted to the doctrine which there prevailed regarding the almost sacred rights of landowners under feudal tenures, which had not then been abolished, and were not until Stat. 12 Car. II. chap. 24, passed in A. D. 1660. But even in England, with all the inherited tendencies of the governing classes in favor of the feudal system, and the superior rights of the landed aristocracy, the law evidently came to be considered too rigid, as it was finally repealed, so far as the liability for accidental fires was concerned, by the aforesaid statute of Anne. It is true that the statute of Gloucester is one of the English statutes which was found to be in force in this state by the committee appointed by the general assembly in October, 1748, to prepare a bill "for introducing into this colony such statutes of England as are agreeable to the Constitution" (5 R. I. Col. Rec. 289; Acts and Laws of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode Island, 1745-52, p. 70); and, as modified by our statute of waste, it is probably still in force. But we think it has never been considered that under our statute, which practically supersedes the statute of Gloucester, a tenant for life or for years could be compelled to rebuild premises destroyed by accidental fire. See 3 Dane. Abr. 228, 229; Parker v. Chambliss, 12 Ga. 235. Speaking of permissive waste. Chancellor Kent says: "There does not appear to have been any question raised, and judicially decided, in this country, respecting the tenant's responsibility for accidental fires, as coming under the head of this species of waste. I am not aware that the statute of Anne has, except in one instance, been formally adopted in any of the states." (It has since been adopted in Wisconsin; and also in New York, in regard to fires in woods and fallow land. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 156, 157, and notes.) "It was intimated upon the argument in the case of White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 674, that the question had not been decided, and conflicting suggestions were made by counsel. Perhaps the universal silence in our courts upon the subject of any such responsibility of the tenant for accidental fires is presumptive evidence that the doctrine of permissive waste has never been introduced, and carried to that extent, in the common-law jurisprudence of the United States." Mr. Kerr, in his late work on Real Property, under the head of "Permissive Waste," says: "The tenant for life is answerable if the houses or other buildings on the premises are destroyed by fire from the negligence or carelessness of himself or his servants; and he must rebuild within a convenient time at his own expense. The life tenant is not liable, however, if the fire is the result of an accident, and he and his servants are free from fault." See also Hopk. Real Prop. (Hornbook Series) 62, 63, and cases cited. Mr. Washburn, in his work on Real Property, 5th ed. 157, states the law to be that, if the fire occurs without the fault of the tenant, he would not be responsible. Such seems to be the well-settled, if not, indeed, the unquestioned, law in this country as to permissive waste. And it is certainly entirely consistent with right and reason. If a building is destroyed by fire through the carelessness or negligence of the tenant or of his servants, which is the same thing, he is, and ought to be, responsible in damages therefor; for he is bound to the exercise of due care and diligence in the use of property, the fee of which is in another. But he is not, and cannot in reason be held, liable for damages caused by an accident, where he is entirely free from fault. See Fay v. Brewer, 3 Pick. 203; Barnard v. Poor, 21 Pick. 378; Scott v. Scott, 18 Gratt. 165; Clark v. Foot, 8 Johns. 421; Wade v. Malloy, 16 Hun, 226; Maull v. Wilson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 443; Cornish v. Strutton, 8 B. Mon. 586. In White v. McCann, 1 Ir. C. L. Rep. 217, Blackburne, Ch. J., says: "There is no authority or position that the accidental destruction of premises amounts to permissive waste, or to a tort, on the part of a tenant." In United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65, it was held that, in the absence of an express covenant to repair, a tenant is not answerable for accidental damages, nor is he bound to rebuild if the buildings are accidentally destroyed by fire or otherwise. The case of Clemence v. Steere, 1 R. I. 272, 53 Am. Dec. 621, cited by plaintiff's counsel in support of his position, is in harmony with this doctrine. The language quoted from the opinion, "If the house was torn down after she left the premises, and neither by her direction or permission, she is responsible,"—although only a dictum, and used by way of illustration in charging the jury, implies that in case the tenant negligently leaves or abandons the premises, and the house is torn down by a stranger, the tenant is liable. In the case of White v. Wagner, 4 Harr. & J. 373, 7 Am. Dec. 674, cited by plaintiff's counsel, the court held that a lessee was responsible where the house was destroyed by a mob, on the ground that as the lessee "did of his own authority, without the consent of the plaintiff, divert the house to a totally different and much more dangerous purpose, well aware of the risk which the property would thereby have to encounter, on principles of law and justice, as between himself and the plaintiff he becomes responsible." It will at once be seen that the decision of that case was based upon the misconduct of the tenant in diverting the house to an improper and unauthorized use, and therefore that it is not an authority in support of the broad doctrine contended for by the plaintiff's counsel. Indeed, it is fair to infer, from certain language used by the court, that if the defendant had continued to use the house for the purposes for which it was let, and it had been destroyed by a mob, the defendant would not have been held liable. Moreover, the decision, even on the ground upon which it was put, was by a divided court. Finally, then, as to the plaintiff's contention aforesaid regarding the liability of the life tenant simply as such, without reference to the language of the devise in question, we are of opinion that it is untenable.

We now come to the plaintiff's main contention, which is that the acceptance of the devise by the life tenant imposed upon her the liability to repair to the same extent as though she had accepted a lease of the premises containing an absolute covenant to repair. The defendant's contention, on the contrary, is that the language of the devise relied on by plaintiff adds nothing to the obligation of the life tenant to keep up the estate and commit no waste, and that the only promise that can properly be implied is the promise which is to be implied on the part of every life tenant, namely, that no waste shall be committed. This he concedes was clearly the duty of the life tenant, being made so by R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 268, wherein the method of recovery for such violation is prescribed to be an action of waste. The position taken by plaintiff's counsel, that where, in a lease, there is an express and unqualified covenant on the part of the tenant to repair the premises, he is bound to do so, even though they be destroyed by fire or accident, seems to be well supported by authority. Taylor, Land. & T. 8th ed. § 357, and cases cited; Smith, Land. & T. Am. notes, 258, 259; Phillips v. Stevens, 16 Mass. 238; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray, 109; Cook v. Champlain Transp. Co. 1 Denio, 91; Scott v. Scott, 13 Gratt. 166; Abby v. Billups, 35 Miss. 631; David v. Ryan, 47 Iowa. 642; McIntosh v. 44 L. R. A.

Lown, 49 Barb. 550; Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88, 36 Am. Rep. 659. These cases seem to proceed upon the principle that, although a man may be excused from a duty imposed upon him by law, if he is disabled from performing it without any fault of his own, and he has no remedy over, yet when, by his own contract, he creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it in the contract. See note to Walton v. Waterhouse, 2 Saund. 422. It is doubtless competent for a man to assume whatever liability he may see fit in connection with the occupancy of real estate. He may agree absolutely to deliver the possession of the premises to the owner at the end of the term in like good condition in every respect as they were at the date of the lease, or he may agree to pay rent for the entire term, without providing for any abatement or exception in case the premises are rendered untenable by fire or other casualty, and thereby bind himself to fulfil the covenant to the letter. And, if the bargain turns out to be a hard one for him, he has no legal ground of complaint, for it was his own free and voluntary act. He might have limited his liability to pay rent only so long as the premises were tenantable, or have made an exception in case they were destroyed by fire or other unavoidable casualty, as is almost always done. But, if he does not, his liability is absolute. Now, whether this principle is to be extended by analogy to include a case where there was no express covenant or agreement to repair, but only an implied agreement growing out of the acceptance of a devise, is the question which we are called upon to decide.

Counsel for plaintiff has cited numerous authorities to the effect that, where a devisee or legatee accepts the gift of the testator, he thereby obligates himself to perform the condition attached to the devise or bequest. That such is the law there can be no doubt. A testator may attach such conditions to his gift as he sees fit, and he who accepts it must also accept and assume the burdens attached thereto, as in this way only can the intention of the testator be accomplished. This doctrine has been carried to the extent of holding the devisee personally liable, without any express promise, for all the debts of the testator, in a case where all of the real and personal estate was given to the donee, he to pay said debts. Gridley v. Gridley, 24 N. Y. 130. See also Messenger v. Andrews, 4 Russ. Ch. 478; Wheeler v. Lester, 1 Bradf. 293; Ditch v. Sennott, 117 Ill. 362; Woonsocket Inst. for Sav. v. Ballou, 16 R. I. 351, 1 L. R. A. 555. But these and similar cases, in so holding, only go to the extent of saying, in effect, that the intent of the testator in making the gift with the condition or burden attached must be carried out by the donee or devisee who accepts it. Veazey v. Whitehouse, 10 N. H. 409. In the case at bar, the duty which the testator devolved upon the life tenant was to keep the premises in repair, and this duty was assumed by her in accepting the devise. Now, what is the natural and ordinary meaning and import of the language used by the testator, "she to keep the same in repair?" that is, what would ordinarily be understood by the use of that language when used in a will in connection with a devise of real estate? Simply this, we think: That the devisee is to take such care of the estate as a prudent and diligent person would take of his own absolute property; that is, such care as good husbandry may require, which would, of course, include proper repairs. And in accepting the devise the life tenant impliedly promised to exercise that degree of care and prudence in the management and use thereof. But to take the language aforesaid out of its setting, and give it the force and effect which it would have when used in an absolute and unqualified covenant to repair by the tenant in a lease, would be to give it an artificial and technical meaning never contemplated by the deviser, and to impose a burden which the life tenant never supposed, or had any reason to suppose, she was assuming by accepting the devise. The brief of plaintiff's counsel shows that he has been very diligent in examining the law pertaining to the duties and obligations of life tenants, covering a period of two centuries and more; but he cites no authority which goes to the extent of holding generally that the mere acceptance by a life tenant of a devise of real estate, containing a direction to keep in repair, imposes upon him the duty to rebuild in case the buildings upon the land are accidentally destroyed by fire. And as a devise like the one in question is, and always has been, very common in wills, and, moreover, as life tenants would seldom voluntarily assume the burden of rebuilding premises destroyed by fire or other accident, unless the same would be for their benefit, or unless compelled by law to do so, the very fact that no case can be found in this country where the court has declared that the duty to rebuild is the same as that devolved upon a tenant by his unqualified covenant to repair, when incorporated in a lease, is pretty good evidence that such has never been considered to be the law. The case cited by plaintiff's counsel which comes nearest to supporting the doctrine contended for is the English case of Re Skingley, 3 Macn.

& G. 221. That was a case where, after the dwelling house was destroyed by fire, the chancellor, upon the petition of the remainderman, ordered the guardian of the life tenant, who was a lunatic, to rebuild the house; that is, he was to use so much of the lunatic's estate, over and above the amount received for insurance on the building, as was necessary to rebuild the house. It appears, however, that the petition was supported by certain of the next of kin of the lunatic himself, on the ground that it would be for his interest to rebuild, rather than to incur the risk of the absolute forfeiture of the premises under the law of waste. It is fairly to be inferred from the case, taken as a whole, that it was considered to be for the best interest of the lunatic that his estate should defray so much of the expense of rebuilding as represented the difference between the insurance and the cost of rebuilding. Moreover, it was a proceeding in chancery, and not an action at law. We do not think, therefore, that it is decisive of the question before us. We therefore decide that said Margaret Grogan was not under obligation to rebuild the house which was destroyed by fire, by virtue of the provision contained in the devise aforesaid.

But the plaintiff further contends that, apart from the life tenant's agreement to repair, a sound public policy would require that the money received by a life tenant on account of a loss by fire should be used in rebuilding, and, if not so used, then should be paid over to the remainderman. If a policy is issued to a life tenant for the full value of the fee, and this amount is recovered by him, he certainly ought to be held to be a trustee for the remainderman as to the excess of the amount received over the value of his life interest. Welsh v. London Assur. Corp. 151 Pa. 607. See also Brough v. Higgins, 2 Gratt. 409, and Graham v. Roberts, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 99. In the case at bar, however, the declaration does not allege that the policy covered anything more than the life tenant's interest in the building which was destroyed by fire, and, if it did not, she was clearly entitled to such insurance in full.

Demurrer sustained.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

Robert C. STORRIE

v.

HOUSTON CITY STREET RAILWAY COMPANY et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. A legislative grant to municipal corporations of the right to improve public highways at the cost of adjacent property supposed to be benefited thereby is not prohibited by Const. 1805, art. 3, § 48, providing that the legislature shall not levy taxes or impose burdens upon the people except to raise revenue sufficient for the economical administration of the government, as that refers to taxes and burdens imposed by the legislature itself with a view to the administration of the state government.

NOTE.—As to liability of railroad property to street assessments, see Kuehner v. Freeport (Ill.) 17 L. R. A. 774; Mt. Pleasant v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) 11 L. R. A. 520; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 28 L. R. A. 793; Chicago, M. & St. P. 44 L. R. A.

2. An enlargement of the liability of a street-railway company for paving a street is not unconstitutional, where the company's rights were acquired subject to Const. 1895, art. 1, § 17, providing that all privileges and franchises shall be subject to legislative control, and that there shall be no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities.

R. Co. v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 28 L. R. A. 249; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 29 L. R. A. 195; Philadelphia, McCann, v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 564.

3. A street-railway company is included in the general procedure provided by the Houston city charter, §§ 23a et seq., for the enforcement of assessments for street paving, although some of the provisions are strictly applicable only to abutting property, since the charter expressly creates a liability of the street-railway company to assessment, and there is no distinct procedure provided for enforcing it.

(June 13, 1898.)

CRoss WRITS of error to review a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District reversing a judgment of the District Court for Harris County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of certain street-improvement certificates; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the decree as reduced the rate of interest; and defendant appealing from so much as held it liable for the payment of the certificates. Reversed on plaintiff's appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ewing & Ring, for plaintiff:

Since the street-railway company was clearly made liable for its proportion of the cost (charter, § 23a); and since all the charter prerequisites or jurisdictional conditions to letting of the contract for and performance of the work were indisputably applicable to the street-railway company (charter, §§ 23b, 23c); and since a proper assessment of the cost was made by the city council, according to the measure of liability prescribed by the charter,—the sequent is, that the street-railway company was liable for such cost, in the manner and by the measure prescribed by the certificates, the street railroad being a "tract of land" within the meaning of the provisions relating to division of instalments and issuance of certificates (charter, §§ 23c and f).

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 216; Black, Law Dict. verb. Utile, p. 12, verb. Abut, and pp. 685, 1180; Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 104, 17 L. R. A. 774; Charter of City of Houston, §§ 23a, 23b, 23c, 23d, 23f, Special Laws, 22d Leg. 1891, pp. 79-86; Adams v. Fisher, 63 Tex. 657; Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 553; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 655; Monmouth County Freeholders v. Red Bank & H. Turnp. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 91; People, Dunkirk & F. R. Co., v. Cassidy, 46 N. Y. 46; Welty, Assessments, §§ 200, 202; North Beach & M. R. Co.'s Appeal, 32 Cal. 312; Purifoy v. Lamar, 112 Ala. 123; New Haven v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 38 Conn. 422, 9 Am. Rep. 399; Cooley, Taxn. p. 651, note 1.

The provision of the charter (§23a) in relation to collection and credit of a portion of the cost from street railways, by its express language and the reason of the thing, applies only to those companies whose incipient occupancy of the street is after its improvement; hence, the claim of liability only to the city might, with equal show of reason, be made by any abutting lotowner. Besides, the cost of the portion of the streets in question occupied by the street-railway company was not charged to abutting lotowners, and was hence, in effect, credited by deduction, and since the issuance of the certificates by the city to Storrie operated, in effect, an equitable assignment of the demand, it does not lie in the mouth of the street railway, in any view, to complain.

Houston City Charter, § 23a, Special Laws, 22d Leg. 1891, pp. 79, 80; Fairbanks v. Sargent, 117 N. Y. 320, 6 L. R. A. 477; Harris County v. Campbell, 68 Tex. 22.

It is competent for the legislature, from high motives of public policy, as in the case of revenue taxes, to exempt certain classes of property, such as homesteads, without affecting the validity of assessments on other property.

Storrie v. Cortes, 90 Tex. 283, 35 L. R. A. 606; Connor v. Paris, 87 Tex. 37; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State, 62 Tex. 633; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Chowning, 86 Tex. 654, 24 L. R. A. 504; Cooley, Taxn. 171, 202; Aberdeen Bank v. Chehalis County, 166 U. S. 440, 41 L. ed. 1069.

The improvement lien being laid upon the property itself, in the exercise of the sovereign right of taxation, for the public benefit, was essentially paramount to any individual interest, absolute or qualified, and hence was superior to the qualified interest of the mortgage, the improvement act being substantially in force when the mortgage was given.

Wabash Eastern R. Co. v. East Lake Fork Special Drainage Dist. Comrs. 134 Ill. 384, 10 L. R. A. 285; Provident Inst. for Sav. v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 28 L. ed. 1102; Houston City Charter, 1889, Special Laws, 21st Leg. p. 100; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 433; Violet v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 567, 31 L. R. A. 382.

The property liable was described by the charter, and the description given was therefore ample, ratione materiae.

The street-railway company, by failing to object or take steps to enjoin, after due personal notice of the rolls, is now estopped to urge any of such objections.

Houston City Charter, §§ 23c, 23d, Special Laws, 22d Leg. 1891, pp. 82, 83; Flewellin v. Proetzel, 80 Tex. 191; Welty, Assessments, §§ 312, 313; Dyer v. Parrott, 60 Cal. 552; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky. 380; Clinton v. Portland, 26 Or. 410; Nelson v. Saginaw, 106 Mich. 659; Buckman v. Landers, 111 Cal. 347; Potter v. Black, 15 Wash. 189; Harney v. Benson, 113 Cal. 314; State v. Norton, 63 Minn. 497.

Messrs. Lanier, Kirby, & Martin, for defendants:

There was no authority in law for making a roll of ownership as against the property in the street of the Houston City Street Railway Company.

Houston City Charter, § 23a, Acts 1891.

The action of the city council in approving the roll with the pretended name of the street-railway company thereon, it having no lots, blocks, or other tract of land mentioned thereon or abutting on the streets paved, and because the name of the company was not given on such roll, nor the amount of its liability in such a way as to know the extent of the same, and the issuance of the pretended certificates sued on in this cause by the mayor, he being unauthorized, were each and all absolute nullities.

Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 55, 60, 373.

There is no such thing as an equitable transfer of a claim owing to a government.

If there can be such equitable transfer, the transfer must be of such a character that the fund holder can safely pay, and is compellable to do so, though forbidden by the assignor.

Christmas v. Russell, 14 Wall. 69, 20 L. ed. 762; Rogers v. Hosack, 18 Wend. 334; Hoyt v. Story, 3 Barb. 263; Dickenson v. Phillips, 1 Barb. 461; Clayton v. Fawcett, 2 Leigh, 19; Hopkins v. Beebe, 26 Pa. 85; Hall v. Jackson, 20 Pick. 194; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1290; Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441, 22 L. ed. 623; Wright v. Ellison, 1 Wall. 16, 17 L. ed. 555; 1 Jones, Liens, §§ 51, 52.

The notice published in the newspaper simply gave in substance the resolution, and instead of informing the street-railway company that its property was sought to be charged with the cost of paving, operated the reverse of this by informing it that the entire cost of paving was to be borne by the abutting landowners, except street intersections, which were to be paid for by the city.

There being no sufficient notice the entire contract, in so far as the street railway is concerned, is absolutely void, the proceedings not being due process of law.

Adams v. Fisher, 63 Tex. 658.

The district court erred in overruling the general demurrer of the defendants.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. South Park Comrs. 11 Ill. App. 562, 107 Ill. 105; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 449; Koons v. Lucas, 52 Iowa, 181; Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 92, 17 L. R. A. 774; Storrie v. Cortes, 90 Tex. 283, 35 L. R. A. 666; Taylor v. Boyd, 63 Tex. 533; Texas Transp. Co. v. Boyd, 67 Tex. 153; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 516-527; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 761; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 71, 72.

The principle of assessments for local improvements is the real or supposed benefit resulting from the improvement to the property on which the specific charge is laid.

Taylor v. Boyd, 63 Tex. 533; Texas Transp. Co. v. Boyd, 67 Tex. 153; Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 92, 17 L. R. A. 774.

The property assessed must be real, and not personal.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 516-527; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 761; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. South Park Comrs. 11 Ill. App. 562.

The right of way of a railroad company across a street can in no proper sense of the term be classed as property abutting on the street.

Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Page v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 441; Parmelee v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 267; Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 473; Chicago City R. Co. v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 573, 32 44 L. R. A.

Am. Rep. 54; O'Reilly v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 449; Koons v. Lucas, 52 Iowa, 181.

The district erred in holding the alleged paving certificates valid, and in assessing 10 per cent interest on the amount of principal sued for, and in decreeing that the judgment should bear 10 per cent interest from its date.

The certificates provide that they shall bear 8 per cent interest from their date on the principal, and 10 per cent after maturity. They describe no property. The charter describes no way by which a contractor can collect for such paving.

Violett v. Alexandria, 92 Va. 561, 31 L. R. A. 382; Anderson v. Post (Tenn. Ch. App.) 38 S. W. 283.

The district court erred in holding that the lien of plaintiff Storrie against the property of the Houston City Street-Railway Company is not subordinate to the lien of the defendants, the American Loan & Trust Company, and the purchasers of the property of the Houston City Street-Railway Company, and in enforcing said alleged lien of the plaintiff against said property.

Bibbins v. Clark, 90 Iowa, 230, 29 L. R. A. 278; Pittsburgh's Appeal, 40 Pa. 455; Sullivan v. Clifton, 55 N. J. L. 324, 20 L. R. A. 719; Higgins v. Bordages, 88 Tex. 458; Atina Ins. Co. v. Bank of Wilcox, 48 Neb. 544; Waco v. Prather, 90 Tex. 80; Flewelling v. Proetz, 80 Tex. 191; Chapman v. First Nat. Bank, 98 Ala. 528, 22 L. R. A. 78; Fletcher v. Kelly, 88 Iowa, 475, 21 L. R. A. 347; Rankin v. Scott, 12 Wheat. 177, 6 L. ed. 592; Howard v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 101 U. S. 837, 25 L. ed. 1081; Cincinnati City v. Morgan, 3 Wall. 275, 18 L. ed. 146; Wabash & E. Canal Co. v. Beers, 2 Black, 448, 17 L. ed. 327; Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 1 Pet. 386, 7 L. ed. 189.

Messrs. Hume & Kleberg and Hutcheson, Campbell, & Myer also for defendants.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted October 23, 1894, by Robert C. Storrie against the Houston City Street-Railway Company and the American Loan & Trust Company of Omaha, Nebraska, and subsequently John H. Kirby, as receiver of the said street-railway company, was made a party to the suit. The object of the suit was to recover from the street-railway company the costs of paving the streets named in the petition between the rails of the said railroad and 6 inches on each side thereof, which paving was done by Storrie under a contract with the city of Houston, and for which he received improvement certificates, upon which the suit was instituted. The petition, among other things, alleged that the plaintiff became contractor under the proper proceedings had by the city council under the charter of the city, and performed the work, receiving from the city the certificates mentioned in the petition; and that the amounts of the certificates were the cost of the work done in grading and paving the portions of the street occupied by and used by the defendant for railroad purposes.—that is, the space between its tracks and:

6 inches over. From the statement made by the court of civil appeals we state the following facts necessary to the decision of questions raised in this court:

Prior to November 5, 1883, the city of Houston was chartered by a special law, and on that date, by ordinance duly adopted, granted to the Houston City Street-Railway Company the right to lay its tracks on the streets of the city, to continue for thirty years. On October 23, 1890, that ordinance was amended so as to authorize the street-railway company to use electric power in propelling its cars, in consideration of which the company was to pay for paving the streets for 6 inches outside of its rails on each side of the track, in addition to the requirements of the charter of the city by which it was to pay for paving the space between the rails. The company accepted the terms of the ordinance, and operated its cars by electricity. On September 20, 1890, the street-railway company gave a deed of trust upon its property and franchises to the American Loan & Trust Company of Omaha, Nebraska, to secure the bonds of the said railway company. During the pendency of this suit the loan and trust company brought a suit in the United States circuit court at Galveston against the railway company to foreclose the deed of trust, and during the pendency of that suit John H. Kirby was appointed receiver. The city of Houston was not a party to the suit in the United States circuit court. The mortgage was by the United States circuit court foreclosed, and the property sold under the decree of that court, A. H. Hayward being the purchaser at that sale. In accordance with the requirements of the charter, the city council of Houston passed proper resolutions by the requisite vote for improving the streets in question, and entered into a contract with plaintiff, Storrie, in such manner that if the property of the street-railway company was included within the terms of the contract the company is liable for the costs of making the improvement under that contract, and a lien existed upon the property and franchises by virtue of the certificates issued against the said company to the contractor. It is uncontroverted that the contractor, Storrie, did the work at the instance of the city of Houston, and that the certificates sued upon were issued by the city against the railway company and represent the cost of the work done upon the streets between the rails of the said railway company and 6 inches beyond such rail, and that the work was finished when the certificates were issued. One third of the lands, lots, and blocks fronting the streets improved by the city were and are homesteads. Upon trial in the district court before the judge a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the street-railway company for the amount of the certificates, with interest thereon at 8 per cent, and against the other parties and the street-railway company, foreclosing the lien upon the said street railway and its franchises, which judgment the court of civil appeals reversed, and rendered judgment against the railway company for the amount of the claim with 6 per cent interest instead of 8 per cent. The court foreclosed $18,277.94 of the judgment and the costs of the district court upon the property of the railway company as described in the petition against all of the defendants, and directed an order of sale to be issued thereon. Both parties presented to this court applications for writs of error, which were granted. The application of Storrie was granted for cause, but the application of the street-car company, the loan and trust company, and J. H. Kirby was granted because Storrie's application had been allowed, and it was desired to have the whole case before this court.

44 L. R. A.

The petition of the street-car company, the loan and trust company, and Kirby presents quite a number of objections to the judgments of the district court and the court of civil appeals, which we have carefully examined, and find no error committed against them requiring a reversal of the judgment. We will, however, briefly state our views upon two of the questions presented by that application. It is contended (1) that the contract between the city of Houston and the contractor, Storrie, bound the abutting property owners to pay for the entire work of paving the streets; (2) that as to the loan and trust company the portion of the charter of the city of Houston which authorized the assessment in question is in violation of § 48, art. 3, of the Constitution of 1895 of the state of Texas. In conformity to the requirements of its charter the city of Houston took all the steps necessary to reach the point of making a contract for the pavement of the streets. The law required that the necessity for such improvement should be declared by the city through a two-thirds vote of the whole number of aldermen elected; and in compliance with that requirement of the charter the city council, by the necessary vote, declared it to be necessary to pave specified portions of a number of streets, which were designated in three separate resolutions. In each resolution the following was embraced: "That the cost of constructing said improvements, except as to street intersections, together with the cost of collection, shall be wholly defrayed by the owner or owners of the lot or lots, block or blocks, or tract of land when not laid out into lots and blocks, abutting upon the said portions of said streets to be improved, as provided for in §§ 23a et seq. of the charter of the city of Houston; and said improvements shall be paid for in five annual instalments." Storrie entered into a contract with the city of Houston to pave the streets named, making the resolutions a part of the contract. It will be observed that the resolution above quoted refers to § 23a of the charter of the city as fixing the manner in which the improvement named shall be paid for. Section 23a, after providing for the manner of reaching the making of a contract for street improvements, contains these clauses: "And the costs of all such improvements shall be a tax and charge against the person or persons owning such lots, blocks, or tracts of land at the time such tax or any portion thereof shall become due as to such lots, blocks, and tracts of land and a lien and encumbrance upon the land itself, and said tax against the property owner may be collected and the lien upon the property foreclosed in any court having jurisdiction: . . . provided nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the city council from constructing sewers and drains or making street improvements in whole or in part at the expense of the city should it be deemed advisable so to do. . . . Any railroad or street railway company shall be liable for the costs of grading, paving, or otherwise improving the portion of the street or intersection used or occupied by such railway company, and such costs shall be a lien upon the property and franchises of the company. The portion of a street occupied by any railroad or street-railway company shall be deemed to mean all that portion of the same between the rails of all tracks laid and extending 6 inches beyond the outer edge of the rails of such road, and including the space between the double tracks and between the main track, side tracks, or turnouts." Construing the language of the resolution and that of § 23a of the charter just quoted together, it means that the street-railway company should pay for all the pavement upon such streets lying between the rails of its tracks and between its different tracks, side tracks, and turnouts, and that the remainder should be paid for by the owners of the property abutting upon the said streets on each side. Under the charter the city might have paid for a portion or all of the work itself, or, as it has done in this case, require the street-car company and the abutting owners to pay the entire cost of the work. The word "wholly," as used in the resolution above copied, does not refer to, nor mean, the entire surface of the street, but means the entire cost of that portion which was to be paid for by the property owners. The city council had no authority to make a contract by which the abutting property owners would be charged with the costs of paving the entire surface of the street when it was occupied in part by a street railway, and it will be presumed that the language used was intended to bind the parties in accordance with the terms of the law which by the reference to § 23a was made a part of the contract itself. On behalf of the street-car company counsel urge with earnestness and much force that the charter of the city of Houston, so far as it authorizes the city council to make improvements upon the streets at the cost of the abutting property owners, is violative of the following section of our state Constitution: "The legislature shall not have the right to levy taxes or impose burdens upon the people, except to raise revenue sufficient for the economical administration of the government, in which may be included the following purposes: The payment of all interest upon the bonded debt of the state. The erection and repairs of public buildings. The benefit of the sinking fund, which shall not be more than 2 per centum of the public debt; and 44 L. R. A.

for the payment of the present floating debt of the state, including matured bonds, for the payment of which the sinking fund is inadequate. The support of public schools, in which shall be included colleges and universities established by the state, and the maintenance and support of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, the payment of the costs of assessing and collecting the revenue; and the payment of all officers, agents, and employees of the state government, and all incidental expenses connected therewith. The support of the blind asylum, the deaf and dumb asylum and the insane asylum, the state cemetery and the public grounds of the state. The enforcement of quarantine regulations on the coast of Texas. The protection of the frontier." Const. 1895, art. 3, § 48. Article 3 of the Constitution of 1895 prescribes the organization of the legislature of the state, the qualification of its members and the like, the proceedings by which its business is to be transacted, and expresses certain requirements and limitations in the exercise of legislative functions. Section 48, above quoted, falls under the subdivision of article 3, designated in the Constitution as "Requirements and Limitations." The requirements express the commands of the people to the legislature to pass laws to accomplish certain purposes which the people determined upon as part of the policy of the state; for example, we quote the following sections: "Sec. 46. The legislature shall, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, enact effective vagrant laws. Sec. 47. The legislature shall pass laws prohibiting the establishment of lotteries and gift enterprises in this state, as well as the sale of tickets in lotteries, gift enterprises or other evasions involving the lottery principle, established or existing in other states." These sections, with many others, show that the convention had in mind a number of topics upon which they were not willing to trust the legislature to exercise its own judgment as to whether it should legislate or not, but commanded that in these instances laws shall be passed to accomplish the purposes named. This part of the Constitution also embraces sections which prohibit the legislature from doing certain acts. Some of these are prohibitions against the doing of things by the legislature itself, and others prohibit that body from conferring authority upon municipal corporations to do the things named therein. Section 48 embodies a prohibition against the exercise of the taxing power by the legislature except for certain purposes named. The language, "the legislature shall not have the right to levy taxes or impose burdens upon the people," etc., denies to the legislative department the right to exercise this power itself, and does not refer to any action by the legislature which would confer such authority upon a municipal corporation. It limits the exercise of that power by the legislature to raise revenue for the administration of the state government, as distinguished from the administration of municipal government. The view that this section refers to "levying taxes and imposing burdens" by the legislature, and to such burdens as are imposed with a view to the administration of the state government, is strongly supported by the character of the objects enumerated for which the revenue may be raised, all of which pertain to the administration of the state government, and none of which could be committed to local municipal control.

The following sections illustrate the care with which the framers of the Constitution guarded the people against what experience had shown to be hurtful policies on the part of municipal governments.

"Sec. 52. The legislature shall have no power to authorize any county, city, town or other political corporation or subdivision of the state to lend its credit or to grant public money or thing of value in aid of or to any individual, association, or corporation whatsoever; or to become a stockholder in such corporation, association, or company.

"Sec. 53. The legislature shall have no power to grant, or to authorize any county or municipal authority to grant, any extra compensation, fee, or allowance to a public officer, agent, servant, or contractor after service has been rendered or a contract has been entered into and performed in whole or in part; nor pay, nor authorize the payment of, any claim created against any county or municipality of the state, under any agreement or contract made without authority of law."

The authority of counties, cities, and towns to levy taxes is carefully prescribed and limited by our Constitution, and the particularity with which the convention expressed in the Constitution those limitations upon the power of the legislature to confer authority upon counties, towns, and cities justifies the conclusion that it was not intended by the use of the general language employed in § 48 above quoted to prohibit the legislature from conferring upon municipal corporations the power to improve streets at the expense of the property owners. The conclusion is irresistible that in adopting § 48 of article 3, the convention did not intend to take from the legislature the well-recognized power to grant to municipal corporations the right to improve public highways at the cost of the adjacent property which is supposed to be benefited thereby. The court of civil appeals reversed the judgment of the district court, and foreclosed the lien of the plaintiff, Storrie, upon the property of the street-railway company for the cost of paving between the rails of the street railroad, and reduced the interest from 8 per cent as prescribed in the charter of the city to 6 per cent. The amount of recovery is reduced and a lien denied for the cost of paving outside the rails. Section 23a of the charter of the city of Houston provides, in substance, that any street-railway company which occupies a part of a street when it is determined to pave or otherwise improve it shall be liable for the cost of such paving "between the rails of all tracks laid and extending 6 inches beyond the outer edge of the rails of such road, and including the space between the double tracks and between the main track, side tracks, and turnouts." The claim of Storrie was for the cost of paving the street to the extent specified in the charter, and he is entitled to a lien upon the property for the whole cost of such pavement, unless the proposition can be sustained that as to the loan and trust company the statute is unconstitutional, so far as it adds to the liability of the railroad over and above what was authorized by the law at the time its mortgage was executed.

Section 17, art. 1, of the Constitution of 1895 of the state contains this provision: "No irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities shall be made, but all privileges and franchises granted by the legislature or created under its authority shall be subject to the control thereof." This provision of the Constitution was in force at the time the street-railway company acquired its right in the streets of Houston and before the mortgage of the trust company was executed. The rights of both the street-railway company and the mortgage company were acquired subject to the control of the legislature upon this question. The legislature had the right to enact the law of 1891, amending the charter of Houston, by which the liability of the street-car company for the cost of paving the street was enlarged. That act does not violate the Constitution of this state nor of the United States. Sioux City Street R. Co. v. Sioux City, 138 U. S. 98, 34 L. ed. 898, 73 Iowa, 367; Wabash Eastern R. Co. v. East Lake Fork Special Drainage Dist. Comrs. 134 Ill. 384, 10 L. R. A. 285; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 789. Mr. Elliott, in his work on Railroads, section above cited, speaking of the liens of such assessments, says: "These liens are purely statutory, and their existence, force, and extent depend upon the terms of the statute creating them. Such liens are ordinarily superior to all liens except general taxes, and the authority of the legislature to make them such is firmly established. The assessments being made on the theory that the property is benefited and enhanced in value in a sum equal to the amount of the assessment, no injury can result to other lienholders, such as mortgagees, mechanic lienholders, and the like." The Code of the state of Iowa contained the following section: "The articles of incorporation, by-laws, rules, and regulations of corporations hereafter organized under the provisions of this title, or whose organization may be adopted or amended hereunder, shall at all times be subject to legislative control, and may be, at any time, altered, abridged, or set aside by law, and every franchise obtained, used, or enjoyed by such corporation may be regulated, withheld, or be subject to conditions imposed upon the enjoyment thereof, whenever the general assembly shall deem necessary for the public good." Code 1873, § 1090. The Sioux City Street-Railway Company organized as a corporation under the general laws of that state, and the city of Sioux City, by an ordinance regularly adopted by its council, conferred upon that company the right to locate, construct, and operate a street railway upon and along certain streets of the city on terms stated in the ordinance, among which was that the said street-railway company "shall pave or macadamize in the time and manner directed the space between the rails," etc. Under this ordinance the street railway was constructed. Afterwards the legislature of Iowa passed an act granting additional powers to cities of the first class with reference to improvement of streets, etc., in which was contained the following provision: "All railway companies and street-railway companies in cities of the first class as provided in § 1 of this act shall be required to pave or repave between the rails and 1 foot outside of their rail at their own expense and cost." Laws 1884, p. 22, § 6. Subsequently the city paved the streets, and the street-railway company paid for the cost of paving between the rails, but resisted the claim for the cost of paving outside of the rails. The supreme court of the state sustained the claim of the city, and the case was removed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which affirmed the judgment of the state court. Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court, in which he very carefully examined and discussed the constitutional question raised by the street-railway company, and in the course of that discussion said: "The company took its franchise subject to such legislation as the state might enact. This is plain from the provision of § 1090 of the Code [of 1873]. The company took its charter subject to the provisions of that section. The general assembly deemed it necessary for the public good to require street railways to pay for the paving of 1 foot outside of the tracks, probably upon the view that it was right that they should be required to pave that part of the street which they used almost exclusively. It was not in the power of the city, by any contract with the company, to deprive the legislature of the power of taxing the company. . . . Under § 1090 of the Iowa Code, the legislature had the power, not only to repeal and amend the articles of incorporation of the company, but to impose any conditions upon the enjoyment of its franchise which the general assembly might deem necessary for the public good. The reservation of this power was a condition of the grant. The city council could make no arrangement with the company which would not be subject, under that section, to the superior power of the general assembly. . . . No question can arise as to the impairment of the obligation of a contract when the company accepted all of its corporate powers subject to the reserve power of the state to modify its charter, and to impose additional burdens upon the enjoyment of its franchise." 138 U. S. 108, 34 L. ed. 902. Not considering the fact that the street-car company entered into the contract with the city by which it agreed to pay for the extra 6 inches, it could not resist the claim of the plaintiff in this case for the cost of paving the 6 inches outside of the rails, because the legislature had the right, under the Constitution, to impose this additional burden upon its property. We cannot understand how the loan and trust company, which claims under a mortgage from the street-car company, could acquire a right superior to that which the mortgagor had. We know of no principle of law which would accord protection to a lien upon property when that protection would not be given to the owner. We think there can be no doubt, under the authorities cited, and especially under the case of Sioux City Street R. Co. v. Sioux City, that the statute in question was valid, and, if the street-car company is liable to the plaintiff for the cost of paving the extra 6 inches, the claim must be enforced for the cost of paving to the full extent claimed against all of the defendants. Section 23a of the charter of Houston, as amended in the year 1891, empowers the city council, by a vote of two thirds of the members elected, to declare the necessity for paving or otherwise improving any street of the city. The city has the power to make such improvement at its own cost, or partly at the cost of the city and partly at the cost of the property owners abutting upon such street and of any street-railway company which may occupy any portion of the street to be improved, except that the city is required to pay for the paving of the intersections of streets. It is unnecessary for us to follow the different steps required to be taken before a contract could be made for such improvement, because there is no question in this case depending upon the proper performance of such acts. The contest begins with the construction of the contract, which we have already disposed of.

The contract having been made with Storie, § 23c of the charter required that the city engineer should from time to time prepare a roll or rolls "showing the number of lots, blocks, or tracts of land, when not divided into lots and blocks, fronting on the street, alley, avenue, or highway to be improved; . . . the name or names of the owner or owners of such lot or part of lot, block, or tract of land, if known to the city engineer, and if unknown to him it shall be so stated: the number of feet frontage of such lot, part of lot, block, or tract of land fronting on the portion of the street to be improved; . . . and the proportional cost to such lot, part of lot, block, or tract of land and the total cost as ascertained and calculated by the city engineer of such improvements necessary to be borne by each, and to be paid by each owner of such property described in such roll." The city engineer was required to certify to the correctness of the roll, when it was to be submitted to the board of public works for their examination; and, after being examined by the city attorney, the law required the roll to be deposited with the secretary of the city, whose duty it was to publish a notice that the roll was placed with him, in some newspaper for four days, and to give notice to each person whose name was placed upon the roll of the fact by mailing a copy of the notice to him at his postoffice address, if known. After the expiration of ten days from the first publication of that notice, the city council was required to approve the roll, and each owner of property whose name was upon it had the right to file a petition with the city council asking a correction of any errors committed in the assessment made against him or in the description of his property. If the city council decided adversely to the claim of the owner, he could apply within five days from the time of the approval of the roll to any court having jurisdiction for a writ of injunction to prevent the enforcement of the assessment against him, but, failing to make such application, or to procure such writ, he would be concluded by the action of the city council, except for fraud and collusion of which he was not aware, and had no opportunity to ascertain. Section 23e provides that after the rolls have been approved, if not otherwise directed by the city council, the sum assessed against each separate tract of land shall be divided by the city secretary into as many instalments as possible, not exceeding ten; no instalment to be less than $10; adding the interest for each year on the entire amount of nondue instalments to the one falling due for that year; the first instalment to become due five days after the approval of the roll of ownership; one of the remaining instalments to become due on the same day of the month in each year thereafter until all should mature. The entire amount assessed against each tract of land would bear interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum until maturity, each instalment to bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum after maturity. A failure to pay any instalment of principal or interest when due "within sixty days of the time when suit shall have been entered on the same" would give to the party entitled to collect the indebtedness the right to declare all subsequent instalments to be due. The owner of the property is accorded the right at any time to pay the whole of the assessment to the holder of the certificate or to the city assessor and collector, who must notify the holder of the certificate or certificates, which would operate as a full discharge. Section 23f empowers the secretary of the city, on the fifth day after the roll has been approved, to issue improvement certificates for the sum assessed against each property owner, for the amounts specified on the improvement roll, showing the number of lot or lots, block, or description of the property upon which said sum of money is a lien, the name of the person mentioned in said roll as the owner, and that such sum of money is a tax against the owner, and a lien upon the property therein described. It was held by the court of civil appeals that the law did not require the street-railway property to be placed upon the roll of ownership, and from this conclusion the further conclusion is reached that the certificates of indebtedness were improperly issued against it, and that the statutory rate of interest does not apply to that company. It is true that the street-car company is not mentioned by name among the items of property required to be placed upon the roll of ownership, and a part of the description which is required to be given could not be made to apply to it. The descriptive matter required to be entered upon the roll applies fully to lots and blocks abutting on such streets, but the numbers do not apply to lands which abut upon the street, and not divided into blocks and lots. Likewise the street-railway property neither fronts upon the street nor has it numbers like lots and blocks, but it could be described upon the roll with the name of the owner, and the amount assessed against it. We do not think it correct to hold that, because all of the description is not applicable to the property in question, it cannot be properly placed upon the roll. Our statute requires that in making the assessment of lands for taxes the statement shall set forth the name of the owner, the abstract number, the number of the survey, the name of the original grantee, and the number of the certificate. It has been held that to omit the abstract or certificate number renders the assessment void, unless there is shown some good reason for such omission. Morgan v. Smith, 70 Tex. 641. Many surveys in Texas have no certificate number, and could not be described as required by the statutes; yet, if the description which is applicable be placed in the statement, it certainly would not be void for want of that which could not be applied to the subject.

It is claimed by counsel for Storrie that the words "tracts of land" can be properly construed to embrace the easement which the street-railway company had in the streets, and the proposition we find well supported by good authority, but prefer to place our decision upon the broader basis that the intention of the legislature in enacting the law shall govern, although it may appear to conflict with some of the language used in expressing that intention. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 218, 246; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 72; Womack v. Womack, 17 Tex. 1; Stone v. Hill, 72 Tex. 540; Russell v. Farquhar, 55 Tex. 359; Molnery v. Galveston, 58 Tex. 340; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 268, 22 L. R. A. 483; Halbert v. San Saba Springs Land & Live Stock Assn. 89 Tex. 230. Mr. Sutherland, in his work on Statutory Construction (§ 218), says: "It is indispensable to a correct understanding of a statute to inquire first what is the subject of it, what object is intended to be accomplished by it. When the subject-matter is once clearly ascertained, and its general intent, a key is found to all its intricacies;—general words may be restrained to it, and those of narrower import may be expanded to embrace it to effectuate that intent. When the intention can be collected from the statute, words may be modified, altered, or supplied so as to obviate any repugnancy or inconsistency with such intention." In the case of Queen Ins. Co. v. State, above cited, the question was whether the law then under consideration declared the acts mentioned by it to be unlawful so as to constitute an offense. In determining that point the court said: "It is true that, while trusts are defined in the 1st section, nowhere, either in that or any other section, are they expressly declared unlawful. The following sections provide forfeitures for corporations and punishment for persons who 'violate any of the provisions' of the act, but they do not designate what shall constitute a violation of its provisions in any direct terms. Confining ourselves to the letter of the law, there is a clear hiatus—a lack of connection in its provisions. . . . There is no express declaration that trusts were unlawful—the acts which are declared to constitute a trust are not expressly made punishable, nor is any act expressly declared to be a violation of the provisions of the statute; yet the language is sufficient, we think, to manifest unmistakably the intention of the legislature to punish as offenses some of the acts defined in the first section; and it is but reasonable to conclude that the purpose was to subject them all to a like punishment. The intention of the legislature is the aim of statutory construction, and where, though not expressed, it is clearly manifested by implication from the language used, we cannot say that it should not have effect. That which is not expressed in words may be 'plainly imported' by implication." In the statute under examination there is no language which would exclude the railway property from the roll, but, like the trust law, if tested by the strict letter of the charter, there is a "hiatus," while the context clearly shows an intention to include it.

The question presented in the case of Womack v. Womack, above cited, was whether a law changing the time of holding district court took effect upon its passage according to the general rule then in force, or was suspended until the expiration of the time for holding the court in certain counties of that district. By its plain terms the law would have gone into effect at once, which would make void a judgment of the district court rendered at a term authorized by the old law. Judge Lipscomb used the following language: "In construing this act it is important to inquire what was the main and primary object the legislature had in view in its enactment. Taking in view the provision in our Constitution requiring the district court to be held twice a year in each county it seems to me manifest that the intention and main and primary object in view was prospective, and to fix the time when the courts were to be held in each of the counties, commencing in the year succeeding this act; that is to say, the year 1856." The court held that the legislature did not intend to produce the consequences which would flow from the letter of the law, and the intention prevailed over the language used. In the case of Russell v. Farquhar the supreme court, speaking through Chief Justice Moore, announced the general doctrine in the following forcible language: "If courts were in all cases to be controlled in their construction of statutes by the mere literal meaning of the words in which they are couched, it might well be admitted that appellant's objection to the evidence was well taken. But such is not the case. To be thus controlled, as has often been held, would be for the courts in a blind effort to refrain from an interference with legislative authority by their failure to apply well-established rules of construction to, in fact, abrogate their own power, and usurp that of the legislature, and cause the law to be held directly the contrary of that which the legislature had in fact intended to enact. While it is for the legislature to make the law, it is the duty of the courts to 'try out the right intentment' of statutes upon which they are called to pass, and by their proper construction to ascertain and enforce them according to their true intent, for it is this intent which constitutes, and is, in fact, the law, and not the mere verbiage, used by inadvertence or otherwise, by the legislature to express its intent, and to follow which would pervert that intent." Seeking the intention of the legislature in the enactment of the law under consideration, we must look to the general scheme whereby the city of Houston was empowered to pave its streets at the cost of the property owners. As a general rule, the property to be charged would consist of lots and blocks and tracts of land not divided into lots and blocks fronting upon the streets, but on streets which were partly occupied by street railways that property would be likewise charged with the cost of the improvement. The scheme was to charge all of this property with the cost of constructing the pavement upon the different streets mentioned. The liability of the abutting property was different from that of the railway, and the liability of each was separately defined. The procedure for ascertaining the liability was alike applicable to both, and was provided for in general terms, all of which were applicable to a part of the property; but some were inapplicable to a part of it. One purpose of enacting the law was to provide the means by which the city could ascertain what would be the amount of charges against each individual and piece of property liable for the cost of the work, and to issue certificates of indebtedness against such persons and property with which to pay the contractor for the work to be done, thereby avoiding the creation of a municipal debt. The roll of ownership furnished this means for determining that question, and the issues of certificates would enable the city to make advantageous contracts for the work, because the certificates would not be subject to be contested for cause existing before they were issued. The advantage to the citizen or property owner in being placed upon the roll of property was that before the work was commenced he had the right to call upon the city council to examine the roll, and correct any wrong to him. The owner whose name was upon the roll was entitled to discharge his indebtedness in five instalments, and was guaranteed the right at any time to discharge the whole indebtedness by depositing the money with the assessor and collector of the city. Under the construction placed upon the law by the court of civil appeals the street-railway company would be denied these privileges, and would be required to pay cash for the work done at the time of its completion. On the other hand, by this construction the street-railway company may be in default on the payment of the sum due from it, and contest the claim for any length of time, paying only 6 per cent interest, while the abutting property owner who is in default is by the statute required to pay from the time of such default 10 per cent interest. There are many other inconsistencies which would arise by holding that the street-railway company is not included in the general procedure provided for the enforcement of such claims. The discriminations and inconsistencies would work such injustice, and tend so much to thwart the main purpose of the legislature in enacting the law, as to make it unreasonable to suppose that the legislature, with any intelligent idea of the thing to be accomplished, would have enacted such a statute. We can see no sound reason for so radical a difference in the provisions made for adjusting the rights of private citizens and corporations, and without reason for it we must believe that it was not intended. If the legislature had intended that the street railway should pay cash, and be subject to different rules from those prescribed for other property owners, it could so easily have so enacted that the absence of such provision strongly supports our conclusion that it was the intention to place all property charged with the burden of making improvements upon equality in all respects, and that the street-railway company must be held to be included in all of the provisions that apply to the abutting property owners. The court of civil appeals erred in reversing the judgment of the district court, and in rendering judgment for 6 per cent instead of 8, and in reducing the amount of the demand for which the lien was foreclosed.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals be reversed, and that the judgment of the District Court be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Julia A. HOOPER, Resp't.,
v.

Moses HOOPER, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. An allowance of alimony by the trial court will not be disturbed unless manifestly unjust.
2. The permanent alimony granted to a woman on divorce need not be limited to an allowance payable at stated periods sufficient for her support, but the allowance of a gross sum out of the husband's estate in addition to a monthly allowance is within the power of the court, under Rev. Stat. § 2364, authorizing such alimony as the court shall deem just and reasonable, regarding the husband's ability to pay, the special estate of the wife, and all the circumstances of the case.

(April 4, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Waupaca County awarding alimony in a divorce proceeding. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Plaintiff was sixty and defendant sixty-one years of age at the time of the trial. They had lived together as man and wife about twenty years, during which time plaintiff helped to rear to ages of maturity five children of defendant by his first wife, who were from four to seventeen years of age at the time of the second marriage. When such second marriage took place defendant was worth about $40,000 and plaintiff not anything. During a few years preceding the trial defendant gave his children property aggregating $20,000 in value, and was worth, when the case was decided, $80,000, yielding a yearly income of about $4,200, and he had in addition a large law practice. In addition to wearing apparel and personal property, when the cause was decided plaintiff was possessed of $500 given to her by defendant, $950 bequeathed to her by an aunt, and about $700 accumulated by keeping boarders subsequent to February, 1895, when the separation between the parties took place. In addition she had a claim against defendant for $500 on account of a marriage gift. The divorce was granted upon two grounds, either being adequate, and one free from any circumstance of excuse or palliation, in the conduct of plaintiff. There was awarded to plaintiff out of defendant's property, as her separate estate, $7,000, and $100 per month during her life, in lieu of dower rights in defendant's real property, and in full discharge of all plaintiff's rights therein, and all claims upon defendant's estate. Judgment was rendered accordingly.

Mr. C. D. Cleveland, with Mr. Moses Hooper, in propria persona, for appellant:

Professional income should not be taken into account. Defendant is sixty-four years old. He ought to be at liberty to die without leaving his estate in the hands of his children, burdened with a charge based upon professional income.

Defendant is under no obligation, even in health, to work to provide for plaintiff beyond comfortable support, there being property enough to support both without work; if either is pleased to work it should be to her or his sole benefit.

NOTE.—For division of property or grant of permanent alimony to wife in case of divorce, see also Powell v. Campbell (Nev.) 2 L. R. A. 615; Doolittle v. Doolittle (Iowa) 6 L. R. A. 187; Jones v. Jones (Ala.) 18 L. R. A. 95. 44 L. R. A.

2 Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. §§ 892, 893, 1016.

The property held by defendant, and most of that held by plaintiff, is the fruit of defendant's earning and saving before the marriage.

Gifts when in proportion to the estate cannot be taken into account in action for divorce.

2 Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. § 903.

The facts in this case are such that the smallest ratio of estate should be awarded to plaintiff, conditioned only that it is sufficient for proper support.

Courts give the wife a share of the husband's income as high in some cases as one half, and as low as one seventh.

2 Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. § 1033; Garnier v. Garner, 38 Ind. 139; Hedrick v. Hedrick, 28 Ind. 291; Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17; Bush v. Bush, 37 Ind. 164; Blake v. Blake, 75 Wis. 339; Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 206; Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362; Burr v. Burr, 7 Hill, 207; Richmond v. Richmond, 2 N. J. Eq. 90; Williams v. Williams, 6 S. D. 284; Sleeper v. Sleeper, 65 Hun, 454; Reed v. Reed, 86 Mich. 600; Thiesing v. Thiesing, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 115; Edwards v. Edwards, 84 Ala. 361; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. note 3, p. 121; Potts v. Potts, 68 Mich. 492; Wilde v. Wilde, 37 Neb. 891; Von Glahn v. Von Glahn, 46 Ill. 134; Leach v. Leach, 46 Kan. 724; Johnson v. Johnson, 36 Ill. App. 152; Hardy v. Hardy, 25 N. Y. S. R. 832; Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78 Iowa, 691, 6 L. R. A. 187.

Where the wife has contributed to the cause of separation or divorce, the court should make an allowance of a less sum than otherwise.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 127; Zuver v. Zuver, 36 Iowa, 190; Buerfening v. Buerfening, 23 Minn. 563; Peckford v. Peckford, 1 Paige, 274.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, & Quarles, for respondent:

Defendant's professional income should be considered.

Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 206; Pauly v. Pauly, 69 Wis. 419; 2 Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 912; Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. § 1035.

The amount of permanent alimony to be awarded is largely influenced by the delictum of either party.

Pauly v. Pauly, 69 Wis. 422; Burr v. Burr, 7 Hill, 207; Richmond v. Richmond, 2 N. J. Eq. 90; Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362; Moul v. Moul, 30 Wis. 205; Cole v. Cole, 27 Wis. 531; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 39 Wis. 167; Thomas v. Thomas, 41 Wis. 234; Blake v. Blake, 75 Wis. 344; Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 223; Harran v. Harran, 85 Wis. 299; McChesney v. McChesney, 91 Wis. 269.

Under peculiar circumstances more than one half has been awarded to the wife.

Donovan v. Donovan, 20 Wis. 587; Webster v. Webster, 64 Wis. 438; Thompson v. Thompson, 73 Wis. 84.

The usual allowance is between one third and one half.

44 L. R. A.

2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. §§ 463, 464; Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362; Varney v. Varney, 58 Wis. 22; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 121; Gercke v. Gercke, 100 Mo. 237; Jeter v. Jeter, 36 Ala. 392.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant's complaint seems to be wholly of the award of a gross sum of money as part of the permanent alimony. The monthly allowance of $100, it is suggested, may be materially increased, if thought best, without complaint from appellant, if the decree giving plaintiff an estate of her own out of appellant's property be reversed. We have with care, searched appellant's brief in vain for some good reason or the citation of some authority to support his claim. It is quite novel. It is, as we understand it, that in such a case no provision should be made for a divorced wife other than an allowance payable at stated periods, by the former husband, sufficient for her support. That was the old doctrine of the ecclesiastical courts when alimony meant an allowance for the support of a wife while living apart from her husband under a sentence of judicial separation, the relations of husband and wife in some respects still existing between the parties, the sentence being subject to termination and full marriage relations substantially subject to resumption at the will of the parties. Then no duty was recognized to support a fully-divorced wife. No reason whatever exists now for such a rule. Under our statutes alimony may go with a divorce dissolving the bonds of matrimony and restoring the parties to their original situation of being strangers to each other, so far as concerns marriage relations in any sense, as well as with a divorce from bed and board. The power of the court, where the circumstances, in the discretion of the trial court, seem to demand or justify it, is as ample to allow a sum of money payable in gross as alimony, as one payable in instalments or a monthly allowance. There can be no doubt about that. In Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362, it is said that it is quite as competent for the court to assign to the wife absolutely a specific portion of the husband's estate or to order the payment of a gross sum of money as to award an annual allowance. Section 2364, Rev. Stat. provides that "the court may further adjudge to the wife such alimony out of the estate of the husband for her support and maintenance . . . as it shall deem just and reasonable, . . . having always due regard to the legal and equitable rights of each party, the ability of the husband, the special estate of the wife, the character and situation of the parties, and all the circumstances of the case." Thus the manner in which the wife's allowance shall be secured to her is left entirely to the court to be exercised as justice seems to require, having regard to the particular facts of each case. So the question of whether the right judgment for alimony was rendered here comes down to whether proper judicial discretion was exercised in administering the statute; and on that subject the rule is that the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed unless manifestly unjust.

It is not only permissible to make an allowance to a divorced wife payable in gross, but in many, and in the judgment of some courts, in most, cases, it is the best method of settling the pecuniary relations of the parties. The trouble and unhappiness often resulting from keeping up some sort of relation of debtor and creditor between parties who are, legally, strangers to each other, yet so embittered by previous marital relations as to render embarrassing and exceedingly unpleasant any communication of one with the other even as to strictly business matters, is well known to all persons of average experience in life. The divorced husband often feels that the obligation to pay a sum of money at stated periods to his former wife is an unjust burden and one to be avoided if possible, which feeling ordinarily grows more intense as time continues. The divorced wife is generally made to feel that she stands in a position of a mere pensioner, living from day to day on forced contributions grudgingly made by one who looks upon her as an unjust encumbrance. In that way the wrong to the wife caused by breaking up her home is made to bear unnecessarily harshly upon and disquiet her subsequent life. Observations along this line were made in Williams v. Williams, resulting in a conclusion that where there is an absolute divorce it is advisable to end all relations between the parties, leaving them entirely independent of each other, if that can be practically done; that such unhappy controversies as this should be ended in such a way as to dissolve all financial relations as effectually as all marriage relations, leaving nothing that will unnecessarily mar the subsequent life of the parties.

The learned trial court proceeded on the line indicated in Williams v. Williams, and with wise comprehension of the needs of the situation solved it in such a way as to leave plaintiff practically independent of appellant. That situation was as follows: A wife sixty years of age who had occupied a high social position as the companion of a man about her own age, for some twenty years; a man possessed of property of the value of $80,000 at his own figures, and of a large income therefrom, as well as from professional business; no stain was on the life of the wife palliating the act constituting one of the causes entitling plaintiff to a divorce; no fault of the wife appeared which, in law and good morals, the husband was not in duty bound to condone, and which, if he had condoned, instead of transgressing the obligations of marriage in a way that the wife could not overlook and was not called upon by any law or duty to do so, they might have continued to live together as husband and wife down to the end of their joint lives. In that situation the court said that the matrimonial bonds should be dissolved and the divorced wife, so far as consistent with certainty of future support, should be made independent of her divorced husband. To accomplish that he awarded her, as and for a separate estate, a little less than one seventh of appellant's property, taking his own figures for the value, and further allowed her a monthly instalment amounting to about the same proportion of appellant's income, considering that derived from his property and a fair income from his business as well. It was further provided that such monthly instalments should be secured upon appellant's property so as to reduce to the minimum the danger of difficulty or unpleasantness to plaintiff in respect to collecting her income. It is useless to try to test the justness of that determination by any rule, because there is none that can be applied. Precedents are helpful, of course, but no two cases are alike. It is often said in a general way that an allowance from a moiety to a third or less of the husband's income or estate is proper, according to circumstances. The age of the parties is to be taken into consideration, their social station, their previous life, their health, their family, the responsibilities of the respective parties after the separation as to the care and support of children, the circumstances leading up to such separation, the fault which destroyed the home, the guilty party, the palliating circumstances, if any, the length of time the parties lived together, the amount and character of the husband's property, his earning capacity and that of the wife as well, and all the circumstances that in justice bear in any way upon the situation. Testing the judgment appealed from in that way, we are constrained to say that, while the learned circuit judge who tried the case amply provided for the future needs of plaintiff, he dealt so liberally with appellant that he has not only no reason to complain, but should rather feel supreme satisfaction in reflecting over the result. The plaintiff is made substantially independent of appellant at a cost to him of from one sixth to one seventh of his estate and income, and he is entirely freed from obligations to plaintiff, with whom he does not desire and has no right to live as her husband. He goes free and has the great bulk of his property and the income therefrom and his future earnings as well, aside from the amount to be paid to his former wife, freed of any claim by her, so that he may dispose of the same as he sees fit. It is not true by any means that in such circumstances the allowance to the wife should be limited to just enough for her support and that payable as she needs it, as appellant seems to urge. There is no reason for such a rule and no authority for it that has been called to our attention, and none that we are able to find. Plaintiff was entitled to support from appellant in a way consistent with his wealth and station. Besides that, she possessed an inchoate interest in all his real estate and was one of his heirs presumptive, all of which has been taken from her, and the protection to which she was entitled under the marriage contract as well, and in lieu of that she has received the alimony complained of. In Williams v. Williams there was one child nineteen years of age, the husband worth $20,000 at a rather high valuation of mostly unproductive real estate, a homestead and household effects worth some less than $2,000, and personal property about sufficient to pay his debts, many of which were pressing him. He had no certain income. On such facts this court rendered judgment allowing to the divorced wife $3,000 besides the homestead and household furniture; a far more liberal allowance, as appears, than the one made in the decree appealed from. If precedents are to be relied upon as controlling, Williams v. Williams, which has never been criticised, is sufficient for this case.

More has already been said than was really required or would have been said but for the earnestness with which appellant contends that injustice has been done to him. However hard he may have tried to look at the situation in which he was placed with an unbiased mind, he evidently has not been able to do that successfully. To us no reason whatever is perceived for complaint by him of the judgment appealed from.

Some minor questions are mentioned and discussed in appellant's brief, which have been considered. They are not of sufficient significance, however, to effect the decision on this appeal.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Russell CASE, Respt.,
v.

Frederick HOFFMAN et al., Appts.

(100 Wis. 314.)

1. On vacating a judgment which was void because the qualified members of the court were equally divided, the court, instead of entering judgment, may order a reargument, if it sees fit to do so.
2. A decision on a former appeal is the law of the case so far as it is applicable to the facts established on the second trial.
3. The findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless they are clearly against the preponderance of the evidence.
4. One whose water rights have been injured by diverting a watercourse by a canal constructed across his land without his consent may make a valid contract for the continuance of the canal and a supply of water therefrom.
5. The location of a canal, and the open enjoyment of rights and privileges appurtenant thereto, constitute notice of such rights to subsequent purchasers of property affected thereby.
6. The owner of a canal, who acquires it with notice of the rights of other persons to have a certain quantity of water supplied from it, for which a dam or bulkhead in the canal is required, must maintain such dam or bulkhead as long as he continues to use the canal.
7. The owner of a canal, which has become a substitute for a natural watercourse, although he acquires it with notice of certain rights and privileges of other persons thereon which are open, visible, and notorious, which require the maintenance by him, so long as he uses the canal, of a dam or bulkhead to furnish them water from the canal, can free himself from this obligation by the abandonment of his use of the canal.

8. A covenant by a vendee to repair a ditch which has become a substitute for a natural watercourse cannot be invoked by third persons who may profit incidentally by its enforcement.

(Winslow and Pinney, JJ., dissent.)

(September 28, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to enjoin the diversion of a watercourse. Reversed in part.

The case was stated by Newman, J., after the former hearing as follows:

This is an action in equity to restrain the defendants from diverting the course of a ditch or alleged watercourse from the plaintiff's lands, and to enforce the performance by the defendants of an alleged contract to maintain the ditch in its present location on plaintiff's land, for the benefit of plaintiff's cranberry marsh. The parties are all owners of land on a large marsh, many miles in extent, and covering the greater part of a government township of land. The marsh is generally nearly level, but dips to the east and to the south, but more to the east than to the south. The land is adapted to the culture of cranberries, and is valuable for that purpose, but is of little worth for any other purpose. The surface of the marsh is principally covered by a growth of moss, several inches in depth, with some grass and other vegetation, above a layer of peat of considerable but varying thickness, and all resting on a substratum of sand. The marsh is, in considerable part, made and fed by springs which arise towards the northeastern part of the township, and flow, in channels, into and form a small lake, of some 40 acres in area, called "Big Lake." The waters of the lake flow out, through depressions in its low banks, to the east and to the south. One such depression to the southeast bears some resemblance to a natural channel of a watercourse, for a short distance from the lake, where the apparent banks subside into and are lost in the general surface of the marsh. The plaintiff's lands lie to the southeast of the lake, a distance of something over 2 miles. This depression, or natural channel from the lake, is lost and disappears about 2 miles above plaintiff's land. The waters disappear from sight beneath the moss and vegetation, if not beneath the surface of the marsh, to reappear at a distance of a mile or more below the plaintiff's land, where they are gathered together, and form a distinct watercourse, which is known as the "West Branch of Beaver Creek." In this distance, of three miles or more, intervening the points where the supposed channel from Big Lake disappears, and the point where the "West Branch" becomes a definite stream, there is nothing which resembles the "well-defined and substantial existence" of a watercourse. There is no channel with bed and banks. At most seasons of the year, there is no appearance of water above the vegetation. At times of melting snow and great rains, water spreads over a great part of the marsh for several miles in breadth, not only over the plaintiff's lands, but over the lands of adjoining proprietors, to the north and to the south of him. This water does not flow from or across the marsh in any defined current or channel, but stands in depressions, until it disappears by evaporation or percolation. In such places the vegetation is killed, but the surface of the marsh is not broken by a water channel, nor do these places have, in any respect, the appearance of a continuous channel of a watercourse. They are widely dispersed over the surface of the marsh, and not in such relation to each other as to indicate a continuous channel across the marsh. They were designated by some of the surveyors as "pot holes." Some of these "pot holes" were upon the plaintiff's land, some were to the north of it, some were to the south of it. There were no more distinct evidences of the existence of a watercourse across the plaintiff's lands than upon the lands of adjoining proprietors to the north or to the south, while the general dip of the marsh would seem to indicate that the larger part of the water would, in natural conditions, pass to the north.

NOTE.—For former decision in this case, see Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 20 L. R. A. 40, 44 L. R. A.

In the years 1880 and 1881, Messrs. D. A. and C. A. Goodyear dug a ditch through a part of this marsh, above the plaintiff's lands, extending to Big Lake. The primary object of this ditch was to enable the Goodyears to float pine sawlogs to their sawmill, which was situated near the southeastern part of the marsh. In 1883, the legislature, by chapter 271 of that year, sanctioned the digging of the ditch, and gave a franchise to maintain it for a period of ten years. The ditch was of sufficient magnitude to successfully float logs to the mill. In its course the ditch ran through a corner of land belonging to the plaintiff. In times of freshet it gathered more water than would be contained by its banks. It would then overflow, to the damage of adjoining owners of the marsh. It became convenient to the Goodyears to accommodate this overflow by a lateral ditch across the land of the plaintiff. In October, 1885, they made an oral agreement with the plaintiff, whereby they agreed to permit the plaintiff to take water for his cranberry culture from the principal ditch, in consideration of his permission to dig the lateral ditch upon his land. This agreement was not reduced to writing until February 21, 1891, when the Goodyears gave the plaintiff a statement, in writing, that such an agreement had been made, and the substance of its provisions. The plaintiff's privilege and the consideration are stated as follows: "Russell Case was to be permitted to have the privilege of using such amount of water from the said logging ditch as might be necessary for his use upon his said premises in the cultivating and raising of cranberries, whenever the same might be needed for such purpose. The consideration for the said privilege of using such water was the permission, granted by said Russell Case to said D. A. and C. A. Goodyear, to enter upon his said land, and to construct a ditch through and over the same; the said ditch to be used as an outlet in times of high water, for the safety of certain dams, . . . and to prevent overflow on the adjacent cranberry marshes." The Goodyears constructed the contemplated ditch, and the plaintiff used water from the logging ditch until near the time of the commencement of the action. The Goodyears used the ditch for the floating of logs to their mill until the supply of logs was exhausted, in 1888. In October, 1889, they sold the ditch to the defendant Hoffman, who bought it with the design to use it to supply water for the irrigation of cranberry lands on the marsh belonging to him and the other defendants. The other defendants had some interest in the purchase of the ditch. Hoffman agreed with the Goodyears to keep the ditch in repair, to furnish water to irrigate Goodyears' cranberry lands, and to save and keep the Goodyears "free and harmless from all cost, liability, or damage on account of said ditch, or the construction, maintenance, and repair thereof, or for any want of repair thereof." There was a succession of dry seasons, which made a supply of water for the irrigation of cranberry lands in that neighborhood very desirable. The defendants deemed it to be to the advantage of their cranberry interests on the marsh to change the course of the ditch where it crossed the plaintiff's land. There was some claim that he took more water from the ditch than he was entitled to. In 1891 they commenced the digging of a new ditch across the lands of the defendant Stickney, above the plaintiff's land, with the intention to divert the ditch entirely from the plaintiff's land. This action was then brought to restrain the defendants from making the proposed change in the course and location of the ditch, and to compel the defendants to maintain and keep it in repair in its old location, so as to furnish the plaintiff with so much water as should be needed for the use of his cranberry marsh. The trial court gave judgment, whereby it permanently enjoined the defendants from changing the course and location of the ditch, and directed them to maintain and keep the ditch in repair, so that the plaintiff could perpetually draw therefrom a supply of water for his cranberry land. From this judgment the defendants appeal.

Messrs. Bushnell, Rogers, & Hall for appellants.

Messrs. La Follette, Harper, Roe, & Zimmerman, for respondent:

The facts establish a natural watercourse. Hinkle v. Avery, 88 Iowa, 47; Rummell v. Lamb, 100 Mich. 424; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Bunting v. Hicks, 7 Reports, 293; Shield v. Arndt (N. J. Eq.) 4 Lead. Cas. Am. Law of Real Prop. 309, and notes.

Even if the water does not technically constitute a watercourse, the plaintiff could still enjoin the defendants from diverting the same from his land.

The rule applicable to surface water is not applied where the water was a benefit and not an injury.

Abbott v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 83 Mo. 272, 53 Am. Rep. 581; O'Brien v. St. Paul, 25 Minn. 335, 33 Am. Rep. 470; Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 174, 43 Am. Rep. 569; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 49; Suett v. Cutts, 50 N. H. 439, 9 Am. Rep. 276; McClure v. Red Wing, 28 Minn. 186; Pettigrew v. Evansville, 25 Wis. 229, 3 Am. Rep. 50; Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Wis. 659, 9 Am. Rep. 473.

The Goodyear contract was one that a court of equity will enforce.

Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302; Van Ohlen v. Van Ohlen, 56 Ill. 529; Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497; Coffman v. Robbins, 8 Or. 278; Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 142; Olmstead v. Abbott, 61 Vt. 281; Newcomb v. Royce, 42 Neb. 323; Bunting v. Hicks, 7 Reports, 293.

Bardeen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts upon which this litigation is founded are sufficiently stated in the opinions heretofore written in this case. This case made its first appearance in this court in 1893, on an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and is reported in 84 Wis. 438, 20 L. R. A. 40. The decision in the court below was made by the late Justice Newman, who was then presiding at the circuit. The order of the circuit court was reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to law. Issue was joined by proper answers, testimony was taken, and findings and judgment were entered for plaintiff. From this judgment, part of the defendants, feeling aggrieved, took this appeal. The case was argued at the January term for 1897, and on September 28 of that year a decision was announced, by a divided court (Justice Newman casting the deciding vote and writing the opinion), reversing the judgment of the court below. A timely motion for a rehearing was made, and subsequently a motion to vacate the judgment so entered was submitted, the grounds of which sufficiently appear in the opinion of Mr. Justice Winslow, reported herewith.* The former judgment was vacated, and a reargument of the case ordered. Additional briefs have been submitted, and the court has again been favored with a restatement of the claims of the respective parties from able counsel. The case now comes for final determination upon the merits. The plaintiff insists that a judgment of affirmance should be entered, because when the case was first heard the justices who were qualified to hear it were equally divided as to the merits of the case, and a judgment of affirmance, under the rule, should have been entered. It is needless to say that such judgment was not entered. The judgment that was entered was void. It stood, however, as the judgment of the court until it was vacated, which was at a subsequent term; and when so vacated this court had the power either to enter judgment, or to order a reargument. It saw fit to do the latter, and the case stands precisely as if no judgment had in fact been entered,—to be determined according to the light afforded the court by the new argument, and the additional opportunity for reflection and consideration of the matters involved.

At the outset one thing must be noted, and that is, so far as applicable to the facts established on the trial, the decision first rendered upon the demurrer must be considered the law of this case. Whether good law or bad law, it is, and must remain, the law by which this court must be guided in all its future action in this case. We shall not indulge in any hair-splitting refinements, or in any effort to discover a double interpretation to be given the former decision. The issue raised by the demurrer, giving the language of the complaint its usual and ordinary interpretation, was whether it described a watercourse to and over plaintiff's land. The facts were set out in detail, and the court considered them in the light most favorable to the defendants' present contention. Upon such consideration it was then decided that a watercourse was described, "although it showed that the stream spread over wide reaches of marsh and swamp lands, and percolated the soil in many and most places" between its source and the place where it was again collected into a well-defined stream. Whether this determination is supported by authority, or whether it is "absurd or inconsequential," it is not our present purpose to inquire. It is the law of this case, in plain and unmistakable language, and by which we must be governed.

By reference to the findings of the trial court, we find that he has followed with great fidelity the facts set out in the complaint. He finds that under natural conditions the stream had its source in certain living springs, which discharge their waters, by definite and clearly-marked channels, into Big Lake, and thence southeast, though not by a continuous surface channel, but with a definite and clearly-marked flow, across other lands, and on and past plaintiff's lands, and into the West Branch of Beaver creek, and that in so doing the water spread out in places, and flowed over and through the moss and peat, and in many places made for itself bed, banks, and channels, some of which still exist, and was of such volume, when confined to a narrow channel like the canal in question, as to be capable of floating saw logs. His findings, so far as the source, direction, and volume of the stream are concerned, support the allegations of the complaint, and in some of the main particulars are even stronger than alleged therein. His findings in these respects are most earnestly challenged as not being supported by the evidence, and as being contrary to the real weight of the evidence. The earnestness of this contention has induced to court to examine with the most painstaking care and thoroughness the great mass of testimony preserved in the printed record, and to consult the many maps and exhibits in the case, which are claimed to possess helpful value. This examination leads to the disclosure that as to very many of the main facts the evidence is in irreconcilable conflict. A finding either way upon many of the disputed questions would find support in the evidence submitted. Such sharp conflicts, such positive contradictions, emphasize the necessity of the appellate court adopting the rule of not disturbing the findings of the trial court unless they are clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. The trial judge possesses many advantages of judging the credibility of witnesses. He becomes invested with many facts, circumstances, and details on the trial that cannot be transmitted to us; and when it is evident that he has reviewed the case with care, and that he has sought, as seems in this case to have been done, to carefully and impartially distinguish the true from the false, his conclusions ought not lightly to be brushed aside. We find this to be a case where the situation of the trial judge must have been very helpful in arriving at a conclusion. A careful review of the evidence in detail convinces us that the findings of the court below ought not to be disturbed. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss the evidence at length. The opinion of Mr. Justice Marshall, filed at the former hearing, contains a sufficiently ample discussion of the evidence to support the conclusion we have reached.* The findings of the court in regard to the so-called Goodyear contract cannot be successfully impeached. There can be no doubt but that such a contract was made, that it was founded upon a valuable consideration, and that, so far as the plaintiff's use of the water from the canal is concerned, his rights were open, visible, and notorious. The findings seem to be strictly in accord with the great weight of the evidence and with all the probabilities of the case. At the time the defendant Hoffman made his alleged purchase of the Goodyear interest in the canal, he found this contract so far executed that the lateral waste-water ditch had been dug to the eastward, and plaintiff had tapped the main canal, and was in the enjoyment of a supply of water therefrom for the purpose of cranberry cultivation. The main canal had been dug across plaintiff's land without his consent, and the great volume of the water that came to his land naturally had been diverted to the south. In times of high water, large quantities of logs and debris escaped from the canal, and were deposited upon plaintiff's land. The plaintiff had made a claim for damages by reason thereof. He then agreed to permit the canal to remain where it had been constructed and to forego the claim for damages; and the Goodyears built the waste-water ditch to the eastward, and from which the plaintiff was to receive so much water as was reasonably necessary for his cranberry culture. As between the Goodyears and the plaintiff, it was a valid and binding contract, and, as we think, enforceable in equity. The location of the canal, and plaintiff's open enjoyment of the rights and privileges appurtenant thereto, was notice to Hoffman of the plaintiff's rights; and he

*That opinion is omitted from this report because it dealt solely with the question of the disqualification of Justice Newman, and throws no light on the principal question involved in the case. [Ed.]
44 L. R. A.

*As follows:

It remains to be seen whether the facts alleged in the complaint, held to constitute a cause of action, were found to exist by the trial court, and, if so, whether such findings can be disturbed as against the clear preponderance of the evidence. If these questions are resolved in plaintiff's favor, he is entitled to such relief as will protect his rights as a riparian proprietor, as against the defendants, who insist on diverting the water from the alleged watercourse, so as to prevent its reaching his land.

We now turn to the findings of fact filed by the learned circuit judge, and read in regard to the alleged watercourse, as follows: "The source and flow of water . . . in a state of nature was . . . as follows: . . . Beaver creek . . . had its source or origin in certain living springs located in section 8 in said town. These springs discharge their waters at all seasons of the year by definite and clearly-marked channels. In which a common stream, several feet in width, varying in depth, but always with a fixed channel, with bed and banks and steadily flowing stream, and water running in a southeasterly direction, a distance of some 60 or more rods, into the lake known as Big Lake. . . . At the south end of Big Lake the waters were discharged by a channel or outlet to the southeast, and thence, though not by a continuous surface channel, but with a definite and clearly marked flow, in a southeasterly direction through portions of sections 9, 16, and 15, the north half and southeast quarter of section 22, the south half of 23, and the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of section 24, and thence easterly into Beaver creek. This stream from its source to where it flowed into Beaver creek was called the West Branch of Beaver creek, and though under natural conditions the water spread out in places and flowed over and through the peat and moss between sections 8 and 24. It, in many places along its course, made for itself channels with bed and banks, some of which channels still exist in sections 15, 19, 22, and 23." See finding III. "At the southeast of Big Lake the waters thereof flowed out for some distance through a well-defined outlet of said lake, with bed and banks, and from thence through a portion of section 9 and sections 15, 16, 22, 23, and 24 to Beaver creek. . . . From Big Lake down to the continuous channel of the west branch of Beaver creek in sections 23 and 24 the water, under natural conditions, did not flow along and in a continuous channel throughout the entire distance, but through the larger part of the distance spread out over the surface and beneath the surface, and ran through the moss and peat in a general southeasterly direction, as above indicated. The volume and current thereof were sufficient, however, to plainly mark its direction and flow, and in places, some of which were on the lands of the plaintiff, to make for itself channels, as above stated, establishing conclusively that the waters flowing out of Big Lake naturally came to and flowed over plaintiff's land in section 22, and from thence to the east, where it was again collected in a natural stream with continuous and permanent bed and banks. Had the soil through which it ran been free from moss and peat, which for the most part covered was likewise chargeable with notice that the waters of a natural stream had been diverted from their usual course, and that it was impossible to restore the flow to its former course. With these conditions before him at the time of his purchase of the Goodyear interests, he took the same with the duties and obligations imposed upon his grantors, so far as they were disclosed by the situation. The attempt to alter the conditions, and to divert the flow of water entirely from plaintiff's land, was therefore wrongful, and without right or authority.

The plaintiff was entitled to the flow that came from Big Lake in a state of nature, and that right continued, notwithstanding the waters had been gathered into a channel, and diverted from their original course. With a view of settling the controversy forever between the parties, the court found the plaintiff entitled to receive such an amount of water as would flow through an orifice 6 by 10 inches in a sluice box in the canal, under a minimum head of two-tenths of a foot, which he finds is less than came to his lands in a state of nature. The evi-it, the water would have made along its entire course a continuous and well-defined channel with bed and banks." Finding IV.

It would seem that argument is unnecessary to demonstrate that the facts thus found are precisely those which this court said in the former decision are the essential elements of a watercourse, and that to encumber this opinion with argument in that regard would be a mere work of supererogation. The learned circuit judge obviously followed the decision with scrupulous care. The language of the complaint and of the decision of this court, as to its sufficiency, are copied substantially into the findings. In the light of this, having from the evidence traced the water from its source to where it flowed out of Big Lake to the southeast and spread over and disappeared in the marsh, and found from the evidence that it flowed on from such point of disappearance in most or all places through the moss and peat and under the surface to where it assumed the shape of a visible stream below plaintiff's land, and that the conditions shown by the evidence demonstrated conclusively that the water which formed a visible, flowing stream below plaintiff's land was the same water that flowed out of Big Lake to the southeast, the trial court could not come to any other legal conclusion than that the watercourse was continuous from its source to and across plaintiff's land. It only remains to be seen whether the findings of fact are against the clear preponderance of the evidence, for if not, certainly, by a rule as firmly established as any in our jurisprudence, they cannot be disturbed, and plaintiff is entitled to substantial relief, as it is conceded that if the facts establish an ancient watercourse, the canal has taken its place.

A brief review of the evidence will amply sustain respondent's claim that the findings cannot be disturbed under the rule above referred to, and demonstrates clearly that no other conclusion could reasonably have been reached. There is evidence in abundance that before the building of the canal, in times of high water, there was a perceptible surface flow through substantially the whole distance from the lake to plaintiff's land, and that when the canal was dug it was located with reference to the inflow of water from the lake, as indicated by water flowing upon the surface in many places. Professor Conover, one of the surveyors, testified to the existence of depressions indicating the flow of water all the way to plaintiff's land; that he followed such depressions down from the lake and examined the indications closely; that the water which flowed out of the lake to the southeast and then spread out over the marsh flowed southeast too, and the greater part passed over plaintiff's land; and that the canal entirely intercepted the natural flow, so plaintiff could not receive any of the water except by way of such canal. In respect to the depressions showing the natural channel he said 44 L. R. A.

that some of them were as long as 300 feet or perhaps longer, with sharp-cut edges along which grass lay, just as though a current had swept it there; that near the north line of Mr. Case's land there was a channel 300 or 400 feet long. Samuel F. Crabbe, another engineer, who spent a large amount of time upon the land, testified, in effect, that there were plain channel markings all the way to plaintiff's land; that he found channels on such land leading towards Beaver creek, some of them very marked, all leading in the same general direction; that there was one very marked channel reaching nearly across a 40; that this channel had very definite banks, and that there was considerable water in it; that he followed the channels along to Beaver creek; that the indications were plain that the water which flowed out of Big Lake to the southeast flowed through the swamp and marsh, where indicated by channel markings, into Beaver creek to the south and east of plaintiff's land. There is a large amount of other evidence in the record of the same general character, and evidence from several persons who were familiar with the country before the construction of the canal, to the effect that there was then an unmistakable flow of water from the lake to plaintiff's land. Mr. Brooks testified that he visited the country as early as 1873; that the inlet at the lake was then 2 or 3 rods wide; that the water was running out of the lake to the southeast in a considerable body the widest channel being as wide as 12 feet; that in 1875 he was on the ground again and followed the open channel half a mile and traced it substantially to plaintiff's land; that he could then follow the channel by walking in the water; and that in 1876 he again traced the water over the same course. Mr. G. W. Hancock testified that in 1882 he traced the watercourse from the lake down to and across plaintiff's land. Mr. Rhodes, who helped dig the canal, testified that when they were digging the main water supply came from ahead, from toward the lake, and that they had difficulty at times, by reason of the peat at the bottom of the ditch rising up; that when they got near to the lake the flow of water was very strong. Evidence of like character to that specially mentioned, altogether making a very strong case, appears in the record, fully warranting the trial court in finding that it establishes conclusively that before the canal was dug the water flowing out of Big Lake naturally came to and flowed over plaintiff's land in section 22, and to the east of it, where it was collected into a natural running stream, with continuous and permanent bed and banks, and that the building of the canal gathered the water into and caused it to go by way of such canal, and interfered with and so changed the natural flow that if the flow be now interfered with by way of such canal, to the extent of such interference, it will take the water that was formerly wont to flow to and over plaintiff's land.

dence fully sustains this finding if, indeed, it does not show that he was entitled to more water than was awarded him.

The court's findings establish the fact that the canal in question became a substitute for a natural watercourse, and that plaintiff was entitled to receive therefrom so much water as was reasonably necessary for cranberry cultivation on his land, under the limitations stated. He required the plaintiff to construct and maintain a waste gate on his land, as an outlet in times of flood. He enjoined upon the defendants the duty to restore the waters to the canal as originally constructed, and to build and maintain a dam or bulkhead to hold back the water adjudged to the plaintiff. To this extent the court would seem to have been justified by plain principles of equity. But he goes further, and adjudges that the defendants, "their heirs, grantees, or assigns, shall perpetually keep such canal in such condition of repair that the quantity of water hereinbefore found to be due the plaintiff may at all times be received by him in the manner stated," and, in case of their failure so to do, then plaintiff might repair the same at their expense. The plaintiff's rights in the premises are based upon the fact that water came to his land naturally, and that the canal has become and is a natural watercourse. In a state of nature, the water came to him en masse and uncontrolled. Being delivered to him at this time by means of the canal, he is possessed of much greater advantages of control over it. It thereby becomes much more available for his use than formerly, and this fact must have weight with a court of equity, when considering the mutual obligations of the parties. Such being the foundation of the plaintiff's rights, and the fact being admitted that the manner in which the water is now delivered to plaintiff from above is an advantage to him over the old way, it is not exactly clear to us why defendants should be charged with the perpetual maintenance of this "natural watercourse" above the plaintiff's land. Certainly the defendants ought to be required to restore the canal to the condition it was in before their unlawful interference, and to keep up the canal on his lands as heretofore suggested. They should also be restrained from in any way interfering with or diverting the flow of water from Big Lake through this canal. The fact that the waters from the Bear Bluff canal had been turned into it gave defendants no right to divert all the waters that came down the main channel. The court saw fit to apportion the waters between the parties on a basis deemed just and equitable and that finding cannot be disturbed. The defendants seek to carry water to the southward, in order to improve and cultivate their own lands. To do so, and not to interfere with the water rights of plaintiff, it was necessary that the bulkhead should be constructed on plaintiff's land. Therefore it seems but just that defendants should be required to maintain the same so long as they continue to receive water from this source.

44 L. R. A.

As successors to the Goodyear interests, the defendants were only chargeable with such notice of the plaintiff's rights as the actual situation presented. So far as we can discover, there is no evidence that defendants had actual knowledge of the terms of the contract between the Goodyears and plaintiff. Finding plaintiff in the actual enjoyment of certain rights and privileges in the canal, which were open, visible, and notorious, the defendants, in equity, were bound to respect those rights as they appeared, and to make due inquiry as to their duration and extent. There is nothing in the Goodyears' contract with him that compelled them to a perpetual maintenance of this canal. Nor, as we understand it, does the proof show that defendants are the owners of all the land through which the canal flows before it reaches the plaintiff's land. The Goodyear franchise (Laws 1883, chap. 271), by its terms, gave them the power to handle, own, and control the canal for the term of ten years from the passage of that act. At the expiration of that time the right to collect tolls for floating timbers thereon ceased. There was no implied obligation to keep up and maintain the ditch on their part after the expiration of this period. Hoffman succeeded to the rights of the Goodyears in October, 1889. By the instrument of assignment, Hoffman took the "rights, franchises, privileges, obligations, and duties conferred, granted, and imposed" on them by virtue of the act of 1883; and he also agreed with them "to keep and maintain in proper repair, and keep repaired, said ditch or canal," to save the Goodyears harmless from all liability, and to furnish them with water to irrigate their cranberry lands contiguous to said canal. This covenant to repair the ditch was personal to the Goodyears, and cannot be invoked to sustain the judgment. The plaintiff might profit incidentally by its enforcement, but he can compel its enforcement only so far as it affected his rights, of which the grantees of the Goodyears were bound to take notice. The plaintiff's right to perpetually take water from the canal being based upon the theory that it has become a natural watercourse to his land, such right cannot be amplified to the extent of casting the burden of its perpetual maintenance upon those who desire to make use of such water as flows past him to the south. Undoubtedly the enjoyment of the water flowing past plaintiff's land will necessitate the maintenance of the canal above, and to that extent plaintiff will receive incidental benefits; but there is nothing in the situation that we can discover that will prevent defendants from abandoning their privileges. They ought not to be permitted in any way to divert the water or lessen its flow from Big Lake. So long as they seek to continue the use and enjoyment of the water in the canal below plaintiff's lands, they should be compelled to maintain the dam or bulkhead as adjudged by the court; but, should they desire to abandon such use, then they should be freed from any obligation to maintain the canal at any point. In so far as the judgment imposes the burden on defendants to perpetually maintain the bulkhead on plaintiff's land, and the canal above the same, it cannot be sustained. The judgment should require defendants to restore the water to the channel as it flowed before their unlawful interference, and they should be restrained from in any way interfering with or diverting the flow of water from Big Lake. They should also be required to build the bulkhead on plaintiff's land as adjudged by the court and to maintain the same so long as they continue to use the water flowing past said land. No obligation in favor of plaintiff should be imposed on them to maintain the canal above his land.

That part of the judgment which is contrary to this opinion is reversed, and the judgment in all other respects is affirmed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion. No costs are allowed to either party, except that the respondent shall pay the fees of the clerk of this court.

Winslow, J., dissenting:

I do not intend to add materially to the literature of this unfortunate case, but simply wish to record my dissent from the principal conclusions which have now been reached by the majority of the court. In my opinion, there is no satisfactory evidence in the case which sustains the findings of the trial court upon the main question of an ancient watercourse. Granting, as I cheerfully do, that the decision upon the demurrer to the complaint is the law of this case, I still do not think that a watercourse was shown within that decision. The evidence shows, to my mind, simply a vast marsh, miles in extent, into which waters from Big Lake oozed, and surface waters collected, permeating the soil, and became practically stagnant and lifeless; forming a vast expanse of bog, moss, and slime. Out of this swamp, also, waters oozed at other places towards the east; but to say that it was a watercourse is, to my mind, simply a contradiction of terms. By the same reasoning there is scarcely a marsh in the state which could not be converted into a watercourse and the owners subjected to all the duties and limitations which devolve upon the owners of the banks of a watercourse. Nor can I subscribe to the idea that the oral contract with Goodyear fastened a perpetual servitude for all time upon the lands which Goodyear owned in whosever hands they might come, to furnish water to the plaintiff through the artificial canal. Hence, I think this judgment should be reversed in toto. I am authorized to state that Pinney, J., concurs in these views.

Petition for rehearing on behalf of defendants dismissed September 20, 1898.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Isaac BROWN, Admr., etc., of Lawrence Brown, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

ORANGEBURG COUNTY, Respt.

(.....S. C.....)

The liability of a county "in all cases of lynching when death ensues," under Const. art. 6, § 6, is not limited to cases in which the persons lynched were prisoners or in custody of the court, although the provision contains the words "without regard to the conduct of the officers," as these mean that this liability is without reference to other provisions respecting the lynching of prisoners.

(April 20, 1899.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Orangeburg County in favor of defendant in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the lynching of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

The complaint alleged that on or about January 3, 1897, Lawrence Brown was arrested on the charge of arson, but was released and discharged from custody. That on the night of January 5, a body of men whose names were unknown to plaintiff, unlawfully assembled with the sole purpose of taking the law into their own hands, and in pursuance thereof they did forcibly and violently apprehend the said Brown, and hang him by the neck to a post at the crossing of the South Carolina & Georgia Railroad, and shoot him until he was dead.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Raysor & Summers, for appellant:

The constitutional and statutory principle here involved while of recent origin in this state, is not new. It was one of the laws of Canute, the Dane, subsequently recognized by his Saxon successors, from whom comes the common law, when any person was killed, and the slayer escaped, the ville should pay forty marks for his death, and if it could not be raised in the ville, then the hundred should pay it.

Similar statutes for the protection of human life from the unrestrained, the overmastering passion of the mob have been enacted in other states, notably in Alabama, Kansas, and Ohio.

Atchison v. Twine, 9 Kan. 356; Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118; Luke v. Calhoun County, 52 Ala. 115.

These statutes have invariably been held constitutional, and if the second section of our act is broader than the constitutional provision, for the reason that it is an independent section, and includes within its

NOTE.—As to liability of municipalities for property destroyed by mob, see Glanfortone v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 592.

As to liability for killing of human being by a mob, see New Orleans v. Abagnatto (C. C. A. 5th C.) 26 L. R. A. 329.
44 L. R. A.

See also 45 L. R. A. 848.

terms all cases of lynching, it should be sustained.

Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 267; Hagerstown v. Sehner, 37 Md. 180; Chadbourne v. New Castle, 48 N. H. 197; Folsom Bros. v. New Orleans, 28 La. Ann. 936; Brightman v. Bristol, 85 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711; Orr v. Brooklyn, 36 N. Y. 661.

The constitutional provision and the statute under consideration are both remedial and penal. They are remedial so far as they provide for compensation to the legal representative of the person who has been lynched, and penal so far only as they throw the burden of that compensation upon the county within whose borders the lynching occurred.

Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670.

Being remedial they are to be construed liberally, to carry out the purposes of the enactment, suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy contemplated by the Constitution and the statute.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 108, p. 142.

Lynching being the mischief to be remedied, the Constitution and the statute must be so construed as to suppress the mischief.

Underhill v. Manchester, 45 N. H. 214; Gianfortone v. New Orleans, 61 Fed. Rep. 64, 24 L. R. A. 600.

Where a provision in a Constitution general in its language is followed by a proviso, the proviso is to be construed as taking no case out of the provision that does not fairly fall within the terms of the proviso, the latter being understood as carrying out of the provision only specified exceptions, within the words as well as within the reason of the former.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 526, p. 742; Potter v. Third Nat. Bank, 102 U. S. 163, 26 L. ed. 111.

The office of a proviso is also to make clearer the meaning, and prevent any misinterpretation that might exist, if cases which the legislature did not mean to include were brought within the statute.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 184; Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227, 22 L. ed. 80; Boon v. Juliet, 2 Ill. 258; Ihmsen v. Monongahela Nav. Co. 32 Pa. 153.

The greatest deference is shown by the courts to the interpretation put upon the Constitution by the legislature, in the enactment of laws and other practical applications of constitutional provisions to the legislative business.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 527; Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 188; Bingham v. Miller, 17 Ohio, 445, 49 Am. Dec. 471; Johnson v. Joliet & C. R. Co. 23 Ill. 207; Howell v. State, 71 Ga. 224, 51 Am. Rep. 259; Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376; People, Livesay, v. Wright, 6 Colo. 92.

The history of the enactment and its title may also be resorted to in its construction.

State v. Stephenson, 2 Bail. L. 334; Gurrick v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 53 S. C. 448.

Mr. J. B. McLaughlin also for appellant.

41 L. R. A.

Mr. William C. Wolfe, for respondent:

There can be no action against the county unless expressly authorized by statute.

All v. Barnwell County, 29 S. C. 161.

The Constitution and act must be construed together.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 35, 57, 178, 181, 515; Bishop, Written Laws, 89; Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 30; Banger's Appeal, 109 Pa. 79; Co. Litt. 381a; United States v. Bassett, 2 Story, 389.

Intention must be sought regardless of division into sections or groups.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 70, p. 258.

This is a penal statute, and must be strictly construed.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 331, 453.

The presumption is against any change in existing law.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 127.

Messrs. Henry H. Brunson and Charles G. Dantzer also for respondent.

Gary, A. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal question raised by the appeal is whether the presiding judge was in error in directing the jury to find a verdict in favor of the defendant on the ground that § 6, art. 6, of the Constitution, and the act of the legislature entitled "An Act to Prevent Lynching in This State" (Acts 1896, p. 213), conferred upon the plaintiff no right to recover damages against the defendant, as the person lynched was not a prisoner.

Section 6, art. 6, of the Constitution is as follows: "In case of any prisoner lawfully in the charge, custody, or control of any officer, state, county, or municipal, being seized and taken from said officer through his negligence, permission, or connivance, by a mob or other unlawful assemblage of persons, and at their hands suffering bodily violence or death, the said officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon true bill found, shall be deposed from his office pending his trial, and upon conviction shall forfeit his office, and shall, unless pardoned by the governor, be ineligible to hold any office of trust or profit within this state. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney within whose circuit or county the offense may be committed to forthwith institute a prosecution against said officer, who shall be tried in such county in the same circuit, other than the one in which the offense was committed, as the attorney general may elect. The fees and mileage of all material witnesses, both for the state and the defense, shall be paid by the state treasurer in such manner as may be provided by law; provided, in all cases of lynching when death ensues, the county where such lynching takes place shall, without regard to the conduct of the officers, be liable in exemplary damages of not less than $2,000 to the legal representatives of the person lynched: provided, further, that any county against which a judgment has been obtained for damages in any case of lynching shall have the right to recover the amount of said judgment from the parties engaged in said lynching in any court of competent jurisdiction." The act of the legislature is as follows:

"Sec. 1. That in the case of any prisoner lawfully in the charge, custody, or control of any officer, state, county, or municipal, being seized and taken from said officer through his negligence, permission, or connivance, by a mob or other unlawful assemblage of persons, and at their hands suffering bodily violence or death, the said officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon true bill found shall be deposed from his office pending his trial, and upon conviction shall forfeit his office, and shall, unless pardoned by the governor, be ineligible to hold any office of trust or profit within this state. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney within whose circuit or county the offense may be committed to forthwith institute a prosecution against said officer, who shall be tried in such county in the same circuit, other than the one in which the offense was committed, as the attorney general may elect. The fees and mileage of all material witnesses, both for the state and the defense, shall be paid by the state treasurer on a certificate issued by the clerk and signed by the presiding judge, showing the amount of said fee due the witness.

"Sec. 2. In all cases of lynching when death ensues the county where such lynching takes place shall, without regard to the conduct of the officers, be liable in exemplary damages of not less than $2,000, to be recovered by action instituted in any court of competent jurisdiction by the legal representatives of the person lynched, and they are hereby authorized to institute such action for the recovery of such exemplary damages. A county against which a judgment has been obtained for damages in any case of lynching shall have the right to recover the amount of said judgment from the parties engaged in said lynching in any court of competent jurisdiction, and is hereby authorized to institute such action." Acts 1896, p. 213.

The intention of the Constitution was to prevent the crime of lynching in two ways: (1) By visiting upon the officers of the law the penalties therein mentioned, when a prisoner lawfully in their custody was lynched by a mob through their negligence, permission, or connivance; and (2) to induce the co-operation of the taxpayers in preventing the lynching, in order that their county might not become liable to the penalty by way of exemplary damages, of not less than $2,000, to the legal representatives of the person lynched. The lynching of a prisoner, and of one not in the custody of the law as such, is murder, in both cases. It would therefore at least seem strange if the framers of the Constitution were careful to provide, in the organic law of the state, a remedy for preventing the lynching of a prisoner, and remained silent as to the remedy in all other cases of lynching. The constitutional provision, however, is not confined to the lynching of prisoners. The words, "without regard to the conduct of the officers," when considered in connection with the evil which the Constitution intended to remedy, must be construed to mean, "without reference to what has been said in regard to the conduct of the officers," or, in other words, without reference to other provisions of the section. They were inserted for the purpose of showing that the proviso was to be construed independently, and without regard to what preceded it. The word "provided" is omitted in the act, and this fact shows that the legislature gave to the words, "without regard to the conduct of the officers," the construction which this court has placed upon them. It must be remembered that many of those who were members of the constitutional convention were likewise members of the general assembly when said act was passed. While, of course, a construction placed upon the Constitution by the legislative branch of the government would not be binding upon the courts, still in this case it is well worthy of consideration. The act intended to make the county liable for damages in those cases only which fall within the provisions of the Constitution, and it has correctly construed the Constitution to make a county liable for damages when the person lynched was not in the custody of the law as a prisoner. This renders unnecessary the consideration of the interesting question whether the legislature did not have the power, independently of the constitutional provision, to pass the act hereinbefore mentioned. It has been held that statutes making a community liable for damages in cases of lynching, and giving a right of recovery to the legal representatives of the person lynched, are valid, on the ground that the main purpose is to impose a penalty on the community, which is given to the legal representatives, not because they have been damaged, but because the legislature sees fit thus to dispose of the penalty. Such statutes are salutary, as their effect is to render protection to human life, and make communities law-abiding. But, as we have said, our conclusion renders unnecessary a consideration of this question.

It is not necessary to consider the exceptions in detail, as our views dispose of the main question in the case.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

William CARUTHERS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT, & MEM-PHIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

(59 Kan. 629.)

*In the case of a lease made by one railroad company to another under the statute authorizing leases between railroad companies, the lessor company is not liable to third persons for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the leased line by the lessee company, where the lease is general in its terms, and confers upon the lessee company "the exclusive right to run and operate its trains of cars over and upon the track of the lessor company," without reserving to the latter any right of control over the operation of the road by the former.

(October 8, 1898.)

ERROR to the District Court for Bourbon County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover

*Headnote by DOSTER, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using the road under a lease, license, or other contract.

- I. General principles as to.
- II. Under railway leases.
 - a. The general rule.
 - b. Application to particular subjects.
 - c. Authority to lease; construction.
 - d. Effect of authority.
 1. Conflict of opinion.
 2. Rule requiring special statutory exemption.
 3. Rule that general authority to lease is sufficient.
 4. Necessity of entire control by lessee.
 5. Limited to injuries in operation of road.
 6. Operation and charter duties distinguished.
- III. Under running privileges or arrangements.
- IV. Under contracts for construction or otherwise.
- V. Under ineffectual attempt to consolidate.
- VI. Occupation must be authorized.
- VII. Injuries to employees.
- VIII. Provisions for joint liability.
- IX. Effect of lease or other contract upon failure of duty to fence.

I. General principles as to.

The grant of a franchise giving the right to build, own, and operate a railway carries with it the duty to so use the property and manage and control the railroad as to do no unnecessary damage to the person or property of others, and where injury results from the negligent or unlawful operation of the railroad, whether by the corporation to which the franchise was granted, or by another corporation, or by individuals whom the owner authorizes or permits to use its tracks, the company owning the railroad and franchise will be liable. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654.

And when injury results from the negligent damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to have been responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. D. Hill and W. R. Biddle for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Wallace Pratt, James Black, Ed. C. Gates, and Charles W. Blair, for defendant in error:

Any railway company organized under the laws of this state may lease the road and appurtenances of any other railway company when the road so leased shall thereby become, in the operation thereof, a continuation and extension of the road of the company accepting the lease.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Fletcher, 35 Kan. 236.

Where the statute authorizes the lease, the lessee assumes, during the existence of the lease, all the duties and obligations of the lessor, and, from the time it enters into the possession of the road, becomes solely liable for all injuries resulting from its management unless it is operating the road in the name of the lessor.

or unlawful operation of a railroad, whether by the corporation to which the franchise is granted, or by another corporation, or other corporations which the proprietary company authorizes or permits to use its tracks, the company owning the railroad tracks and franchises is liable therefor as well as the one by which the damage was done. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 163 Ill. 305.

The public may look for indemnity for injury resulting from the wrongful or unlawful operation of the railroad to the corporation to which it granted the franchise, thus delegating a portion of the public service to it, and for this purpose the company whom it permits to use its tracks, and its servants and employees will be regarded as the servants and agents of the owner company. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654.

A railroad company is a quasi-public corporation which cannot by its own voluntary contract or collusion surrender its functions and responsibilities to agents or trustees of its own selection,—especially if they live outside the state and beyond the reach of its process. Naglee v. Alexandria & F. R. Co. 83 Va. 707.

And a railroad company has no power to relieve itself from liability arising under the laws of the state made for the purpose of compelling railroad companies to discharge their duties to the public faithfully and impartially by placing its road under the management and control of other persons. Woodhouse v. Rio Grande R. Co. 67 Tex. 416.

And the fact that a locomotive and cars by which an injury is done through negligence are being operated at the time by third persons under a contract with the owner of the road, does not release it from liability therefor. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Finnigan, 21 Ill. 646.

A railroad company cannot absolve itself from the performance of duties imposed upon it by law, or relieve itself from liability for the wrongful acts or omission of duty of persons operating its road, by transferring its corporate powers to them or permitting them to operate its road as owners of its capital stock. Choll-

Wood, Railway Law, § 490; Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608; Mahoney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 68; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Anderson, 94 Pa. 351, 39 Am. Rep. 787; Haff v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 558; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 515b; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 468; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, §§ 130-132; Ditchett v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 425.

If a servant, by his negligence, does any damage to a stranger, the master shall answer for his neglect. But in these cases the damage must be done while he is actually employed in the master's service.

1 Bl. Com. p. 431.

The liability of one person for damages resulting from the act of another, either of negligence or misfeasance, on the principle of respondent superior, is confined to the relation of master and servant and principal and agent, and cannot be extended to cover independent contracts when that relation is not created.

ette v. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. 26 Neb. 159, 4 L. R. A. 135.

And railroad companies cannot, by means of any contract for the operation of their lines of transportation or the management and control of their tracks and right of way, relieve themselves from liability for violations of contracts or the public law, or for torts committed by their lessees or the parties with whom they specially contract. Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 46; Palmer v. Utah & N. R. Co. 2 Idaho, 350.

Every railroad company is liable for the acts of all persons to whom it confides the management and control of its road as fully as though operated under the immediate control of the agencies provided by its charter. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Moody, 71 Tex. 614; Woodhouse v. Rio Grande R. Co. 67 Tex. 416.

Where a railroad company permits other companies or persons to exercise the franchise of running cars drawn by steam over its road, the company owning the road to which the law has entrusted the franchise is liable for any injury done as though the company owning the road were itself running the cars. Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678.

The reason for holding a railroad company responsible for the performance of all the duties and obligations imposed upon it by its charter or the general laws of the state while it is being operated by another does not rest upon the narrow ground alone that the latter is in the exercise of a franchise which belongs to the former, and in so acting is to be held as the servant or agent of the owner corporation, but is also based upon the grant of its charter, in consideration of which the corporation undertakes the performance of duties and obligations toward the public, and it is a matter of public policy that it should not be relieved from their performance without the consent of the legislature. Balsley v. St. Louis, A. & T. U. R. Co. 119 Ill. 68, 59 Am. Rep. 784.

II. Under railway leases.

a. The general rule.

A railroad company receives its charter from the state, conferring certain franchises, rights, and privileges upon consideration that it will perform the duties and fulfil the ob-

Wood, Master & Servant, § 281; Speed v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 303; Cincinnati v. Stone, 5 Ohio St. 38; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 359, 72 Am. Dec. 590.

An independent contractor is one who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer, except as to the result of his work.

Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co. 88 Tenn. 692; Miller v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 655.

A railroad company is not responsible for negligence in the operation of an engine, when, at the time of the accident, the engine and crew by which it was operated were rented to, and under the control of, another company.

Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 220, 61 Fed. Rep. 605, 9 C. C. A. 666, 24 L. R. A. 693; Donovan v. Laing, W. & D. Constr. Syndicate [1893] 1 Q. B. 629; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; Schicartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, ligations which it at the same time incurs, and the fact that it chooses to perform such duties and fulfil such obligations through another as lessee or otherwise cannot release it from the obligations assumed by the acceptance of its charter. National Bank v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 25 S. C. 216.

And a railway corporation cannot escape the performance of any duty or obligation imposed upon it by its charter or the general laws of the state by a voluntary surrender of its road into the hands of lessees. Harmon v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 28 S. C. 401; National Bank v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 25 S. C. 216; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Ill. 623, 71 Am. Dec. 291; Atty. Gen. v. Erie & K. R. Co. 55 Mich. 15; McCoy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 445; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Salmon, 39 N. J. L. 299, 23 Am. Rep. 214; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Lee, 71 Tex. 538; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kuehn, 70 Tex. 582; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Daniels, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 253; Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 46; Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 445, 21 L. ed. 675.

And the rule is the same whether the liability claimed was ex delicto or ex contractu. National Bank v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 25 S. C. 216.

The operation of a railroad by a lessee does not change the relations of the original company to the public. A. Backus Jr. & Sons v. Detroit W. Transit & Junction R. Co. 71 Mich. 645.

And a railroad company leasing its road is liable to a third person for an injury caused him by the negligence of the lessee in the operation of the road. Benton v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 1007; Kinney v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 961; Denver, M. & A. R. Co. v. Cowgill, 44 Kan. 325; Price v. Barnard, 65 Mo. App. 649; Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 25 U. S. App. 415, 70 Fed. Rep. 442, 17 C. C. A. 181, 30 L. R. A. 823.

And this is so especially where the power to lease is not expressly given. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Ill. 623, 71 Am. Dec. 291.

A railroad company which under the lease of another road is conducting it wholly in the interests of the lessor occupies the position mere-92 Am. Dec. 227; Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 85 Mo. 418, 55 Am. Rep. 380.

When a lease of one railroad is made to another without authority from statute law, the same is ultra vires and void, and both parties are responsible for torts or other injuries committed on the road. The lessor company, under a lease authorized by statute, is liable for injuries caused by its own negligence in matters connected with the building of the road, such as failing to fence, or to provide good cattle guards as required by statute, or other like matters connected with the first construction of the road. But it is not so liable for the torts of a legally authorized lessee in the operation of the road, as this is a matter in which the lessor could have no control.

Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Ewing, 23 Kan. 273; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Wood, 24 Kan. 619; St. Louis, W. & W. R. Co. v. Curl, 28 Kan. 622; Denver, M. & A. R. Co. v. Cowgill, 44 Kan. 328; Wichita & C. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 47 Kan. 276.

ly of operating agent, rendering the lessor liable for injuries from the negligence of the lessee. Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 25 U. S. App. 415, 70 Fed. Rep. 442, 17 C. C. A. 181, 30 L. R. A. 823.

And a railroad company chartered by the state cannot without legislative authority by lease or any other contract or arrangement turn over to another company its road and the use of its franchises, and thereby exempt itself from responsibility for the conduct and management of the road, or evade any duty it may owe the general public. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 366, 23 L. R. A. 758; Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 83 W. Va. 433, 7 L. R. A. 354; Rome & D. R. Co. v. Chasteen, 88 Ala. 591; Coggin v. Central R. Co. 62 Ga. 685; Nugent v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 62; Quested v. Newburyport & A. Horse R. Co. 127 Mass. 204; Freeman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 28 Minn. 443; Lakin v. Willamette Valley & C. R. Co. 13 Or. 436, 57 Am. Rep. 25; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Underwood, 67 Tex. 589; Central & M. R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 59; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 308; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Eckford, 71 Tex. 274; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Moody, 71 Tex. 614; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Culbertson, 72 Tex. 375, 3 L. R. A. 567; Hayes v. Northern P. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 41, 74 Fed. Rep. 279, 20 C. C. A. 52.

Where a railroad company leases its line without authority of law such lease is void, and it will continue liable for all the negligence of the lessee affecting the public, the latter being treated as operating the road as a mere agent of the lessor. Arrowsmith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 165; Heron v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 68 Minn. 542; Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. 178 Pa. 367, 34 L. R. A. 577; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Underwood, 67 Tex. 589; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Culbertson, 72 Tex. 375, 3 L. R. A. 567; Abbott v. Johnstown, G. & K. Horse R. Co. 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572.

And where one railroad leases its line to another, and the lease is not ratified by the state, which has not consented to the transfer of the franchise or relieved the owner from responsibility as such, the lease is only binding upon the parties as between themselves, but is of no effect as to a third person receiving personal in-

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action for damages for bodily injuries negligently inflicted by the plaintiff in error upon the line of the Ft. Scott, Southeastern, & Memphis Railway many years ago. The facts were presented to the court below in an agreed statement and in other documentary forms. Summarized, they are that the Ft. Scott, Southeastern, & Memphis Railway Company and the Missouri River, Ft. Scott, & Gulf Railroad Company were Kansas corporations, the first named of which leased its line to the one last named under the following instrument:

This agreement, made this 9th day of December, A. D. 1874, by and between the Fort Scott, Southeastern, & Memphis Railway Company, party of the first part, and the Missouri River, Fort Scott, & Gulf Railroad Company, party of the second part, both being corporations existing under the laws of the state of Kansas, witnesseth: Whereas, the said party of the first part juries at the hands of a lessee, his rights being the same as if no such contract had been made or attempted. Van Dresser v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 48 Fed. Rep. 202.

The owner of a railroad by virtue of its charter assumes the obligation to perform certain duties for the public in carrying freight and passengers and in observing the statutory precautions for the protection of the public from danger in the operation of its railroad; and when by leasing its road it unlawfully shifts to another company the burden of the discharge of its duties, any loss resulting to any member of the public from a failure by the lessee to discharge them may be made the basis of a claim for damages against the lessor company. Hukill v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 72 Fed. Rep. 745.

A railway company cannot by a lease without the consent of the state escape responsibility for the act of a lessee, and thus shift the burdens and responsibilities it took upon itself by accepting the charter at the hands of the state or by organizing under the general law. Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 394.

It cannot without special statutory authority alienate its franchises or property acquired under the right of eminent domain or essential to the performance of its duty to the public, so as to relieve itself from such duty, either by sale, mortgage, or lease. Singleton v. Southwestern R. Co. 70 Ga. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 574.

And this is so even if it surrenders possession to the lessee; the lessee is liable for its negligent acts, but so also is the lessor to the same extent that a principal is liable for a trespass committed by an agent in the line of his employment. Von Steuben v. Central R. Co. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 153.

And where the road and rolling stock of a railway are owned by one company and leased to another without special authority from the state, both companies would be liable for an injury inflicted by an engine on animals running at large, the one because of its actual operation of the road, and the other because it could not without permission of the legislature transfer its franchise, even temporarily, so as to release itself from liability for the acts and defaults of the lessee. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Dunham, 68 Tex. 231.

A transfer by a railroad company of its line has constructed and is the owner of a railroad track commencing at a point on the main line of the railroad now owned and operated by the said party of the second part about half way between the town of Godfrey and the city of Fort Scott, in the county of Bourbon, and the state of Kansas, and extending from thence in a general southeasterly direction about 6½ miles through the vicinity of the coal banks in the said county of Bourbon; and whereas, said party of the first part has no rolling stock, and is desirous that the said party of the second part shall furnish the necessary rolling stock and operate said road: Now, therefore, in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter contained on the part of said party of the second part to be performed, said party of the first part hereby covenants and agrees that it will maintain in good order its track, and give to said party of the second part for the term of ten years from and after the date of this contract, unless said contract shall be sooner terminated, the exclusive right to run and operate its trains of cars over and upon said railroad track of the said party of the first part, free of charge, but for the purpose only of carrying the coal supplied to the said party of the first part for shipment to any point on the line or beyond the northern terminus of the railroad of the said party of the second part. And the said party of the second part further agrees that it will not build, cause to be built, or in any manner whatever encourage the building of, any other railroad track within the distance of 7 miles of the point where the track of the said party of the first part commences. And the said party of the second part agrees further that it will, with its own locomotive power and cars, transport, without unnecessary delay, for a period of ten years, unless the contract shall be sooner terminated, all coal that may be supplied to the said party of the first part for shipment over its line of road to another company is not a transfer of the legal ownership which will relieve it from liability for negligent acts of the transferee, where the instrument of transfer is in most of its provisions a lease, and there are no direct words indicating a transfer of ownership or tending to show that the owner expected to relieve itself from the duties and liabilities imposed by its franchise. Driscoll v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 65 Conn. 230.

Neither a steam nor a street railroad corporation can make a valid transfer by way of lease or otherwise of its franchise or its railroad and the bulk of its property so as to relieve itself of the burdens imposed upon it by law or by its charter, without the consent of the state. Braslin v. Somerville Horse R. Co. 145 Mass. 64.

So, in Norton v. North Carolina R. Co. 122 N. C. 910, a recovery was allowed against the owner of a railroad for injuries received by the plaintiff through the negligence of the lessee thereof, but the case turned upon other grounds, and the question of the liability of the lessor for the negligence of the lessee was not discussed.

And in McCoy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 445, cases between individuals where such liability was held not to exist were distinguished upon the ground that they had no application to a railroad corporation which had received its charter from the state and by acceptance thereof had taken upon itself burdens and responsibilities which it cannot shift without the consent of the state.

So, it has been held that a railroad company can be held responsible in punitive damages for any malicious, oppressive, or reckless act of a lessee of the road resulting in injury to a third person, and the question whether the trainmen of the lessee were reckless, malicious, or oppressive is properly left to the jury. Hart v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 33 S. C. 427, 10 L. R. A. 794.

b. Application to particular subjects.

The duty of a railroad company to keep its road and switches on it in a safe and proper condition for use is of a public character, and is due to every person who is lawfully upon the road, and one which it cannot dispose of by leasing the road to another. Sawyer v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 370. 44 L. R. A.

And the owner of a railroad and the franchisees thereof is liable for injury to a passenger on a train operated by a lessee, growing out of the fact that a switch was not properly constructed and maintained or was not properly locked or otherwise secured, whether this was the result of the neglect of the employees of the owner or those of the lessee of the road. Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Lane, 83 Ill. 448.

So, a railroad company leasing its road to another railroad company without legislative consent is liable for injuries to persons caused by negligent defects in its tracks at a highway crossing, though the lessee company had entered upon the control and management of the road. Freeman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 28 Minn. 443.

And a railroad company cannot exonerate itself from liability for an assault committed on a passenger on its road by a trainman by proving that the portion of the road on which the assault occurred had been leased to and was being operated by another corporation. Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 433, 7 L. R. A. 354.

So, a railroad company chartered by the state does not by leasing its road to another company relieve itself from liability for an injury to a passenger caused by a failure to provide sufficient coaches to receive and accommodate passengers. Bonknight v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 41 S. C. 415.

And it cannot escape liability to one who was injured from failure to provide sufficient coaches to accommodate passengers, upon the ground that the injury occurred beyond its line, where it had leased its line, and though the place where the injury occurred was beyond the line owned by it previous to such leasing it had had the privilege of going over that place from the proper authorities, and its lessee had continued to exercise that privilege without break. Ibid.

And a railroad company cannot lease its corporate property and franchises so as to be relieved from liability for damages to a shipment of hogs due to overcrowding, while the road was being run by the lessee. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Ill. 623, 71 Am. Dec. 291.

So, where cotton is received and receipted for by the agents of a lessor railroad operated by a lessee, the contract will be regarded as having been made directly with the lessor, and it will be held liable for failure to deliver goods thereunder, though the road is operated at the time of railroad from any loading station on the line thereof to Kansas City in the state of Missouri, at the rate of sixteen dollars ($16) per car load of 12 tons each, and for rates as low to any point on the line north of Fort Scott, or at and beyond the northern terminus of the railroad of the said party of the second part, as shall be given or allowed to any other person or corporation without the consent of the said party of the first part (excepting, however, two contracts now in force), from the city of Fort Scott or any other station south of Fort Scott to any point north on the line or beyond the northern terminus of its railroad. And it is further stipulated and agreed that if the said party of the first part shall hereafter extend its railroad track to the state line between Kansas and Missouri, or to a greater distance than 6½ miles from the point where the same shall intersect the railroad of the said party of the second part, then and in that case the said party of the second part will operate the same, and shall be entitled to receive, and the said party of the first part agrees to pay, the sum of $1 per car load in addition to the price herein agreed to be paid for all coal transported by the said party of the second part for each and every 5 miles, and every part thereof, the same is transported over the line of road so extended. And it is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that for the transportation of all freight other than coal, and all passengers, from the city of Fort Scott to the terminus of the 6 miles of road now built by said party of the first part, and from such terminus to the city of Fort Scott, the said party of the second part shall collect and receive the entire freight moneys and fares, 50 per cent of which said party of the first part shall be entitled to receive, and said party of the second part hereby agrees to pay. And it is further expressly agreed that in the event that business along the line of said road of the party of the first part, other than the

by the lessee. National Bank v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 25 S. C. 216.

And a railroad company owning a railroad and having the profit of the franchise may be held primarily responsible for loss by fire originating from a locomotive running on such road with its consent in the transaction of business for the accommodation of which its franchise was procured, though it had leased its franchise. Ingersoll v. Stockbridge & P. R. Co. 8 Allen, 438.

And the fact that a railroad company has leased a part of its road to another company, which is a corporation of another state whose road connects with it, does not relieve the former company from liability for the loss of goods delivered to it to be carried over its road, occurring upon the part leased. Langley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 10 Gray, 103.

So, a depot company cannot so lease or transfer its interest under its franchise as to rid itself of liability to a person injured from its improper use. A. Backus Jr. & Sons v. Detroit W. Transit & Junction R. Co. 71 Mich. 645.

And the lessor of a railroad cannot escape liability for an injury caused in its operation by the lessee upon the theory that its tracks are upon its private grounds and for its own convenience, and that the same rule must be applied as would apply to the track of a private individual extending into his lumber yard or the like, where it was authorized by law to acquire land for right of way by purchase and condemnation and to make connections with other railroads, and it was clothed with ample power to control its management and operation, whether by itself or others. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654.

So, the owner of a railroad which has leased the same is not relieved from liability for injuries done thereon by the transfer of possession thereof to a receiver by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, unless the possession of the receiver is exclusive and the servants of the road are wholly employed and controlled by him. Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 445, 21 L. ed. 675.

And a railroad company cannot escape liability for the negligent injury to property committed by trains on its line on the ground that it had leased its railroad to another company, which latter company had under an order of the United States circuit court been put into the hands of receivers who were operating such road 44 L. R. A.

at the time of such injury. Parr v. Spartanburg, U. & C. R. Co. 43 S. C. 197.

So, a railroad company subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce cannot, by leasing its road, free itself from liability for practices made illegal by that statute. Independent Refiners' Assn. v. Western N. Y. & P. R. Co. 6 Intern. Com. Rep. 378.

And a corporation of one state whose stock is owned by a corporation of another state, by which the road is managed, and which appoints the officers and agents and furnishes the rolling stock, the directors of the former company being selected by the latter company and qualified by a transfer of one or more shares of stock to them before an election, which they return on vacating their office, and which makes annual statements to the legislature, in which its gross receipts for the year are nominally divided among the companies, is liable for the infringement of a patent right respecting the cars used thereon. New York & M. Line R. Co. v. Winans, 17 How. 31, 15 L. ed. 27.

c. Authority to lease; construction.

Authority to lease is conferred by statute in most of the states. These statutes generally confer power in plain and direct terms, and have consequently given rise to but little judicial construction. It would seem, however, that the power must be clearly and plainly conferred, and that statutes conferring it are to be strictly construed.

Thus, where the power to sell or lease is not expressly conferred upon a railway corporation, it will not arise from implication so as to relieve it from liability for torts of a lessee. Arrowsmith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 165.

In the above case Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 446, 21 L. ed. 675, supra, II. b. was distinguished upon the ground that it did not appear in that case that the lease had been made by authority of law, and it appeared that the road was operated by one of the owners in its name, and that the person injured held a ticket of the lessor company, and the question of the effect of legislative authority to make a lease upon the liability of the lessor was not discussed.

So, the ordinary clause in a railway charter authorizing state corporations to contract with other transportation companies for the mutual carrying of coal, should be sufficient to induce the party of the first part to desire to operate its said road, then the said party of the first part shall have the right to cancel and annul this contract, first giving sixty days' written notice of its intention so to do and paying to the said party of the second part all moneys due it for freight advances or otherwise. It is also further agreed that, in the event of the annulling of this contract and operation of the said road by the said party of the first part, it shall have a right of way for its trains over the track of the said party of the second part between the point of intersection of the two roads and the city of Fort Scott, upon such terms as may be reasonable and usual, and as may be agreed upon between the parties; and, in case the parties are unable to agree upon such terms, then each may choose a referee, who, in the event of disagreement, may select a third, to fix such terms, and their decision shall be binding upon both the parties hereto. In witness whereof, the said parties have caused these presents to be subscribed, the party of the first part by its president and the party of the second part by its general manager, and have caused their respective corporate seals to be hereunto affixed on the day and year first above written.

Fort Scott, Southeastern & Memphis Railway Company,

By its President, B. P. McDonald.
Missouri River, Fort Scott, & Gulf Railroad Company,

By Geo. H. Nettleton, General Manager.

The injuries to the plaintiff in error occurred through the negligence of the employees of the above-named lessee company in the operation of the leased line. Subsequently the Ft. Scott, Southeastern, & Memphis Railway Company was consolidated with other companies into the Kansas City, Ft. Scott, & Memphis Railroad Company, the defendant in error. What became of the Missouri River, transfer of goods and passengers over each other's road confers no authority to a railroad to lease its road and franchisees. Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950.

And act of Congress of July 4, 1884, giving a railroad company the right to build its road through the lands of the Indian Nations upon condition that it bind itself, its successors and assigns, to refrain from certain acts, that being the only mention made of the word "assigns," does not give authority to lease its road. Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 273.

And Texas Const. art. 10, § 5, providing that no railroad corporation or the lessees of such corporation shall consolidate with any other having a parallel or competing line, is restrictive upon the power of such corporations, and cannot be construed as a grant of authority to lease so as to release the lessor of a railroad from liability for failure to perform its charter obligations. Central & M. R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 59.

And New York act of 1864, requiring a lessee to perform certain acts, and specifying, among other lessees, other railroad companies and person or persons, does not confer power to lease a railroad to a person or individual, but is applicable only when such power has been obtained. Abbott v. Johnstown, G. & K. Horse R. Co. 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572.

So, a statute providing for the leasing of continuous lines refers to corporations of the state unless an express intent appears that it shall be applied to other corporations. Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. 178 Pa. 367, 34 L. R. A. 577.

And the charter of a railroad and the laws of a state under which it exists, giving it power to lease its road, do not give it the right to exercise such power beyond the limits of the state. Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 273.

And Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 34, § 69, providing that any railroad corporation may lease or purchase any part of any railroad constructed by any other corporation whose lines of road are continuous or connected with its own, the title to which is devoted to providing how corporations empowered to take private property for public use, and how railroad corporations, may be incorporated, and to the regulation of such corporations, and defining their powers and duties, refers to corporations of the state, and does not authorize the leasing of a railroad in the state by a railroad company of 44 L. R. A.

another state. Freeman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 28 Minn. 443.

And where a railroad company chartered by the state permits a foreign railroad corporation to operate a part of its road in the state under a verbal agreement, and the two railroads form a continuous line through and beyond the limits of the state, the domestic company will be liable for injuries sustained on that portion of its road so operated by the foreign company. Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 433, 7 L. R. A. 354.

And see also, on the subject of leasing to foreign corporations, Nagle v. Alexandria & F. R. Co. 83 Va. 707, supra, I., and Langley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 10 Gray, 103, supra, II. b.

So, the lease of a railroad will not be deemed to have been authorized by Pa. Acts 1861, P. L. 140, 1870, P. L. 31, authorizing such lease where the roads are connected either directly or by intervening lines forming a continuous route or routes for the transportation of persons and property, so as to relieve the lessor company from liability for the acts of the lessee, where nothing in the lease shows, and it is not plain, that the roads of the lessor and lessee were connected either directly or by an intervening line. Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. 178 Pa. 367, 34 L. R. A. 577.

This note is confined to the question of the liability of the lessor or licensor of a railroad for the wrongful acts of the lessee or licensee, and is not intended to include the question of the power to lease. The question of power is touched incidentally only, as bearing upon the question of liability, and as it appeared incidentally in liability cases.

d. Effect of authority.

1. Conflict of opinion.

The question whether the leasing of a railroad under a mere statutory authority to lease will relieve the lessor from liability for wrongs of the lessee in the operation of the road, or whether, in order to accomplish that object, it is also necessary that the statute should contain an express exemption from liability, has given rise to much conflict of judicial opinion. The more general rule, however, would seem to be that bare authority to lease would be sufficient to release from liability for wrongs of the lessee in the operation of the road, but not for such as arose from defects in the origi-

Ft. Scott, & Gulf Railroad Company is immaterial. Under the statutes of this state the new or consolidated company became liable for the obligations of the old or constituent companies. Berry v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 52 Kan. 760. For reasons not necessary to explain, the liability of the Ft. Scott, Southeastern, & Memphis Railway Company to the plaintiff in error was not barred by the statute of limitations at the time of the consolidation; nor is the liability of the consolidated company barred, if it ever existed. Did it ever exist? The determination of this question depends upon the interpretation of the lease above quoted, and the effect to be given the statute which authorized it to be made. If, under the statute and the lease, the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff in error was wholly the act of the lessee company, it alone was liable. If, on the other hand, the injury was wholly or in part the act of the lessor company, it was liable, and its liability has descended upon the defendant in error. The court below held it to have been the act of the lessee company, and in this view we concur. The lease in question was made under the authority of chap. 92, Laws 1870, § 2 of which reads: "Any railroad company in this state existing under general or special laws may lease its road to any other railroad company, organized under the laws of this state, or to any railroad company duly organized and existing under the laws of an adjoining state whose line of railroad shall so connect with the leased road as to form a continuous line." That a railroad company may not lease its line, and turn the operation of its road over to another railroad company, without legislative authority for so doing, may be conceded. It takes to itself a public franchise, and unless authorized to do so, may not decline to perform the duties it has voluntarily assumed. That it may, by legislative permission, lease its property, and put another in the performance of its duties, may likewise be a question of fact. But the rule that a special statutory exemption is necessary is ably supported and tenaciously adhered to.

2. Rule requiring special statutory exemption.

The rule adopted by some of the states, among which are North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, and Nebraska, is that however many leases or subleases of a railroad may have been made, the law attaches to the actual exercise of the privilege of carrying passengers and freight the compensatory obligation to the public to use ordinary care for the safety of both the persons and property so transferred. But the carrier who simply substitutes, with the consent of the state, another in his place, cannot establish his own right of exemption from responsibility for the wrongs of the substitute, unless he can show, not only explicit authority to lease the property, but also to rid himself of the responsibility. Logan v. North Carolina R. Co. 116 N. C. 940.

Under this rule legislative consent to the leasing of a railroad is not alone sufficient to release the owner from its obligations to the public, and will not, without more, release it from liability for the torts committed by the lessee. Singleton v. Southwestern R. Co. 70 Ga. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 574.

In the above case, Jones v. Georgia Southern R. Co. 66 Ga. 558, infra, VII., was distinguished upon the ground that the case at bar arose, not between the lessee company and one of its servants, but between the owner of the railroad operated by the lessee company in its name, and the public, in the exercise of one of its most important franchises—the transportation of passengers.

Exemption from liability on the part of a lessor of a railroad for damages for acts of the lessee is not necessarily implied from a lease made with legislative authority, giving the lessee the exclusive control and possession of the road. Heron v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 68 Minn. 542.

And a lease of a railroad, though duly authorized by law, will not release the railroad company from liability for a failure to discharge its charter obligations, unless the law giving the power to make the lease contains a provision to that effect. Central & M. R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 59.

And a railroad company cannot by leasing its property absolve itself from liability for an injury to a person caused by the negligence of the lessee in the operation of the road, unless such exemption is expressly authorized by legislative authority. Driscoll v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 65 Conn. 230.

The original obligation of a railroad company to the public cannot be discharged by a transfer of its franchises to another company except by legislative enactment, consenting to and authorizing such transfer and exempting it from liability, and mere legislative consent without release from the obligations to the public is not sufficient. Chollette v. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. 26 Neb. 159, 4 L. R. A. 135.

So, the consent of the state that a railroad company might lease its road is not a consent to the surrender of any of the rights of the public in and to or connected with the charter of such railroad company, where it is not expressed in the law permitting the lease. Fisher v. Baltimore & O. & C. O. R. Cos. 3 Ohio N. P. 283.

And a charter of a railway company authorizing it to farm out or lease its road to another company, and the fact that a railroad has done so, do not exempt it from responsibility for negligent acts of the lessee by which cattle are killed, in the absence of any positive granting of such exemption. Harmon v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 28 S. C. 401.

And the lessor of a railroad cannot be said to have performed the public duty owed by it under its charter where it permits its lessee to use locomotive engines which are neither safe nor suitable for guarding against fire. Fisher v. Baltimore & O. & C. O. R. Cos. 3 Ohio N. P. 283.

And the liability of a railroad corporation for injuries by the wrongful acts of a lessee or other person done in the exercise by its permission of any of its franchises is not limited to wrongs done by them while in the performance of acts which they would have had no right to perform except under the charter of the company sought to be made liable. Balsley v. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. 119 Ill. 68, 59 Am. Rep. 784.

There is no distinction between the liability of a lessor of a railroad for an injury sustained by reason of some omission of duty resting upon the lessor,—as, for example, for a defective condition of the track or of a bridge existing at the time of the lease,—and an injury arising from negligence of the lessee's servants in running the trains. Harmon v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 28 S. C. 401.

be conceded; and when, in pursuance to the authority conferred, an instrument of lease is executed, such instrument must be construed, we think, as like instruments between other corporations or between private individuals. If the authority to lease is general the lease may be general in its terms, and without conditions, except such as the parties choose to insert. If the authority to lease be general, the lessor may put the lessee wholly and fully in the possession of its roadbed and other property for the purpose of exclusive operation by the latter. In the case of the lease in question this was done. Upon the lessee was conferred "the exclusive right to run and operate its trains of cars over and upon the track of the party of the first part." Nowhere in the instrument is there any language limiting this full and complete cession of authority, but there is elsewhere in it language which, by strong implication, confirms and strengthens the general grant.

So, the rule of liability has been arrived at through the construction placed upon the peculiar language of some of the statutes authorizing the lease in some of the cases.

Thus, Iowa Code, §§ 1278, 1307, making lessees of railroads liable to the same extent as the corporation, merely supplies a cumulative remedy, and does not release the owner of the road from liability for its operation. Bower v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 546.

And Iowa Code, § 1300, with reference to railroads, providing that any such corporation may sell or lease its railroad property and franchises or make joint running arrangements with any corporation owning or operating any connecting railroad, and the corporation operating the railway of another shall in all respects be liable in the same manner and to the same extent as though such railway belonged to it, does not discharge the lessor company from any of its corporate duties or liabilities, but simply imposes an additional liability upon the lessee while operating it. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Crane, 113 U. S. 424, 28 L. ed. 1064.

And the effect of Mass. Stat. 1873, chap. 49, providing that a railroad may lease its road and franchises and contract with any responsible parties for the operation of its road, but such lease or contract shall not release or exempt said company from any duties and liabilities or restrictions to which it would otherwise be subject, is that the railroad company has the same liability to persons injured in the operation and management of the road while the lease is in force which it would have had if the injury had been sustained while the company was itself managing its road. Quested v. Newburyport & A. Horse R. Co. 127 Mass. 204.

So, the owner of a railroad is liable, under Illinois railroad and warehouse act, § 38, providing that it shall be the duty of all railroad corporations to keep their right of way clear from dead grass, dry weeds, or other dangerous combustible material, imposing a penalty for violation thereof, for damage caused by fire communicated by the negligent act of the employees of a lessee of the road. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Campbell, 86 Ill. 443.

And a railroad company which has leased its road to another company is liable under the state statute for the destruction of property by fire through the neglect of the lessee company to keep its right of way clear from dead grass, dried weeds, etc., though the legislature may have conferred upon the lessee company all the

In pursuance to this instrument the lessor company put the lessee company in the exclusive possession and operation of its roadbed, and in the exclusive discharge of its franchise as a public carrier. While thus in possession and operation of the leased road, and in the discharge of the lessor's franchise, the lessee committed the tort in question through the agency of its own train of cars negligently operated by its own employees. Upon what just legal principle, therefore, can the lessor be held liable for the wrong thus wholly committed by another, and which it was powerless to prevent. At common law the lessor is not liable for the tenant's negligence in the use of the leased premises resulting in injuries to another, unless a right of control in such respect is reserved. Wood, Land & T. § 539. If, therefore, the question were determinable upon principles pertaining to lessors and lessees as individuals, the plaintiff in error could have no cause of complaint. It is asserted, powers of the lessor, where there was no express exemption from liability. Balsley v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 119 Ill. 68, 59 Am. Rep. 784.

So, a railroad company which has leased its road is nevertheless liable, under Me. Rev. Stat. 1857, chap. 51, § 38, providing that when a building or other property is injured by fire communicated by an engine used upon its track by the lessee, the corporation using it is responsible for such injury, where the statute authorizing the lease expressly provides that nothing in such lease shall exonerate the lessor from any duty or liability imposed by its charter, or any general law of the state. Bean v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 293.

And under Me. Stat. 1853, chap. 150, § 1, authorizing railroad companies to lease their roads, and providing that nothing contained in such act or any lease or contract entered into under it should exonerate the company or stockholders thereof from any duties or liabilities the owner of the road assumed by the acceptance of its charter or which were afterwards rightfully imposed upon it by the laws of the state, such duties were, at least for the purposes of a remedy, to remain and continue to be obligatory upon it in the same manner and to the same extent as if the lease had not been executed, and the possession and management transferred to lessees, and such liability is not restricted to such claims as arise from duties with relation to the structure of the road, or from neglect properly to construct and fence it, as distinguished from duties arising from its management and operation. Stearns v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 46 Me. 95.

So, the facts that an act enabling a railroad corporation to lease its road calls for a responsible lessee, and that such lessee is liable for injuries caused by his negligent management, do not release the lessor from liability for injuries caused by the operation or management of the road during the life of the lease. Quested v. Newburyport & A. Horse R. Co. 127 Mass. 204.

And a street-railway company empowered to construct a street railroad, and made liable for any loss or injury sustained from its carelessness or negligence in the management or construction of its road, which transfers a part thereof to another street railroad company under an agreement that the second company is to stand in the place of the first so far as the road is concerned, taking the lease subject to all the conditions, restrictions, duties, and liabilities however, that the lessor company, having taken upon itself the obligation to operate a railroad, could not, even under the authority to lease, so far abdicate its franchise as to escape responsibility for injuries to third persons occurring incident to the performance of the duty by its substituted agency, the lessee company; that in order to do so, a legislative exemption must be expressed, and that the mere authority to lease does not imply the necessary exemption. The plaintiff in error is mistaken. The exemption need not be expressed. It may be implied, and a general authority to lease is sufficient to raise the implication. To hold otherwise it would have to be that the lessee company was not a lessee, but was a mere agent of the lessor; and, indeed, counsel for plaintiff in error would have it thought that such was the case. The statute, however, only authorizes the making of leases, not contracts of agency. The instruments authorized by it are designated as "leases," and when an agreement between two railroad companies is expressed in terms fit and apt to create the relation of lessor and lessee it will be held to be what the statute authorizes,—a lease. When a lease is made, what reason can exist for not attaching to it the ordinary common-law consequences of such contracts,—liability of the lessee to third persons for the negligent use of the leased premises, and nonliability of the lessor when no right of control over the lessee has been reserved? The demands of public policy are satisfied, and the rights of third persons secured by the imposition upon the lessee of all liability incident to the exercise of the franchise by it, and the demands of what the common law in such cases esteems to be just are likewise secured by exempting the lessor from liability. With the exception of the cases of Logan v. North Carolina R. Co. 116 N. C. 940, and Harmon v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 28 S. C. 401, all the authorities are opposed to the contention of plaintiff in error.

ties imposed upon the owner, and agreeing to defend all suits against it, which lease and assignment are ratified and confirmed and declared valid by statute, and all acts done thereunder declared legal, is not thereby exonerated from all responsibility to persons injured upon that part of the railroad which was leased, as such act, though a sanction to the contract, contains nothing by way of exoneration from the primary responsibility of the lessor. Braslin v. Somerville Horse R. Co. 145 Mass. 64.

So, a corporation chartered by Congress is a corporation of another state within the meaning of Mo. act March 24, 1870, providing that a corporation of that state leasing its road to a corporation of another state shall remain liable as if it operated the road itself. Smith v. Pacific R. Co. 61 Mo. 17.

But an action against a railroad company which had leased its road to a corporation of another state, for damages caused by the negligence of the employees of the lessee road, can only be maintained in Missouri under Rev. Stat. 1879, § 790, providing that the lessor company shall remain liable as if it operated the road itself, and in such case the negligence of the lessee company, and that the lessor company had leased its road to that company, must be alleged and proved. Main v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 Mo. App. 388.

3. Rule that general authority to lease is sufficient.

Upon the other hand, the authorities of a greater number of the states have adopted the rule that where there is express authority for a particular railroad to lease all its franchises to another company, or where there is general statutory authority by which railroad corporations may lease to other roads, a railroad may execute such a lease, and if made without the reservation of any control over the operation of the road by the lessee, it is exempt from liability for torts committed by the lessee. Von Steuben v. Central R. Co. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 153; Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 273; and see CARUTHERS v. KANSAS CITY, FT. S. & M. R. Co.

And that where one railroad company is authorized by law to contract or lease its road to another company, it is not responsible for the torts committed by the other company in the running of its trains or the management of the road. Lakin v. Willamette Valley & C. R. Co. 13 Or. 436, 57 Am. Rep. 25; Miller v. New 44 L. R. A.

York, L. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 118; Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 273.

But to absolve the lessor from liability the lease must be authorized by legislative authority. Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 40 Fed. Rep. 273.

Under this rule, the lease of a railroad under due authority of law, effects a transfer of rights and liabilities in its management, so that the corporation owning the railroad is discharged from responsibility for the lessee's torts. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Watts, 63 Tex. 549.

And where the state consents to the leasing of a railroad, the responsibility for the future management and operation of the road is exclusively imposed upon the lessee as the lawful substitute of the company owning the road, being liable for all its torts and contracts, though the lessor was not specially exempted. Arrow-smith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 165.

Thus, the owner of a railroad cannot be held liable for an injury to a brakeman on a train which is being operated by and under the control of another company under a contract giving it such management and control, where there is an express statute authorizing such agreement. Philips v. Northern R. Co. 62 Hun, 233.

A railroad company which has leased its road under due authority of law is not liable for injuries inflicted by the lessee company upon its own agents or servants in operating the road. Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Washington, 86 Va. 629, 7 L. R. A. 344.

And a contract between two railroad companies by which the railway of the one was leased to the other at a compensation of a certain per cent of the gross receipts under which the road was to be operated, and was in its movements to be under the control of the lessee company alone, does not render the lessor liable for an injury to a third person in the operation of the road, the lessee only being liable. Philips v. Northern R. Co. 62 Hun, 233.

And where, under legislative authority, one railroad company leases its road to another granting the exclusive control and possession, and the lessee, also under legislative authority, grants to another company which owns and operates a road at the place in question, the right to run its trains over such road, retaining the possession and control of the road, the first lessor is not liable for damages caused by sparks and fire thrown by passing engines into combustible material which was negligently permitted

The case of Heron v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 68 Minn. 542, is so instructive upon this question that we quote from it at length; "We shall consider first the liability of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, & Manitoba Railway Company. There is a conflict of authorities upon the question whether a company which leases its railroad to another company under authority of law is liable for the negligence of the lessee in operating the road under the lease. Some courts hold that the lessor is liable unless the statute which grants the right to lease expressly exempts the lessor from liability; that there can never be an exoneration from liability by implication; while others hold that the lessor is exonerated from liability for the negligence of the lessee in operating the road where the lease is authorized, although the statute authorizing it does not contain any express provision relieving it from liability. In our opinion, upon both principle and authority, the latter is the better doctrine. It is unnecessary to review the authorities on the subject, as most of them will be found collated in the text-books. See 2 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 467 et seq. The reasons in support of this position are well and forcibly stated by Judge Elliott, as follows: 'It must be assumed, that in granting the authority to execute a lease the legislature had in mind former statutes as well as the established rules of the common law. When power to execute a lease is conferred upon a corporation, the legislature must, in the absence of countervailing language, be deemed to intend to authorize the execution of such an instrument as the established law regards as a lease. The law enters as a silent factor into every contract, and hence of every lease it is an important element. The legal effect of a lease is to transfer for a prescribed period of time the possession and control of the property to the lessee. In authorizing the execution of a lease, the legislature grants the right to execute and carry into effect to accumulate and remain on the right of way. Heron v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 68 Minn. 542.

So, a railroad company is not responsible for the act of an engineer and fireman in running an engine which it has rented to a bridge company using it as a switch engine on a bridge used by several other railroad companies at a specified rental, besides the payment of the expenses of running it and the wages of the engineer and fireman, though they are carried on the pay-roll of the lessor railroad company. Nason v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 22 U. S. App. 220; Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 61 Fed. Rep. 605, 9 C. C. A. 666, 24 L. R. A. 693.

And a railroad company sued for failure to maintain proper cattle guards at designated points is entitled to defend on the ground that the road was in the hands of a lessee, though no pleading was filed by it. Denver, M. & A. R. Co. v. Cowgill, 44 Kan. 325.

And a contract between a domestic railroad corporation and a foreign railway corporation by which the foreign corporation was allowed to run its coal trains over the road of the domestic company, the domestic company to keep the tracks in order and furnish facilities for procuring water and fuel, is lawful under N. Y. Laws 1890, chap. 565, § 79, as amended by Laws 1893, chap. 434, providing that any railroad corporation or any corporation owning or operating a railroad within the state may contract with any other corporation for the use of their respective roads or routes, or any part thereof, and thereafter use the same in such manner and for such time as may be prescribed in such contract, and the lessor in such contract cannot be held liable for an injury inflicted upon a person by a train of the lessee company through the negligence of the persons in charge. Cain v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 27 App. Div. 376.

In the above case, Abbott v. Johnstown, G. & K. Horse R. Co. 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572, supra, II. a, was distinguished upon the ground that the point upon which that case turned was that the statute did not expressly authorize the railroad corporation to lease its railroad to an individual, and that therefore the company was without excuse for the negligent use by its lessee of its corporate right and privileges.

So, the fact that a locomotive engine from which fire was communicated to neighboring property was not among the specific property originally leased by the owner of the road to 44 L. R. A.

the lessee under whose operation the injury occurred, does not relieve the owner from liability therefor. Stearns v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 46 Mo. 117.

But although a railroad company may lease its road to, and allow it to be operated by, another company, thereby making itself responsible for acts done upon the road which is leased, neither company loses its identity, and where the two operate a continuous line, any tort committed by the one or the other on a part belonging to the one or the other should be so alleged and proved,—especially where both roads are constructed through territory of the same county. Central R. Co. v. Brinson, 64 Ga. 475.

4. Necessity of entire control by lessee.

A railroad company leasing its road and corporate franchises to another is exempt from liability for negligence in the operation of the road by the lessee if the lease was made under legislative authority and no control was reserved by the lessor, but, if the lessor continued even in partial control and management of its road, it would be liable. Sciavak v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 339. And see CARUTHERS v. KANSAS CITY, FT. S. & M. R. CO.

And a company owning a railroad upon which a personal injury is inflicted upon a passenger is not responsible therefor where another company has at the time the exclusive control and management of the road, and the locomotive by which the injury is done is being operated by the employees of the latter company. Harper v. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. 90 Ky. 359.

But where the owner of a railroad leases the same, and the lessee surrenders all control and custody over the cars and engines, and commits them to the exclusive charge of the lessor, responsibility for a negligent injury to a third person by running a train of cars over a hand-car on which he is riding will rest with the lessor and not with the lessee, notwithstanding that it owns the cars; but if the employees of both companies are engaged and co-operating in running the cars, and jointly controlling them, both the lessor and lessee will be liable. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Helsk. 347.

So, a railroad company, existing under a charter making railroad corporations liable for all damages sustained by any person in consequence of any neglect of any of their agents, and subjecting railroad corporations to liability for injuries occasioned by the negligence or carelessness of any person employed in conducting such an instrument as divests the lessor of possession and control, and places it in the lessee to the exclusion of the lessor. The possession of the one party is excluded, and that of the other is made complete, by legislative sanction. . . . It cannot be doubted that a statute conferring general authority to sell means a complete and effective sale, and upon the same principle it must be concluded that the power to lease, unless qualified and limited by statute, is a power to make a complete and effective lease. A complete and effective lease certainly vests the right of possession, control, and management in the lessee, since no other effect can be assigned such a lease without a direct and palpable violation of long and well-established principles of law. . . . In granting authority to lease, the legislature empowers the lessor company to transfer the duty of operating the road to the lessee, and in doing what the legislature authorizes no rule of public policy is violated. . . .

their trains, is not liable for an injury sustained by a passenger on a train on its road run by a lessee having the whole care, direction, and control of the road at the time of the injury, where the injury was caused by the misconduct and positive wrong of the agents and servants of the lessee as distinguished from negligence or carelessness. Mahoney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 68.

In the above case, Whitney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 44 Me. 367, infra, IX., and Stearns v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 46 Me. 117, supra, II. a, 2, were distinguished on the ground that the decisions in those cases were expressly placed upon the ground that the act of the legislature authorizing the lease did not exonerate the lessors from liabilities expressly imposed upon them by their charters or the statutes of the state.

And Langley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 10 Gray, 103, supra, II. b, was distinguished upon the ground that the lease in that case was executed without, while the lease in the present case was executed with, the sanction of legislative authority, and that while in that case one party alone undertook to change the contract, in this one both parties assented to the change.

So, a company owning a railroad which gives to another company the right to construct a track on the side of its roadbed for the purpose of forming a connection between the roads of the two companies, such connecting track passing over a bridge previously constructed by the lessee company over which foot passengers had been permitted to pass, is not liable in damages to one who passed over such bridge at night and fell through the same between the rails of the connecting track by reason of an imperfect covering, where the defect was created solely by the licensee company in the construction of such connecting track, and it had the sole ownership, control, possession, and use thereof, though the licensor company had a reversionary interest. Gwathney v. Little Miami R. Co. 12 Ohio St. 92.

And the questions whether an agreement between two railway companies by which one gives the other the right to lay its rails on the side of its roadbed, and to have the exclusive use of the same for the purpose of making connection between the roads belonging to the two companies, placed the construction and use of the connecting track under the sole control of the licensee company so as to relieve the licensor company from responsibility for a nuisance thereon, and whether that company in fact

The courts which assert the theory mentioned [that there must be an express exemption from liability in order to exonerate the lessor] tacitly assume that in granting authority to lease the legislature granted something less than an authority to lease. We believe that the only theory that can be defended on principle is that in granting authority to execute a lease the legislature conferred authority to execute an effective instrument, with all the qualities and incidents with which the law invests a lease. If this be true, then the lease does not transfer possession and control from the one party to the other for the term of the lease, and the rights and obligations of the parties are such, and such only, as the law annexes to the relation of lessor and lessee.' 2 Elliott, R. R. § 469. The learned author is speaking, as we understand him, solely with reference to negligence of the lessee in the operation of the road, and not attributable to a breach of any public duty of the lessor com-created the nuisance and had the sole possession and use of that track, are to be ascertained by the jury from the evidence. Ibid.

But where two railroad companies operate trains on the same track, one being the owner and the other the lessee, the liability of each under Iowa Laws 1862, chap. 169, for stock injured by its own trains is not affected by the fact that by the terms of the lease the lessor had the right to fix the timetable, and that the lessee's trains were operated in subrogation thereto, and the lessor was obliged to keep up repairs. Clary v. Iowa Midland R. Co. 37 Iowa, 344.

As to control by lessee, see also Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190, supra, III.

5. Limited to injuries in operation of road.

Under this rule, the lessor of a railroad which it was authorized to lease and over the management of which it had no control cannot be made liable for injuries resulting to individuals from the negligent management or operation of the railroad as distinguished from duties absolutely imposed by law upon the owner. Hayes v. Northern P. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 41, 74 Fed. Rep. 279, 20 C. C. A. 52.

An authorized lease without any exemption clause absolves the lessor from torts of the lessee resulting from the negligent operation and handling of its trains and the general management of the leased road over which the lessor could have no control; but for an injury resulting from the negligent omission of some duty owed to the public, such as the proper construction of its road, station houses, etc., the charter company cannot, in the absence of statutory exemption, discharge itself from legal responsibility. Nugent v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 62.

In the above case, Mahoney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 68, supra, II. d, 4, was distinguished upon the ground that there the injury complained of resulted solely from the wrongful act of the servant of the lessee who had sole control of the trains, and not, as here, from the wrong of the lessor in the original negligent construction of its depot.

A railroad company is not liable for the negligence of another company where the legislative authority to lease the road included by implication exemption from liability for negligence of the lessee operating the road, where it did not involve any breach of the public duties imposed upon the lessor by its charter or the pany; and we shall only add to what he has said that as to such acts, whether of omission or commission, there is no reason of public policy why the rights and obligations of the lessor and lessee should be held to be different from those which the law annexes to any other lease. We therefore hold that upon the facts alleged the St. Paul, Minneapolis, & Manitoba Railway Company is not liable, and its demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained." The court further says (68 Minn. 551, 552): "We start with the proposition that a railroad company is liable for the negligence of its lessees or licensees in the operation of its road, unless it is relieved therefrom by legislative exemption, express or implied. In case of a lease made with legislative authority, which gives the lessee the exclusive control and possession of the road, we have just held that such exemption is necessarily implied. The fact that the lease transfers to the lessee this control and possession, thus putting it out of the power of the lessor to interfere with or regulate the operation of the road, is an influential, if not the controlling, consideration for holding that this legislative exemption is implied." Wood, Railway Law, § 490, sums up the authorities thus: "But where the statute authorizes the lease the lessee assumes, during the existence of the lease, all the duties and obligations of the lessor, and from the time that it enters into possession of the road becomes solely liable for all injuries resulting from its management unless it is operating the road in the name of the lessor." Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 515b, says: "An authorized lease, however, not otherwise providing, will absolve the lessor from the torts of the lessee resulting from the negligent operation and handling of its trains, and the general management of the leased road over which the lessor has no control." 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 468, says: "As said in the preceding section, some of the cases make a distinction between negligence in the operation of the road and negligence in its construction, and adjudge that the lessor company is not liable for the negligence of the lessee in operating the road. The text-writers generally favor the doctrine that for negligence in operating the road the lessor is not liable." And in § 469: "Our opinion is that where the lease is executed under the provisions of a statute, in accordance with its require-general laws of the state. Heron v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 68 Minn. 542.

And a railroad company leasing its track to another company where the statute authorizes the lease is not responsible for injuries caused by torts of the lessee company if the injury resulted from negligence in the handling of trains or in the omission of any statutory duty connected with the management of the road, matters over which the lessor company could in the nature of things have no control. In such case the lessee being solely responsible; but where the injury results from the omission of some duty which the lessor itself owes to the public in the first instance, as something connected with the building of the road, the company assuming the franchises cannot devest itself of responsibility by leasing its track to another company though under legislative authority. St. Louis, W. & W. R. Co. v. Curl. 28 Kan. 622.

Thus, where one railroad company enters into an agreement with another giving the latter the right to lay its rails on the side of its roadbed, and to have the exclusive use of the same when laid for the purpose of making a connection with its road, the licensor or lessor company after having thus parted with the possession and control of its property for a lawful purpose cannot be made responsible for the improper manner in which the licensee or lessee company may have exercised its power of control over the premises, unless the contract contemplated, or its execution necessarily involved, the production of a nuisance. Gwathney v. Little Miami R. Co. 12 Ohio St. 92.

And a railroad company which has leased its road to another for a period of ninety-nine years, the road being managed and controlled exclusively by the latter, the former having entirely withdrawn from the operation of its business as a railroad company, is not liable for injuries sustained by a passenger on such road by reason of the wrongful and negligent acts of the lessee's servants. Fisher v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 34 Hun. 433.

In the above case, Abbott v. Johnstown, G. & K. Horae R. Co. 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572, supra, II. a, was distinguished upon the 44 L. R. A.

ground that in that case the lease was made to an individual, and was therefore held to be inoperative, while by chap. 218, Laws 1839, it was made lawful for any railroad corporation to lease to another railroad corporation.

And Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 445, 21 L. ed. 675, supra, II. b, was distinguished upon the ground that there it appeared that the persons in charge of and operating the railroad were still, as a matter of fact, in part at least, in the service of the company.

But trustees under a railroad mortgage for the benefit of bondholders, who, after entering into possession thereunder, leased the railroad to others, but under verbal agreement continued to operate the road for the lessees, and received the earnings, paid the expenses, selected, contracted with, and discharged the persons employed on the road, and exercised all the other powers usually exercised by railroad companies over their own roads, are personally responsible for any injury sustained by reason of the negligence of a person so employed. Ballou v. Far-num, 9 Allen, 47.

And while, if a railroad company should lease its entire road or an entire portion of its road to another company it would cease under the Missouri statute to be liable as a common carrier as to the whole or such portion. It cannot parcel out its business to agents and be a common carrier without the liabilities thereof, as in such case the doctrine would apply that the responsibility of a franchise with exclusive privileges cannot be escaped by delegating to others the power to transact a portion of the business. Speed v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 303.

6. Operation and charter duties distinguished.

Trespasses committed by employees of the lessee railroad company while putting in a new culvert in the railroad, the owner or lessor having no connection with or authority over such men, cannot be regarded as having been committed within the exercise of any of its franchises, and it is not liable therefor. Chicago, M. & N. R. Co. v. Eichman, 47 Ill. App. 156.

And where parties hire the use of cars from a railroad company to be employed in transport-ments, is made to a company having authority to accept it, and is made in good faith, and not for the purpose of transferring duties or obligations to an irresponsible party. The lessor company is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the lessee, and not attributable to a breach of any public duty of the company that executed the lease." Many cases cited by counsel for plaintiff in error are upon questions of liability of lessor companies for the negligent construction of the road, or the negligent maintenance of it when the duty of maintenance has not been assumed by the lessee. Of this class is the decision of this court in St. Louis, W. & W. R. Co. v. Curl, 28 Kan. 622. In that case the second subdivision of the syllabus reads thus: "In case of a lease of a railway track, a distinction exists as to the liability of the lessor and lessee company between those cases in which the liability arises from the omission of some duty in the construction of the road and those which arise from negligence or the omission of some duty in the handling of trains and the management of the road." Justice Brewer delivered the opinion, and said (pp. 623, 624) as follows: "Defendant contends that, where the statute authorizes the lease by one railway company to another of its track, the lessor company is not responsible for injuries caused by the torts of the lessee company, and in support of that doctrine cites some authorities. To a certain extent this proposition is true. If the injury results from negligence in the handling of trains, or in the omission of any statutory duty connected with the management of the road, matters in respect to which the lessor company could, in the nature of things, have no control, then the lessee company will alone be responsible; but when the injury results from the omission of some duty which the lessor itself owes to the public in the first instance,—something connected with the building of the road,—then we think the company assuming the franchise cannot divest itself of responsibility by leasing its track to some other company."

We are entirely satisfied that the judgment of the court below was right, and it is therefore affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

tation of freight to be laden as the hirers choose, the company does not incur any risk with reference to the mode adopted in loading them. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 20 Ill. 623, 71 Am. Dec. 291.

And the killing of a conductor while endeavoring to make a coupling between the engine under his control and a train in its front, caused by a defect in the engine, is not a wrong for which an action may be maintained against the owner of the road, where the road was leased, and such conductor was in the employ of the lessee, and the engine was furnished by it. East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Culberson, 72 Tex. 375, 3 L. R. A. 567.

So, no duty rests upon a railroad company to keep in repair or well-lighted a passage to premises owned by it contiguous to its road, which are leased by it to be used as a railway eating house, such duty resting upon the lessee and not the lessor; and the lessor is not liable to a person injured by a failure to perform such duty. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mangum, 68 Tex. 342.

And the lessor of a railroad cannot be made liable for damages for the negligence or torts of the lessee in constructing and maintaining an embankment on the road, where the lease was valid and the lessee was in possession, because it was bound, under the lease, to issue to the lessee its bonds for the cost of any work chargeable to construction, where the work was nevertheless the work of the lessee, and it did it in its own way, the lessor having no control. Miller v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 118.

So, an employee of a lessee of a railroad cannot hold the lessor thereof responsible for an injury received while coupling cars, due to the fact that a platform for the purpose of loading lumber had been permitted to be constructed, which was so near the railroad track that it did not permit of a man standing between the platform and the track while a train was passing. Evans v. Sabine & E. T. R. Co. (Tex.) 18 S. W. 493.

And where a lessee of a railroad under a valid lease fills in a trestle, making a high embankment so near the lands of an abutting owner that, in times of rains and melting snow, sand and earth are washed down and flow upon such abutting land, causing damage thereto, the lessor is not liable therefor though it originally constructed the trestle and was chargeable under the lease with the cost of the embankment. Miller v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 118.

And a railroad company owning a line of railway, which constructs a bridge thereon of sufficient height to permit of its operation with ordinary cars in the usual way, and leases the same, is not liable to an employee of the lessee who is injured while in the discharge of his duties in the ordinary way, by reason of his employer receiving into its train a car of peculiar construction and unusual height, and failing to give notice thereof to the trainmen. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 289.

But raising the track of a railroad to such an extent as to cause an overflow of water upon adjacent premises, and throwing dirt upon such premises, or requiring a retaining wall to be built to prevent ground from the railroad from sliding down upon adjacent lands, is in the nature of a nuisance for which all persons are liable who create or continue the same; and where a change of grade is made by a railroad company while operating its road, and it afterwards leases it to another company which raises the grade still higher, they are jointly liable for permanent injuries to property thereby caused, and such liability is not limited to the injury after the lease, where in its nature it could not be separated from that accruing before it, though as to injury resulting from the raised track before the lease the lessor alone would be liable. Little Miami R. Co. v. Hambleton, 40 Ohio St. 406.

So, a railroad company is liable after notice to abate, for damages resulting from the continuance upon its right of way of a nuisance placed there by a former company of the same name while it had possession under a lease from the state, and the fact that the nuisance in question was created in an effort to abate another nuisance causing similar damages of which complaint had been made is of no effect. Western & A. R. Co. v. Cox, 93 Ga. 561.

And a town which has been obliged to pay damages to a person injured by a nuisance maintained upon a railroad where the railroad ran along a highway may look for its indemnity to the railroad company which originally altered the highway, thus creating the nuisance, though the injury occurred after that company had leased its road to another company and while the lessees were operating it under a contract devolving upon them, as between themselves and the first company, the duties and obligations of the first company. Hamden v. New Haven & N. Co. 27 Conn. 165.

So, a chartered railroad company permitting another company to run trains over its railroad and thus to use its franchise is liable to a passenger upon one of such trains for a personal injury sustained by him by reason of a derailment resulting from negligence in failing to have and maintain a safe track. Central E. & Bkg. Co. v. Philazee, 93 Ga. 488.

And the lessor of a railroad which is leased under statutory authority containing no provision exempting the lessor from liability remains liable for an injury resulting from defective appliances furnished by the operating company. Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 97, 38 L. R. A. 71.

And a railroad company whose railroad is connected with another road by means of a switch is liable for an injury sustained by a passenger in its cars due to careless management of the switch, it being a part of its road over which it must necessarily carry all its passengers, although it was provided for and attended by a servant of the other road at the latter's expense. McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794.

And a depot company which constructs a railroad track under a contract by which it is to be used as terminal facilities for another road, the grounds and tracks to be used by different roads, cannot by its lease or a transfer of its franchises rid itself of its liability for the improper use of such road, and a person injured thereon is entitled to recover from the depot company, and of the lessee railroad company acting under such agreement, the damage sustained. A. Backus Jr. & Sons v. Detroit W. Transit & Junction R. Co. 71 Mich. 645.

So, a railroad company cannot devote itself of responsibility for injuries resulting from an omission to construct and place sufficient cattle guards upon its tracks before it uses them or permits anyone else to use them, and it remains responsible though the injury is caused by the trains of the lessee. St. Louis, W. & W. R. Co. v. Curl, 28 Kan. 622.

And legislative consent to the leasing of a railroad under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 790, which will release the lessor from liability for negligence of the lessee, will not release it from liability for its own negligence; and where it permits salt to remain upon its tracks, which attracts stock upon the track, where it is killed, it will be held liable. Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 394.

In the above case, Main v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 Mo. App. 388, supra, II. d, 2, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the effort was to make the lessor liable for the negligence of the lessee.

And in Richardson v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 486, 33 L. T. N. S. 248, which was an action against a railway company for negligence in allowing a defective truck to be used on its line, causing a collision with a passenger train, in consequence of which a passenger sustained an injury, the truck in question belonging to a wagon company whose duty it was to keep it in repair, it was held that although it might not have been the duty of the railroad company itself to cause the truck to be 44 L. R. A.

properly examined and prepared previous to its breakdown, it was somebody's duty to do it, and the railroad company was guilty of culpable negligence in not satisfying itself that a proper examination had taken place before it allowed it to proceed. But this was reversed in L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 342, 24 Week. Rep. 907, upon the ground that there must be some limit to the amount of examination required.

So, while a lessor railroad company is not liable for the mere neglect of its lessee in running its trains causing temporary injury, where the construction and operation of the road are an invasion of, or an appropriation of, a right of property without the owner's consent, he has a clear right to recover damages by way of compensation for the unlawful appropriation. Stickley v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 93 Ky. 323.

And a railroad company which enters upon and appropriates the land of another to its own use without right cannot transfer its corporate privileges to another so as to justify a continuance of the wrong by the vendee or lessee as if the latter were an innocent purchaser. Ibid.

But a failure of the lessee of a railroad to run cars for the transportation of freight and passengers over a portion of the road must not only be an intentional, but a wilful, violation of the charter in order to render the violator amenable to a proceeding in quo warranto for the purpose of depriving the owner of its charter rights. Atty. Gen. v. Erie & K. R. Co. 55 Mich. 15.

III. Under running privileges or arrangements.

The same principles seem to govern the liability of the owner of a railroad for injuries thereon by a company or person having running privileges or arrangements over its road as apply in case of leases of railroads, and something of the same conflict is found among the cases.

Thus, the rule has been laid down that a railroad company holding the franchise and exclusive right to operate a railroad must so use it as not to endanger passengers or property whether the use be by itself or others whom it may permit to use the road, and if it permits another company to run its trains on and over its track, and injuries grow out of the negligent use of the road thus authorized, the company owning the road and franchises will be liable therefor. Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Lane, 83 Ill. 448.

And that a railroad company permitting another railroad company to use its track in running its own trains over the consenting company's road, and thus exercising the franchises of the latter, remains liable for the consequences of mismanagement to the same extent as it would be for such mismanagement of its own servants in running its own trains. Sellers v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 94 N. C. 654; Aycock v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 89 N. C. 321; Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678.

And that a railway company furnishing a track for other companies to run cars upon is responsible for the negligence of both or either of the other companies, as well as its own. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 59 Ill. App. 69.

Within this rule, a railroad company cannot escape liability for injuries occasioned by arrangements with other roads to which it assents, by which the safety of passengers is jeopardized, and an arrangement between several companies, by which all are to use the same track, will not relieve the owner of the track from responsibility for an injury done by one of the other companies to a passenger, though a tribunal consisting of the directors of all the roads had been established for the joint management. Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 730.

And a railroad company owning a railroad upon which animals are killed in its operation is not relieved from liability therefor by the fact that the killing was directly caused by an engine operated thereon by another railroad company with its consent or permission, and that such injury was not caused by the wilful acts of the servants of the owner. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Rumbold, 40 Ill. 143.

And a railroad company over whose road another company has a running privilege authorized by statute to be paid for by part of the traffic receipts is liable to a passenger on a train of the latter company on the road of the former company for an injury caused by the negligence of a porter at a platform devoted exclusively to the traffic of the licensee company. Self v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. 42 L. T. N. S. 173, 44 J. P. 344.

So, a railroad company which allows the trains of another chartered company to use its depot and run over a short section of its track for the purpose of approaching and leaving the depot must protect its own passengers, who are themselves not out of place, against injury from the trains of such other company. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Perry, 58 Ga. 461.

And where a mortgage is made upon a railroad and the mortgagees take possession under it for breach of condition, they stand in the place of the corporation, and are vested with its rights and subject to the liabilities incidental to the exercise of the franchise and the operation of the road; and where they permit another corporation to run an engine upon such road they are liable for damages by fire from such engine to the same extent as the corporation itself would have been if no mortgage had been made. Daniels v. Hart, 118 Mass. 543.

And the owner of a railroad over which by license or permission another company runs an engine belonging to itself without being an assignee or lessee of the former company is liable for a cow killed by such engine, where the injury occurred, not from any negligence in running it, but in consequence of the omission to inclose the road with a lawful fence to prevent animals from going thereon. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Ewing, 23 Kan. 273.

And a railroad company is liable for injuries from fire thrown by a locomotive of another company which it permitted to be run on its road without any spark arrester, where its defective condition was known to the train despatcher of the owner of the road, who exercised no supervision over it. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Salmon, 39 N. J. L. 299, 23 Am. Rep. 214.

Nor does the fact that the lease of a railroad provided that the officers of the lessee should prescribe the rules for and direct the running of the trains in any way change the character and effect of a contract between the companies to the effect that they should operate the road jointly and have equal rights thereon, and that each company should pay and settle all claims for injuries committed by its trains and servants in the management of the railroad, including damages for the killing of stock. Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190.

And where a railroad company owns a road upon which it was running a car in which a passenger was killed by a collision, it is liable for such death, although the collision was caused by the fault of persons in charge of another train run by its permission by another company on the same road. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Barron, 5 Wall. 90, 18 L. ed. 591.

And a transit company with which a railroad 44 L. R. A.

company has an arrangement for the hauling of its cars over a bridge and through a tunnel to its final destination, the transit company furnishing the motive power, is the agent of the railroad company so as to render the railroad company responsible for an injury to a passenger who held a ticket to its final destination, though the injury was caused by the negligence or unskillfulness of the transit company furnishing such motive power. Keep v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 454.

Where one has received an injury at the hands of two or more wrongdoers, all, however numerous, are severally liable to him for the full amount of the damage occasioned by such injury, and he has an option to sue all jointly or bring his separate action against each; and where a passenger on a railway train receives an injury through the mutual negligence of the servants of the company on whose train he is traveling, and those of another company using the same road, from a collision between the trains of the two companies, an action may be brought against either company, and the person injured is not restricted to an action against the company on whose train he travels. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 364, 44 Am. Rep. 791.

It has been held, however, that a railroad company by giving permission to another railroad company to use a part of its track does not thereby bind itself to make its track safe or to put it in repair, or to make any change in its existing state, and does not place itself under any duty to the passengers of the other company, the claim of such passengers for injury being upon the company with whom they contract. Murch v. Concord R. Corp. 29 N. H. 9, 61 Am. Dec. 631.

And the rule has been laid down, upon the other hand, that where a railroad company allows the trains of another company to use its depot and run over a section of its track for the purpose of approaching and leaving the depot, and a passenger is injured by reason of his own want of promptitude in boarding a train of the licensee company, whose passenger he is, the licensor company is not liable for any negligence which is exclusively the negligence of the other company. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Perry, 58 Ga. 461.

So, where one company by agreement or otherwise has a right to run its trains over the roads of another company, the servants of the former company may maintain an action against the company owning the road for an injury occasioned by the improper and negligent management of a switch which it was the duty of the latter company to keep in the proper place. Re Merrill, 54 Vt. 200; Sawyer v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 370.

And where a company owning a railroad track gives to another company permission to run its cars over it, in the absence of any legal arrangement varying the rule, the owner must be held to the exercise of ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of bridges along the track for the protection of the servants of the leasing company, as well as its own. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 289.

And a person in the general employment of a railroad company, his duty being to attend to the switches and couple and uncouple its cars together with those of another company at a station where they use a common track, whose wages are paid by both companies though he receives them from the former, who is injured while coupling cars for the latter, is the latter's servant so as to be able to maintain an action against it for such injuries if caused by its negligence. Vary v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 240.

But where two or more charter railway companies whose lines terminate at the same point use in common a track belonging to one of them, the owner thereof is not responsible to its employees for personal injuries sustained solely by reason of the negligent use of the track by the employees of another company, the redress being, in such case, against the company whose employees are in fault. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Friddell, 79 Ga. 439.

In the above case, Coggin v. Central R. Co. 62 Ga. 685, 35 Am. Rep. 132, infra, IV., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the negligence was by an employee of the proprietary company, and the injury was to the employee of a telegraph company; and Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 478, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the negligent company was using the franchise as well as the track of the proprietary company; and Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Perry, 58 Ga. 461, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the injury was to a passenger.

So, there is no variance in an action for a personal injury, between an allegation that the defendant was in use of the road on which the injury occurred, and that the person having charge of the switch was in its employment and under its direction and control, and proof that under an agreement with the defendant company another company was permitted to run its trains upon such road, and that while the plaintiff was conducting a train over the road the engine and cars were diverted from the track by the negligence of the defendant's servants placed in charge of the switch which caused the injury complained of, the object of the averment being to show that the plaintiff was lawfully on the road at the time of the injury. Sawyer v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 370.

Under the Iowa statute, where a railroad company has the privilege of running its trains over the tracks of another company and an injury is caused by the operation of the road, the company which causes the injury is the party liable to respond in damages therefor without reference to which owned and constructed the road. Clary v. Iowa Midland R. Co. 37 Iowa, 344; Stephens v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 30 Iowa, 527.

IV. Under contracts for construction or otherwise.

A railroad company which permits a construction company to exercise its franchise of running cars over its road is liable for any injury done, to the same extent as though it itself had run such cars. Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Liddell, 85 Ga. 482; Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105.

The principle of law releasing an owner from liability for acts performed by an independent contractor has no application where an injury is sustained from a neglect of duty created by law, which duty exists irrespective of any contract, or where the contract is merely introductory. Sawyer v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 370.

And where a railroad company enters into a contract with another railroad company to build and construct its road, and such other company operates and runs trains over the road so far as it has been constructed for purposes of general traffic, the owner is responsible for torts committed by it in the operation of its trains thereon, whether it was allowed the privilege of using such road, or the privilege of operating it arose out of some consideration of the contract 44 L. R. A.

to build and construct. Iakin v. Willamette Valley & C. R. Co. 13 Or. 436, 57 Am. Rep. 25.

In the above case, Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that there the trains under the contract of the contractor were not being used for the purpose of traffic, but for the purpose of construction, when the injury occurred.

So, a railroad company which contracts with an individual to move its cars to the various consignees by horse power and bring them back empty to the yard, the contractor employing the teams and men and exercising an independent control over them, is not thereby relieved from responsibility for the negligent acts of such contractor in the moving of such cars, whereby a person is hurt. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Hahn (Pa.) 12 Atl. 479.

And the fact that an engine killing stock was in use for traffic at the time under an agreement, instead of being employed in construction of the road under a contract therefor with the owner of the road, will not affect the position of the contractor as an agent for the owner, or the liability of the owner for the damage. Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

And a railroad company on whose track a person was injured by the negligent management of a car cannot relieve itself from liability therefor upon the ground that the car was not being operated by it but by a construction company with which it had a contract for an electrical equipment of its railroad, where the car in question was a passenger car which was being operated for profit. Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 46.

In the above case Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the passenger was carried by a construction train operated by independent contractors for the building of the road, without the knowledge of the railroad company and against its express prohibition.

So, one who makes a contract by which he is to take entire charge of the freight business of a railroad company at a station, loading and unloading the cars, handling them, and making up the trains, and doing all other yard service necessary to the transaction of the freight business, and having control over the grounds, yards, buildings, engines, and cars at that station, for which he is to be paid at a designated rate per ton for freight received or delivered and per car hauled, the business to be done under the railroad company's superintendent and to his satisfaction, stands in the relation of a servant to the railroad company so as to render the company liable for his acts, and not in the relation of an independent contractor. Sped v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 303.

And a railroad engineer in the employ of the owner of the road remains its servant while in its pay and liable to be discharged by it, though he is temporarily subjected to the orders of a telegraph company while engaged solely in transporting materials for such telegraph company with a force of attendants employed by it, and will be required to observe the general law of diligence applicable to his vocation except as to acts and omissions dictated by express orders, and his failure to do so will be negligence imputable to the railroad company, which will be liable for a personal injury resulting therefrom to one of the force of attendants employed by the telegraph company. Coggin v. Central R. Co. 62 Ga. 685, 35 Am. Rep. 132.

But as between a railroad company and the servant of a telegraph company which was under contract with the railroad company by which the railroad company was to transport the materials used and men engaged in the construction and repair of a telegraph line, such servant of the telegraph company will be deemed to have taken all risks whatsoever not occasioned by negligence imputable to the railroad company, but none that arose from such negligence. Ibid.

And in establishing the liability of the owner of a railroad for damages caused in its operation, the question whether the parties doing the damage were running the train over the railroad under contract with it or by its permission and consent is immaterial. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654.

In City & Suburban R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 348, however, it was held that the mere fact that a railroad company owned the track on which an engine was being run in performance of a contract would not make it liable for injuries caused by such engine, as it would not be connected with the act causing the injury; but this seems to be a case of an independent contractor rather than of a lessee.

And the fact that a railroad company has leased its line, and that a person was injured thereon by the negligent operation of its trains, does not render the railroad company liable for such injury, where the person injured was not in the employ of either the lessor or lessee, but was working for an independent contractor who was building a fence for the lessor for a certain sum per mile. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Gartelzer, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 456.

So, where a shipper by consent of a railroad company undertakes with the help of his own employees alone to run cars down a grade to the place where they are intended for loading, and while so employed one of such employees is injured by the negligence of his coemployees, the railroad company is not liable to an action for damages on account of such injuries. Hanna v. Chattanooga & N. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 313, 6 L. R. A. 727.

And a railroad company is not liable in damages for alleged negligent management of one of its trains used and controlled by an independent contractor for construction purposes on a portion of the road built under the construction contract and not yet surrendered to the company. Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632.

And a railroad company whose road was in the possession of an improvement company having authority under its incorporation to construct and equip the road will not be held responsible for wrongful acts or omissions of the employees of such improvement company because it ran trains and carried passengers and freight where the road was not leased to be operated for general traffic, and the charge was not based upon the theory that the improvement company was operating the road in its own name for the use and benefit of the railroad company merely to relieve the latter from responsibility. Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 84.

See also Huey v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 45 Ind. 320, supra, VIII.

V. Under ineffectual attempt to consolidate.

A railroad company is liable for injury sustained by a person through the negligence of persons operating its road under an attempted consolidation which was illegal and ineffectual. Latham v. Boston, H. T. & W. R. Co. 38 Hun, 265.

VI. Occupation must be authorized.

The rule that a railroad company permitting another company to use its track remains liable for the consequences of mismanagement in such use to the same extent as though its own 44 L. R. A.

agents and servants were using it does not apply to a case in which the owner of the railroad allowed another company to use its track for a short distance to get to a station, and some cars of the road became detached from a train and ran in on the licensor's road, in consequence of which an accident occurred, such cars running at random, and being under no control, and the accident happening at a place where the licensee company had no authority or license to go, even in a lawful manner. Sellers v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 94 N. C. 634.

In cases of injury inflicted by the lessee of a railway, however, no other negligence need be alleged or proved to fix the liability of the owner than that of the company or corporation permitted or authorized by the owner to use the railroad. Ibid.

But an allegation in an action against the lessor of a railroad for damages caused by its operation, that such lessor was a corporation owning and using the railroad tracks in question on which the defendant and other railroads ran their cars, the defendant having control and occupation of the tracks, is not subject to objection on a motion in arrest of judgment; as, for aught that appears, the company by which the damage was done might have been a trespasser upon the defendant's road. Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654.

See also East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Culbertson, 72 Tex. 375, 3 L. R. A. 567, supra.

VII. Injuries to employees.

See also Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Washington (Va.) 7 L. R. A. 344.

The same principle seems to have been adopted where the injury is to an employee of one of the companies as when it is to a third person.

Thus, a railroad company by accepting its charter assumes the obligation to keep its tracks in safe condition for the operation of its trains over them, and this duty is due to all persons who are permitted by it to travel upon or operate trains over it, including employees of a lessee. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Daniels, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 253.

And the lessor of a railroad is liable to an employee of its lessee who is injured by the imperfect construction and maintenance of the rails and tracks. Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 97, 38 L. R. A. 71.

And a railroad company which has leased its road is liable for an injury to a person caused by a defective side track belonging to it, although at the time of the accident he was acting as a brakeman of the lessee company on a train operated by it. Trinity & S. R. Co. v. Lane, 79 Tex. 643.

So, a railroad company over a section of whose track another company had a contract for the running of its trains is liable in tort to the latter's brakeman, who without the fault of himself or his coemployees receives a personal injury while in the performance of his duty on his employer's train, solely by reason of the negligent construction of the former's depot. Nugent v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 62.

Agreements between several railroad companies having connecting lines of railroads have no effect upon the rights of strangers to the agreement, and do not make the employees of one company the coemployees of the employees of the other so as to bar a recovery by an employee of the one for an injury arising from the negligence of an employee of the other. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. State, Bitzer, 58 Md. 372.

The rule that every employee assumes the risk of the negligence of his coemployees does not apply in case of an injury to an employee of a railroad company occurring on the road of another railroad company upon which it had running arrangements, caused by the imperfect condition of the road. Id.

And the fact that a trainman and switchman by whose negligence the trainman was injured were both under the exclusive control of the railroad company owning the road does not make them fellow servants so as to relieve the company from liability for the injury where the switchman was in the employ of the company and the trainman was in the employment of another company having the right to use the track of the former company for the purpose of transporting coal thereon, under an arrangement that the track should be kept in running order by the owner, the business of each company being entirely separate. Tierney v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 85 Hun, 146.

And the owner of a railroad yard and tracks, though it has rented them and given complete possession and control thereof to the receiver of another railroad company in consideration of a stipulated rental and an undertaking by the company to do certain switching, is not relieved thereby from its duty to keep the tracks in a safe condition. And in case of a negligent failure on its part to do so a breach of the duty which it owes the lessee company and its employees is committed, which will render it liable to the widow of an employee who lost his life as a result of such negligence. Rome R. Co. v. Thompson, 101 Ga. 26.

So, a variance between an averment in an action against a railway company for negligence that the plaintiff was an employee of the railroad company and proof that he was employed by its lessee and injured through the lessor's negligent construction of the road is immaterial. Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 97, 38 L. R. A. 71.

And proof in an action for personal injury that the person injured was in the employment of and acting for another corporation which was operating the railroad under a lease is admissible therein under a general denial. Baxter v. New York, T. & M. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 1002.

And in Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Peyton, 106 Ill. 534, 46 Am. Rep. 705, which was an action for a personal injury to a third person caused by the negligent act of the yard master of the lessor which was brought against the lessee, the court declined to say whether the lessor was also liable, but said that if it was, the person injured would have her option to sue either.

But a company owning a railroad is not liable to the servant of a company using it, in the absence of a special agreement, for any injury caused by the negligence of the latter company or of its servants. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 289.

And an employee of a railroad company who in his contract of employment assumed all risk incident to his employment cannot claim that he was injured on the road of another company for the purpose of avoiding his agreement, and at the same time seek to make his employer liable for the injury. Galloway v. Western & A. R. Co. 57 Ga. 512.

An instruction in an action by an employee of the lessee of a railroad for an injury caused by its negligent operation, that if the owner and lessee were under a joint duty to keep the track in repair the plaintiff could not recover, is not erroneous as against the railroad company. Rome R. Co. v. Thompson, 101 Ga. 26.

And an engineer in the employ of the owner of a railroad, who receives an injury from a collision with a train of another company using 44 L. R. A.

a part of the road under a lease from the owner through the negligence of the lessee, cannot recover damages from the owner of the road, as the negligence of the employees of the lessee is not one of the hazards against which it must be presumed he contracted. Clark v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 92 Ill. 43.

So, a railroad company is not bound to answer in damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by a coemployee, where the person injured was a track hand and servant of an individual lessee on the road, and not of the railroad company itself, and the injury was caused by one likewise in the service of the individual lessee. Jones v. Georgia Southern R. Co. 66 Ga. 558.

And a railroad company is not liable for an injury received on its road by a brakeman in the service of another railroad company, where it was caused by the negligence of his fellow servant on a train owned and operated by their employer. Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. Paul, 143 Ind. 23, 28 L. R. A. 216.

In the above case Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678, supra, III., was distinguished upon the ground that there the president of the railroad company was also a member of a construction company engaged in constructing the road and having possession and running its trains thereon for that purpose, and that at the time of the injury the person injured was acting under his special directions, and was therefore a servant of the company.

So, a servant or employee of a railroad company operating a road belonging to another company without authority cannot recover of the owner damages for personal injuries resulting to him in the course of his employment through the negligence of his employer or of its officers or agents. East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Culherson, 72 Tex. 375, 3 L. R. A. 567.

The duty owing from the lessee of a railroad to its employees is one which arises wholly from contract, and is not imposed by the charter of incorporation of the railroad, and the lessor company is not obliged to employ as a servant any particular members of the public, and a person entering the services of the lessee company therefore acquires no right against the lessor, except by virtue of the terms of the employment, and cannot recover of the lessor for injuries sustained by the negligence of the lessee in the operation of the road, his sole remedy being against the lessee. Hukill v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 72 Fed. Rep. 745.

And the provisions against leasing a franchise so as to relieve it or property held under it from liability of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, made by Cal. Const. art. 12, § 10, does not give an employee of the lessee of a railroad a right of action against the lessor company upon the conviction that it is his employer, but merely enables him to enforce his judgment based on the negligence of his employer against the property. Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 97, 38 L. R. A. 71.

As to injuries to employees, see also Vary v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. 42 Iowa. 246; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Fridell, 79 Ga. 489; Sawyer v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 370; Re Merrill, 54 Vt. 200; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Moore, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 289, supra, III., and Coggin v. Central R. Co. 62 Ga. 685; Hanna v. Chattanooga & N. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 313, 6 L. R. A. 727, supra, IV.

VIII. Provisions for joint liability.

The owner of a railroad is liable, under Ind. Sess. Laws 1863, p. 24, providing that the lessee of a railroad shall be jointly and severally liable with the lessor for injuries to stock thereon occasioned by trains of the lessee when such lessee uses the road in the corporate name of the company which owns it, where animals are killed by the trains of another corporation running in its own name and in its own behalf and under its control, over a part of the track of the owner under a contract for that purpose between the two corporations. Indianapolis & M. R. Co. v. Solomon, 23 Ind. 534.

And Ind. act March 4, 1863 (3 Ind. Stat. 413), making the company owning a railroad jointly and severally liable with the lessees and assignees, receivers and other persons running or controlling it for stock killed or injured, includes contractors, and it is no defense in an action to recover for stock killed that the injury was done by the train of another company which was in the exclusive use and protection of contractors for the construction of the road, who had not completed the same. Huey v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 45 Ind. 320.

And 3 Ind. Stat. 413, § 1, providing that lessees, assignees, receivers, and other persons running or controlling any railroad in the corporate name of such company shall be liable jointly and severally with such company for stock killed or injured by the locomotives, cars, or other carriages of such company, renders the company owning the road liable without reference to the company or person who may have been running the locomotives, cars, etc., and such company may be sued alone. Fort Wayne, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hinebaugh, 48 Ind. 354.

But a railroad whose road is operated by a lessee is not liable for stock killed or injured under Ind. act March 4, 1863, providing that when a road is run or controlled by a lessee thereof in the corporate name of the owner, the lessees should be liable jointly and severally with such owner, where the lessee leased it in his own name. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bolner, 57 Ind. 572; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hannon, 60 Ind. 417; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Currant, 61 Ind. 88.

And under the Indiana statute an animal killed or injured by a railroad train run by a lessee must have been struck by some part of the train by which it is claimed that it was killed or injured, to render the lessor and lessee jointly liable for its value. And where the evidence shows that two animals were tied together, and one was struck and killed and the other one injured by being dragged, the owner of the animal is not entitled to recover in a joint action for the animal which was not struck. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Downey, 61 Ind. 287.

And in order to make a railroad company by whose train stock is killed jointly and severally responsible therefor with the owner of the road, under 3 Ind. Stat. 413, § 1, it must have been running or controlling the road of that company in the corporate name of such company either as lessee, receiver, or otherwise, and where the complaint in an action for such injury contains no allegation to that effect, it shows no cause of action against the lessee. Cincinnati & M. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Ind. 38; Cincinnati & M. R. Co. v. Perkins, 36 Ind. 380.

So, a complaint in an action for killing or injuring stock under Ind. act March 4, 1863, providing that assignees, receivers, and other persons running or controlling any railroad in the corporate name of such company shall be liable jointly and severally with such company, for stock killed or injured by the locomotives, cars, or other carriages of such company, is insufficient where it fails to show that the railroad company by its agents and employees had anything whatever to do with the killing of the stock, or that the locomotive doing it belonged to such company. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hannon, 60 Ind. 417.

And a complaint in a joint action under the Indiana statute against one railroad company as the owner and another as the lessee of a railroad, to recover for stock alleged to have been killed by the cars of the latter on such road, must, to be sufficient as to the lessee, allege that the lessee was running such railroad in the name of the owner. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Downey, 61 Ind. 287.

In the above case, Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Warner, 35 Ind. 515, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the complaint did not show the relation of the two companies.

And evidence that at the time of an injury to stock the railroad upon which it was injured was being run by a lessee in its own name, is admissible in an action against the railroad company for damages for such injury commenced before a justice of the peace. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bolner, 57 Ind. 572.

So, in North Carolina a railroad company leasing its road is answerable jointly with the lessee company operating the road for injuries due to the negligence of the latter. Tillett v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1031.

And Ohio Rev. Stat. § 3305, declaring that notwithstanding a lease to a foreign corporation by a railroad company of the state, the lessor shall remain liable as if it operated the road itself, and both the lessor and the lessee shall be jointly liable upon all rights of action accruing to any person for any negligence or default growing out of the operation and maintenance of such road, applies to leases previously made as well as to those to be made in the future, and is not unconstitutional as impairing rights under the contract of lease. Fisher v. Baltimore & O. & C. O. R. Cos. 3 Ohio N. P. 283.

IX. Effect of lease or other contract upon failure of duty to fence.

The duty to fence a railroad right of way is largely, if not entirely, a statutory one, and under most of the statutes it is deemed to rest with the owner of the road, and any liability arising from a failure to perform such duty rests upon such owner.

Thus, if a railroad company either owns or operates a railroad it is liable for live stock killed unless its track is fenced, under the Washington statute, and the owner of the road is liable as such, though it had previously leased it to some other company. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Dacres, 1 Wash. 195; Whitney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 44 Me. 362, 69 Am. Dec. 103.

And the owner of a railroad under a charter requiring it in general terms to fence its road upon both sides where a fence may be requisite is liable to a person whose cow is killed through neglect to fence the road, though the road was being run by another company under a long lease. Nelson v. Vermont & C. R. Co. 26 Vt. 717, 62 Am. Dec. 614.

And a railroad company operating the road of another company under a contract for its construction is the agent of the owner so that such owner will be liable for its negligent acts, within the meaning of Mich. Laws 1867, § 43, imposing the duty to maintain fences along the line of the road upon the owners and occupants respectively. Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

So, a railroad company leasing its road may be held responsible for damages caused by a defective or broken-down fence while the road was being operated by another, though the evidence was sufficient to authorize a finding that a lease existed. Price v. Barnard, 65 Mo. App. 649.

And the duty of a railroad company to keep its right of way fenced devolves under the California statute providing that it shall be the duty of the railroad company to make and maintain a good and sufficient fence, and that it shall be liable for stock killed in case of its failure to do so, upon the owner of the road, and such owner cannot relieve itself from liability for cattle killed because of a failure to maintain a proper fence, by pleading that it had leased the road, and that the cattle were killed by the trains of the lessee. Fontaine v. Southern P. R. Co. 54 Cal. 645.

And the fact that a railroad was incomplete, and that the railroad company permitted a contractor to run a construction train over it, will not absolve the company from liability for the killing of a cow by such construction train, though it was operated and controlled by the contractor, where the road was not inclosed by a lawful fence in accordance with the statute, casting the liability upon the company for cattle killed or injured by the engine or cars on its railway. Wichita & C. B. Co. v. Gibbs, 47 Kan. 274.

And in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Morrow, 32 Kan. 217, it was said to be always the duty of a railroad company operating a railroad to see that proper cattle guards exist wherever its railroad enters or leaves improved or fenced land, whether such railway company owns the railroad or is simply operating it under a lease; but this was an action brought against the lessee.

So, a railroad company owning a road will be held responsible to third persons under the Illinois statute requiring railroads to fence their roads, for such damages as are incurred, where it operates its road itself or allows others to do so without fencing the track, either the lessee or the lessor company being liable in such case. East St. Louis & C. R. Co. v. Gerber, 82 Ill. 632.

And a railroad company owning a road is liable under the Illinois statute requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks within six months after the road has been opened for use, if they fail to fence the track thereof within six months after they begin to run trains on it, though for construction purposes, and the fact that the road remains under the control of the contractors does not affect the liability. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hedin, 65 Ill. 387.

And in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Kanouse, 39 Ill. 272, 59 Am. Dec. 307, which was an action against the lessee of a railroad for the killing of a horse due to the fact that the railway land was unfenced, it was said that it was the duty of the owner to fence the road, and that it would have been liable for the injury had it been sued.

So, in Maine a railroad company whose charter requires it to erect and maintain substantial, legal, and sufficient fences on each side of the land taken by it for its road where the same passes through inclosed and improved lands, and in default of which they are liable for injuries occasioned thereby, cannot relieve itself from any liability for loss or injuries to stock from a failure thus to fence the road by the assignment and leasing of the road to another company. Whitney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 44 Me. 362, 69 Am. Dec. 103.

And a railroad company which permits the running of cars upon its road before it has erected fences as required by law will not be exonerated from liability for damages for the killing of a horse which had strayed on the 44 L. R. A.

track by proof that at the time certain persons were operating the road under an agreement with the company that they should receive and retain the earnings, where it was further stipulated that the train should run under the direction and control of the company. Wyman v. Penobscot & K. R. Co. 46 Me. 162.

And in Indiana an action for injury to stock upon a railroad on account of a failure to fence the right of way when regarded as one for tort, or in the nature of a tort when brought against two railroad companies, is sufficiently charged in a complaint alleging that the act was done by defendants without showing what relation they sustained to each other, but a recovery cannot be had against one upon evidence showing its liability, or under the statute against both jointly or severally. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Warner, 35 Ind. 516.

And such a complaint charging that a horse was killed on the road of one of them, where the track was not securely fenced, by the cars of the other passing over the road in charge of the officers of the latter company, is insufficient where it does not show that the owner of the road leased it to the other or had in any way consented to its use thereof. Cincinnati & M. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Ind. 38; Cincinnati & M. R. Co. v. Paskins, 36 Ind. 380.

Under Iowa Laws 1862, chap. 169, § 6, providing that any railroad company hereafter running or operating its road and failing to fence it against live stock shall be absolutely liable to the owner of any live stock injured or killed by reason of the want of such fence, and Laws 1868, chap. 79, § 1, providing that all companies, lessees, or corporations running or operating any railroad shall be liable for injuring, destroying, or killing any live stock, where the two railroad companies operate trains upon the same road, one being the owner and the other the lessee, each is liable only for stock injured or killed by its trains by reason of the road being unfenced, and not for that injured or killed by the trains of others. Stephens v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 327.

The word "agents" in N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 476, § 32, providing that so long as fences upon the sides of railroad tracks are not made or not in good repair, the company, its lessees, or others in possession shall be liable for all damages done by their agents, has reference only to the agents of the corporation or person operating the road, and does not apply so as to render a lessee operating the road the agent of the lessor which never operated it. Throne v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 88 Hun, 141.

And a railroad company owning a line of railroad which leased its right of way and all its property real and personal and franchises except the franchise to exist as a corporation, to a foreign corporation for a period of 999 years, having no rolling stock and never operating the road, the engines and cars thereon belonging to the lessee company, is not liable for the negligent killing of stock because of the omission to fence the side of the road, under N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 476, § 32, requiring every railroad corporation and any lessee or other person in possession before the lines of its road are open for use to erect and maintain fences, and providing that so long as such fences are not made or in good repair the corporation, its lessee or other person, shall be liable for all damages done by its agents, engines, or cars to any domestic animals thereon, as the duty of maintaining such fences was imposed upon the lessee by N. Y. Laws 1864, chap. 582, § 2. Ibid.

So, the conductor of a railroad train belonging to the lessee of a railroad which injures a person through the negligence of the engineer in failing to give a proper warning of the approach of a train to a highway crossing, is not the servant of the lessor of the road so as to render it liable for his negligence under a trackage contract, though it provided that the conductor should be under the control and subject to the orders of the superintendent of the lessor road through courtesy, and such superintendent was allowed to discharge the employees of the lessee road for any dereliction in duty occurring upon the leased road. Cain v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 20 Misc. 459.

And a statute providing for fences for the protection of cattle and other animals named has no application to fences for the protection of persons traveling on a highway. Ditchett v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 425.

In the above case it was said that it may well be doubted whether the lessor of a railroad who had parted with the possession could be held liable for the negligence of the lessee under a statute requiring railroad corporations to fence the sides of their roads. Ibid.

F. H. B.

O. L. ANTHONY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
E. M. NORTON.

(.....Kan.....)

*The common-law rule in actions by a parent for damages for the seduction of his daughter, which required him to sue, in the capacity of a master, for the loss of her services as a servant, although in fact permitting a recovery by him in his parental relation, was the rule of a legal fiction which no longer obtains, under the reformed procedure, because of the abolition by the Code of fictions in pleading, and its requirement to state the actual facts in controversy.

(March 11, 1899.)

ERROR to the District Court for Coffey County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the seduction of plaintiff's daughter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Madden Brothers, for plaintiff in error:

The relation of master and servant is necessary in order to maintain an action for seduction.

Ogborn v. Francis, 44 N. J. L. 441, 43 Am. Rep. 395; Vanhorn v. Freeman, 6 N. J. L. 393; Lavery v. Crooke, 52 Wis. 612, 38 Am. Rep. 768; Bartley v. Richtmyer, 4 N. Y. 38, 53 Am. Dec. 338; White v. Nellis, 31 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 282; Martin v. Payne, 9 Johns. 387, 6 Am. Dec. 288; Clark v. Fitch, 2 Wend. 459, 20 Am. Dec. 639; Mulvehall v. Millward, 11 N. Y. 343; Furman v. Van Sise, 56 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441; Blagge v. Iley, 127 Mass. 191, 34 Am. Rep. 361; White v. Murland, 71 Ill. 250, 22 Am. Rep. 100.

Mere sexual intercourse, without flattery or artifice, does not constitute seduction.

Hill v. Wilson, 8 Blackf. 123; Comer v. Taylor, 82 Mo. 341; Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404; Delvee v. Boardman, 20 Iowa, 446; Patterson v. Hayden, 17 Or. 238, 3 L. R. A. 529; Marshall v. Taylor, 98 Cal. 55; Mohelsky v. Hartmeister, 68 Mo. App. 318.

If no loss of service was shown in the action, the care and attention bestowed by plaintiff on her daughter in her sickness and lying-in were not consequent damages recoverable by plaintiff.

There can be no recovery of vindictive damages, unless actual damages are shown.

Schippel v. Norton, 38 Kan. 567; Adams v. Salina, 58 Kan. 250; First Nat. Bank v. Kansas Grain Co. (Kan.) 55 Pac. 277.

Evidence of previous intercourse mitigates the damages, for the defendant is liable only to the extent his act has contributed to the girl's downward tendency.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1036; Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404; Hoffman v. Kemerer, 44 Pa. 452; Love v. Masoner, 6 Baxt. 24, 32 Am. Rep. 522; West v. Druff, 55 Iowa, 335; Hogan v. Cregan, 6 Robt. 138; Shattuck v. Myers, 13 Ind. 46, 74 Am. Dec. 236; Carder v. Forehand, 1 Mo. 704, 14 Am. Dec. 317; White v. Murland, 71 Ill. 250, 22 Am. Rep. 100.

Messrs. G. E. Manchester and Lamb & Hogueland, for defendant in error:

If the relation of parent and child existed and the daughter lived with her mother and performed service for her mother, then the mother can recover.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1015-1017; Beaudette v. Gagne, 87 Me. 534.

The relation of master and servant is now held to be little else than a legal fiction by which damages are awarded, not to the master, but to the head of the family, for disgrace, humiliation, and anguish brought upon the plaintiff's family.

Hudkins v. Huskins, 22 W. Va. 645; Vanhorn v. Freeman, 6 N. J. L. 393; Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 588.

As the gist of the action is the debauching of the daughter, and the consequent supposed or actual loss of her services, it is immaterial to the plaintiff's claim under what special circumstances the injury was wrought.

Kennedy v. Shea, 110 Mass. 147, 14 Am. Rep. 584; Leuker v. Steileu, 89 Ill. 545, 31 Am. Rep. 104; Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404.

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by Mrs. E. M. Norton, a widow, against O. L. Anthony, for NOTE.—This case furnishes a striking illustration of the abolition of a fiction of law. While the decision seems to be based on the statute which abolishes fictions of pleading, and the fiction here involved may be a rule of substantive law or of right more than a rule of 44 L. R. A.

pleading, it may be asked if the power of the courts to modify the original rule which based the right of action on the loss of service until that rule had become only a fiction does not extend to the abandonment of that mere fiction.

damages for the seduction of her daughter, Turie Norton. Besides a denial of the imputed act, the defense was that the daughter was of full age, and did not, as to her mother, stand in the relation of a servant to a mistress, and that no loss of service to the mother, as mistress, had resulted from the alleged wrong. The daughter was about twenty-five years old at the time of the seduction charged, and was clerking in a store. At and before that time she lived with her mother, as a part of the family, and occasionally performed some slight household services. The court, among other matters of law, instructed the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the plaintiff is a widow, and the mother of Turie Norton, whom it is alleged that the defendant seduced, and that at the time of said seduction the said Turie Norton lived with her mother, and performed service for her (and you are instructed that the performance of any slight service is sufficient to satisfy the law in that regard), then plaintiff will be entitled to recover, if you find that the seduction was accomplished as alleged. That you may find that the said Turie Norton was in the service of the plaintiff, you need not find that a contract existed between them for such service. It will be sufficient if she lived with her mother when the seduction occurred, and took part in the housework. And such service need not be paid for, and no pay need be promised or expected." A request made by the defendant for the following instruction was refused: "I instruct you that the mere relation of mother and daughter will not permit a recovery by the former for the seduction of the latter."

The instruction given is in accord with the almost unanimous voice of the courts, and, if it were the only one to be considered, we should have no hesitation in approving it, but the request preferred by the defendant and refused by the court brings before us the question whether an action for seduction can be maintained upon the mere relation of parent and daughter alone,—especially where, as in this case, the daughter is of age, and lives with her parent, and constitutes a part of the family. Upon this question the holdings of the courts are uniform to the effect that an action for the seduction of a daughter, brought in the parental capacity alone, is not maintainable except as allowed by statute. At common law the action is maintainable by the parent only in the capacity of master or mistress, and it must be in form an action for loss of the daughter's services as a servant. That the rules of the law should thus degrade the injured parent's right of action to one of mere compensation for the impaired ability of the daughter to perform labor, and for the recovery of the expenses incident to such sickness as results from the wrong done, has been, throughout the course of judicial decision, a matter of regret among the judges. So grievously has this reproach upon the law been felt, that the courts quite a time ago began to sanction a wide latitude of evidence as to damages in such actions, until now the rule has become firmly established that notwithstanding the action must be, in form, for loss of services and expenses incurred in sickness, yet compensatory damages for parental and even general family shame and mortification may be recovered, together with an additional punitive sum for the flagrant wrong committed by the seducer. It will be profitable at this point to illustrate by quotations from the authorities the present liberal holdings of the courts upon this subject, and to note the extreme departure of the rule of proof from the rule of pleading, and also to note the lament of the judges over the arbitrary and technical theory which compelled the parent to disguise his action in the false and abhorrent form of a master's suit for loss of services.

Mr. Sedgwick, in his work on the Measure of Damages, 8th ed. vol. 2, § 471, says: "The common-law action of case, by the father or master, for seducing a daughter or female servant, is one of a peculiar character. It is eminently a legal fiction. The demand is based upon the mere loss of service, but the damages are very much at large, and in the discretion of the jury." Following the above statements, the author briefly traces the evolution of the rule of damages from one of mere compensation to the master for loss of services to one of compensation for parental mortification, anguish, and violated honor. In 3 Sutherland, Dam. p. 735, it is said: "At common law this action rests on the relation of master and servant, and proceeds, in form, for loss of service. Trespass vi et armis is deemed the proper action where the servant resides with the master or parent. Case may also be brought where the injury is not committed with force, or where the servant is only constructively in the master's service. Slight evidence will establish sufficiently the relation, and the extent of the loss of service is not the measure of damages. The allegations and proof on these points are almost an unmeaning formula,—an obeisance to a shadow of the past,—to reach the actual grievance. The action in reality is to afford redress for the injury done to the parent or other near relative, or person standing in loco parentis, for the dishonor and degradation suffered by the family in consequence of the seduction. And large damages, which the court will seldom relieve against, are recoverable, both for recompense to the plaintiff and punishment to the defendant. Caton, J., said: "Technically, the ground of recovery is the loss of the services of the daughter; and the rule of the books seems to be that the father must prove some service, in order to entitle him to maintain the action. This is nominally the ground on which the plaintiff's right of action rests, while practically the right to recover rests on far higher grounds,—that is, the relation of parent and child, or guardian and ward, or husband and wife, as well as that of master and servant; and it seems almost beneath the dignity of the law to resort to a sort of subterfuge to give the father a right of action which is widely different from that for which he is really allowed to recover damages. But the law may still require proof of service, or at least the right to service, when the child is a minor; but this, as well as any other fact, may be proved by circumstances sufficient in themselves to satisfy the jury that the party seduced did actually render service to the plaintiff, and the most trivial service has always been held sufficient.' Doyle v. Jessup, 29 Ill. 462. Even in England, where stricter proof of service is required, Blackburn, J., said: 'In effect, the damages are given to plaintiff as standing in the relation of parent, and the action has at present no reference to the relation of master and servant, beyond the mere technical point on which the action is founded.' Terry v. Hutchinson, L. R. 3 Q. B. 602. This is according to the general current of authority. While the courts adhere so far to the original distinctive character of the action as to require proof that the seduced female was in the service of the plaintiff at the time of the seduction, they do not require very strict proof. Very slight evidence of loss of service suffices, in favor of one standing in loco parentis, and affected by the graver consequences of the seduction. The actual loss sustained by the plaintiff, through the diminished ability of his daughter, relative, or ward, to yield him personal service, as well as the servile position of the supposed servant herself in the family of her protector, is ordinarily little more than a mere fiction. It is one of those cases in which an action devised for one purpose has been found to serve a different one, by the aid of the discretion which courts have assumed in instructing the jury, and the readiness of the jury to render substantial justice by their verdict, where the forms of law imposed by the instructions of the court admit of their doing so." In Pollock on Torts, 201, it is said: "The capricious working of the action for seduction in modern practice has often been the subject of censure. Thus, Sergeant Manning wrote forty years ago: 'The quasi fiction of servitum amisit affords protection to the rich man, whose daughter occasionally makes his tea, but leaves without redress the poor man, whose child is sent unprotected to earn her bread amongst strangers.' All devices for obtaining what is virtually a new remedy by straining old forms and ideas beyond their original intention are liable to this kind of inconvenience. It has been truly said that the enforcement of a substantially just claim 'ought not to depend upon a mere fiction, over which the courts possess no control.'" In Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 361, the court says: "Although the action by a parent for the seduction of his daughter has its technical foundation in the loss of his daughter's services, it is well settled that proof of the relation of master and servant, and of the loss of service by means of the wrongful act of the defendant, has relation only to the form of the remedy, and that the action being sustained, in point of form, by the introduction of these technical elements, the damages may be given as a compensation to the plaintiff, not only for the loss of service, but also for all that the plaintiff can feel from the nature of the injury.'" In Badg- ley v. Decker, 44 Barb. 588, the court says: "The rule is still adhered to, with us, that loss of service is the legal gravamen of the action. Bartley v. Richtmyer, 4 N. Y. 38, 53 Am. Dec. 338. But, to accommodate the action to cases where the daughter rendered no service, a presumed or a fictitious service is resorted to as a gravamen. [Postlethwaite v. Parkes] 3 Burr. 1878; [Bennett v. Alcott] 2 T. R. 166, 168; [Holloway v. Abell] 7 Car. & P. 528; [Martin v. Payne] 9 Johns. 389, 6 Am. Dec. 288; [Clark v. Fitch] 2 Wend. 459, 20 Am. Dec. 639; [Hewitt v. Prime] 21 Wend. 79-82. All the modern cases hold that the legal gravamen of the action is not the real gravamen as is apparent when we come to consider the rule of damages recognized in the action, and judges have not unfrequently spoken of the action as resting upon a fiction. . . . The real gravamen of the action is not the loss of service. That is a very small item in the measure of damages. The loss of service in many cases could not be considered anything in reality, and often when the least service is performed the highest damages are given. The real gravamen of the action is the mortification and disgrace of the family, and the wounded feelings of the plaintiff." In Davidson v. Abbott, 52 Vt. 573, 36 Am. Rep. 767, the court says: "The action, in form, is to recover damage for loss of service; but it has become well settled for a century in England and this country that the loss of service is slight and nominal in most cases and the recovery is had essentially for wounded feelings, dishonor, and disgrace." In Riddle v. McGinnis, 22 W. Va. 271, the court says: "While at common law the father and master was obliged to allege and prove the loss of service, however trivial or valueless, as the foundation of the recovery, yet it was regarded only as the foundation, for the courts have always treated the relation of master and servant, and the loss of service, as innocent fictions, which merely served to give the court jurisdiction, while the measure of the plaintiff's damages was not merely the actual value of the service lost, but compensation for the shame, disgrace, and anguish suffered by the father in the defilement and ruin of his daughter. These elements now enter into, and generally constitute, the real measure of damages, while the jury, in estimating them, must almost necessarily be influenced and controlled by the position of the parties in society, and by all the other circumstances surrounding each particular case."

Many more quotations like those above could be made from text writers and reported decisions. The views of all legal authorities upon the subject are to the effect that the rule which requires a parent suing for the seduction of a daughter to plead loss of her services as his servant, but which obligates him to only nominal proof of the cause of the action stated, is an empty and senseless legal fiction,—a pretense and sham which does discredit to the law, and with which it were highly desirable to dispense. What seems to us a satisfactory definition of a fiction of law, though one admittedly broad, is that given in Maine, Anc. Law, p. 25. It is: "Any assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of the law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged, its operation being modified. . . . The fact is that the law has been wholly changed. The fiction is that it remains what it always was." The substance of all the definitions of a legal fiction is that it is a pretense that the law as to a particular matter is different from what it really is. The legal fiction in actions by a parent for seduction is that he has lost the services of his daughter, and has been subjected to expense on her account, wherefore he sues for such loss and expense, and for them alone. The fiction assumes his right to recover for these, and these alone. The fact is that he has lost no services, and has been subjected to no expense; but the law is that, notwithstanding his lack of loss and expense, he may nevertheless recover for the wounds to his parental feelings, and may mulct the seducer in punitive damages also. We say the law is that he may recover notwithstanding his lack of loss in his capacity as master. The courts make a pretense of holding him to proof of such loss, and make a pretense of withholding relief if he fails to make the proof, but it is a pretense only. Proof of the very slightest kind of service will suffice. The service proved need be nothing more than nominal. It need not be actual or beneficial, and many of the courts hold that, where the daughter was not actually in the service of the parent, she nevertheless was, if a minor, constructively in his service, and that such constructive service was sufficient to uphold the right of action. It is a shameful pretense to hold that a daughter whose labors, for instance, merely consist in pouring the tea at her father's table and doing the honors of his household to his guests, is in his service as a servant, and that he may recover damages because of the loss of such labors through her seduction. Many of the courts have deplored the lack of legislation to enable them to dispense with the fiction in question, so as to allow them to bottom cases in theory, as well as in fact, upon the actual and meritorious ground upon which the damages are really awarded. If by this is meant legislation which in express terms abrogates the fiction of the relation of master and servant, we deny its necessity in this and other states which have adopted the reformed Code of Procedure. The Code was devised for the very purpose of dispensing with legal fictions and antiquated forms of action. Its spirit in this respect can be illustrated by a score or more of its provisions. Out of them one general rule of reform is collectible, and that is that the actual facts from which the claimed right of action is deducible must be stated. Nay, more, it is even expressed in some of the sections of the Code. "The distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits heretofore existing, are abolished." Section 6. "There can be no feigned issues." Section 7. "The rules of pleading heretofore existing in civil actions are abolished."

44 L. R. A.

Section 85. "The petition must contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language, and without repetition." Section 87. "All fictions in pleading are abolished." Section 116. If in fact a right of action is given to the parent, as such, for the seduction of the daughter; if in fact the injury done is to the parent in that relation; if in law the courts take to themselves the right to probe beneath the thin veneering of the form of the action, as one for the loss of services, in order to reach the heart and core of the controversy and give damages for the actual injury committed; if these things are allowed and done, it cannot be that the liberal rules of the Code still require conformity to the fictitious and embarrassing formulas of the common law. Not only was it the design of the Code to simplify the rules of pleading by reducing to unity all the various forms of action existing at common law, and requiring the parties to state the actual facts of the controversy, but it contemplated the existence of the modern and enlarged ideas of justice as to matters of substantive right which had begun to prevail. To furnish a better medium for the working out of the newer and more equitable thought was equally its design. No relation in life has been more visibly affected by the humanizing influence of latter-day concepts of justice than has the domestic one. Originally the child was in the fullest sense the slave of its father. Indeed, the origin of slavery, according to the view of a most learned and deep-searching historian, was in the family circle. The child was born into slavery to its sire. Ward, Ancient Lowly, cc. 2, 3. In the course of time the legalized state of the child passed from that of a slave to that of a servant of the one who had begotten it. Now it holds, in general estimation, at least, if not in law, a quite nearly co-ordinate position in the family. As long as its minority lasts, it is under the guardianship and tutelage of its parents, but it is no longer in fact, or in legal theory, their servant; and when, it being a daughter, suit is brought on account of its seduction, such suit is not in fact founded upon the idea of service lost, but upon the idea of parental affection wounded, parental anguish endured, and parental liability for care and nurture increased. Damages, therefore, in respect to the violated parental relation, are the facts which the Code ordains shall be stated in the petition; and the pretense of services lost to the parent, as a master, is the legal fiction of pleading, which the Code ordains shall be abolished. If necessity ever existed for cloaking the real cause of action under the nominal disguise of another one, it no longer exists, and we hold accordingly. In this state a parent may maintain an action for the seduction of the daughter without averment or proof of loss of services or expenses of sickness.

A question subsidiary or incidental to the one above discussed now arises. In this case the daughter was of full age. The law had emancipated her from the guardianship and control of her mother, and, so far as legal liability is concerned, the mother was absolved from responsibility for the acts and conduct of the daughter. May the mother, therefore, maintain the action? As before stated, the daughter constituted, in fact, a part of the mother's family. The mother was the head of that family, and was charged with that moral responsibility for the virtue and orderly conduct of its various members which devolves upon the head of a household. The purity and rectitude of behavior of those within the domestic circle were in an especial manner the objects of her solicitude and care. The law, therefore, will not deny compensation to her for the invasion of her home by the ruthless destroyer of its peace and happiness, simply because in law she could no longer command the services of her daughter. The mere fact of the legal emancipation of the daughter from parental control has never been made a test of the right to maintain the action for seduction. When the right to maintain it was founded upon the legal fiction of loss of services, the cases divided themselves into two classes,—one, where the daughter was a minor, in which instance the right to the service was legally presumed; the other, where the daughter was of age, in which instance proof of a contract of service was required, or in lieu thereof proof of facts from which it could be inferred. The right of action was given in the last-mentioned case, as well as in the former; and the courts, although adhering in the last case, as well as in the former, to the fiction of the loss of services, nevertheless gave damages in vindication of the parental right, and in melioration of outraged parental feelings. In Badgley v. Decker, 44 Barb. 577, and in Davidson v. Abbott, 52 Vt. 570, 36 Am. Rep. 767, the daughters were twenty-five and thirty-one years, respectively, at the times of their seduction. The actions were held maintainable in these cases; and in the following ones they were likewise upheld, although the females had passed the period of minority: Sutton v.

Huffman, 32 N. J. L. 58; Wert v. Strouse, 38 N. J. L. 185; Lamb v. Taylor, 67 Md. 85; Moran v. Dawes, 4 Cow. 412; Lipe v. Eisenlord, 32 N. Y. 229; Villepigue v. Shular, 3 Strobb. L. 462; Long v. Keightley, 11 Ir. Law T. 77. Many other like cases might be cited but these are sufficient to show that the minority of the daughter has never been held essential to the right of recovery by the parent. There exists no reason for distinguishing between cases of minority and of full age of the daughter, and granting a recovery in the former while denying it in the latter, merely because the legal fiction of services lost, upon which they were formerly both prosecuted, has been cleared out of the way, and the right of recovery placed in law as well as in fact upon its real ground. There is no magic in the passing of a daughter's eighteenth birthday anniversary, to relieve against parental solicitude and care, or parental anguish over her fall from virtue. At what time in the advancing age of a daughter the feelings of parental mortification over such fall become sufficiently dulled, and the sense of parental responsibility sufficiently weakened, to reduce the damages to a nominal sum, or to deny them altogether, we need not concern ourselves. The law heretofore has set no time for the passing of parental feelings as to such matter into a condition of indifference, and we need not speculate as to it. Each case will depend upon its own particular facts, and as to such facts the jury is the judge.

Two other claims of error are made. They are founded upon the court's instructions, and its refusal of requests for instructions. One of them relates to the meaning of the word "seduction," and raises a question as to its legal definition. The other relates to the measure of damages recoverable. Both of them, however, are unfounded, and the judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

John W. WARNER, Receiver, etc., of First National Bank of Watkins, Appt.,
v.

William J. PENOYER et al.

(91 Fed. Rep. 587.)

1. Bank directors are not required to procure periodical expert examination of the books in order to verify by personal examination such details of the bank's condition as they ought to know before declaring dividends, or which are required to be reported to the comptroller of the currency, if there is no reason to distrust the integrity or efficiency of the cashier.
2. Directors of a national bank are required to cause examination of the discounted paper of the bank, with reasonable frequency, and to keep themselves sufficiently informed about it to enable them to pass an intelligent judgment upon its value.

3. Directors of a national bank who are members of the discount and examining committees will be held liable for losses occasioned by the reckless loans of the cashier, where they made not even a cursory examination of the discounts or overdrafts beyond looking at such notes as the cashier saw fit to consult them about.
4. Mere failure to attend meetings of the board will not render directors of a national bank liable for defalcation of the cashier.

(November 3, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York dismissing NOTE.—As to liability of bank directors, see also Swentzel v. Penn Bank (Pa.) 15 L. R. A. 305, and note.

44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 244.

ing a bill which sought to hold defendants liable as directors of a national bank for losses alleged to have come from their negligence. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Wallace, Lacombe, and Shipman, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Martin S. Lynch and Edward Winslow Paige, for appellant:

The question of negligence in a case like this is one of fact, and the test is that the same amount of diligence is required as that which a prudent man would naturally exercise in the conduct of the same business, if it were his own.

Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662; Robinson v. Hall, 25 U. S. App. 48, 63 Fed. Rep. 225, 12 C. C. A. 674.

Mr. Frederic Collin, for appellees:

The authorities defend the directors against any liability.

Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662.

"I know of no law," said Vice Chancellor McCoun in Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. 513, 541, "which requires the president or directors of any moneyed institution to adopt a system of espionage in relation to their secretary or cashier or any subordinate agent, or to set a watch upon all their actions."

Nor is knowledge of what the books and papers would have shown to be imputed.

Wakeman v. Dalley, 51 N. Y. 27, 10 Am. Rep. 551; Hallmark's Case, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 329; Clevis v. Bardon, 36 Fed. Rep. 617; Witlers v. Sowles, 31 Fed. Rep. 1; Swentzel v. Penn Bank, 147 Pa. 140, 15 L. R. A. 305.

A condition precedent to the right to bring and maintain the action is that the comptroller should institute proceedings under § 5239 for the forfeiture of the charter of the bank. This has not been done. There is no allegation or proof that such course has been pursued.

Gerner v. Thompson, 74 Fed. Rep. 125; National Exch. Bank v. Peters, 44 Fed. Rep. 13.

If it be claimed that this is an action not under § 5239, but an action at common law, then it is not an action in equity but an action at law, and this court will not entertain jurisdiction thereof.

Stephens v. Overstolz, 43 Fed. Rep. 771; Higgins v. Tefft, 4 App. Div. 62; Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 43 Hun, 458; O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 143 N. Y. 377; New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Memphis Water Co. 107 U. S. 205, 27 L. ed. 484; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873; Thompson v. Central Ohio R. Co. 73 U. S. 134, 18 L. ed. 765; Poster, Fed. Pr. 2d ed. §§ 2-5; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358.

Wallace, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The First National Bank of Watkins was organized in 1883, had a capital of $50,000, was located in a village of about 3,000 population, and carried a line of deposits and discounts approximating $200,000. It had paid dividends semiannually of 4 per cent. 44 L. R. A.

except in 1893, when the usual July dividend was not declared. So far as appears, it was a prosperous and well-conducted concern until within two years of the time of its failure, when, owing to the mismanagement, frauds, and criminal acts of its cashier, its assets were depleted to the extent of about $140,000. February 8, 1894, its doors were closed, and its assets passed into the hands of a receiver. The receiver, alleging in his bill of complaint that the losses of the bank were attributable to the disregard of the directors of their trusts and duties, brought the present action to charge them with the amount. The court below dismissed the bill, influenced largely by the judgment in Briggs v. Spaulding. 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662, and convinced that the directors were less negligent than those who were absolved by the supreme court in that case. This appeal requires us to review the whole case made by the proofs, to determine whether there was error in the decision.

There is not a particle of evidence indicating that the directors were aware of the culpable actions of the cashier. They trusted the cashier implicitly, relying on his fidelity and capacity, and had no suspicion of the real condition of the affairs of the bank, apparently not even when the dividend was passed.

Since its organization until his death, which occurred in August, 1892, William M. Love, the father of the cashier, had been the president of the bank. He was the largest stockholder, and took an active part in conducting its business. While he supervised its affairs, there were no serious irregularities on the part of the cashier. These began a month or so before his death, inferably when his failing health devolved larger control and opportunities upon the cashier. The cashier had acted in that capacity since the organization of the bank. He was a small stockholder, and was in good repute financially and morally. Upon his father's death, the management of the bank devolved almost exclusively upon him, none of the directors being bankers, or men of much business experience. August 27, 1892, the directors selected a new president, the defendant Tuttle, who had long been a director, and was probably as well qualified as any of the board, voting him a small salary. He was a farmer, residing 2 or 3 miles from the village, and was one of the largest stockholders. He remained president until the bank failed. He visited the bank frequently, sometimes advised with the cashier about discounts, and, when the cashier was absent, signed drafts, and authorized small discounts. He was not familiar with bookkeeping, and never looked at any of the bank books. A leather wallet, containing the discounted notes maturing the current month, was kept on the bank counter during business hours. He occasionally looked at some of the notes in this wallet. He never investigated the assets of the safe. He relied on weekly statements prepared by the bookkeeper or cashier, and which he examined every Tuesday morning, and upon conferences with the cashier or clerks, to keep himself informed about the business and condition of the bank. The directors had an examining committee and a discount committee, but these committees only met at the semiannual meetings of the board of directors. At these meetings the cashier would bring in a list, prepared by him, of the outstanding discounted notes, and some of the members of the examining or discount committee would look the notes over, and tally and compare them with the cashier's list. At the meetings held in July, 1892, and in January and July, 1893, the discounts were reported as examined and approved.

The discount committee was composed of two directors and the president. One of these directors visited the bank two or three times a week, and approved such paper as the cashier asked him to consider. The other never acted.

Periodical reports to the comptroller of the currency, in the prescribed form, were prepared by the cashier; the attesting directors accepting his statements without any independent investigation. His statements were likewise accepted, without independent investigation, at the semiannual meeting, as showing the condition of the bank.

This summarizes the evidence respecting the supervision exercised by the president and directors of the business management of the bank. They did not at any time investigate, or cause an investigation to be made of, its resources and liabilities. They all deferred to the better judgment and banking experience of the cashier, and, as testified to by the vice president, the entire management of the bank was practically left to him, as the man best qualified of all those who were interested in it. No evidence is in the record about the examinations by the official bank examiners, or about the circumstances which led to passing the semiannual dividend in July, 1893; nor is there any as to what took place at the semiannual meeting of the directors in January, 1894, the last meeting before the failure.

The principal item of loss for which the receiver seeks to charge the defendants arose from transactions of the cashier with the Western Improvement Company, an association engaged in land speculation, having but little, if any, financial responsibility. The cashier was the vice president and a stockholder of that concern, and his associates were not residents of Watkins. In April, 1892, he discounted a note for $3,046, made by Church, its president, and indorsed by Bengier, its treasurer, and placed the proceeds to the credit of its treasurer on the books of the bank. Thereafter, from time to time, until the bank failed, he discounted other notes for the concern, among them ten for $5,000 each, gave it fictitious credits, and permitted it to overdraw its accounts. Nearly all the notes were renewed as they matured, and were carried unpaid until the failure. Some of the notes were made and indorsed by the officers of the company, some of them by the officers as individuals, and some by individuals who were stockholders in the company. The discounted notes were entered regularly in the discount register.

44 L. R. A.

Whether or not they were kept in the wallet of the maturing notes does not satisfactorily appear. Kapell, the teller and bookkeeper, was not asked the question. Miss Hore, the other bookkeeper, testifies that she does not recollect having seen any of them. Tuttle testifies that he never saw any of them. Neither party examined the cashier as a witness, although his testimony was available.

When the bank failed, the Western Improvement Company owed it $72,000; about $24,000 arising from overdrafts, and the balance from worthless discounts. None of the directors knew of the overdrafts, or seemed to have been aware of these discounts. The members of the examining committee testify that they have no recollection of having seen any of the discounted notes among those delivered by the cashier to the directors at the semiannual meetings, except one for $2,500. The cashier's list presented at the meeting in July, 1893, is in evidence, and upon it appear eight notes, for $5,000 each; but the list does not give the names of the makers, or otherwise describe the notes, except as to three, two of which are marked "Lembeck," and the other "G. W. Co." Who "Lembeck" was does not appear, but "G. W. Co." probably designated the Goundry Wagon Company, a concern which was solvent at that time, and in which the vice president of the bank was interested. These are the only notes in the list for above $3,000; the great majority of them being for sums below $300. It appears by the discount register that there were at that time unpaid five notes, each for $5,000, discounted for the benefit of the Western Improvement Company. The defendants Gray and Tuttle, who examined the discounts at that meeting, testify that they have no recollection about any of the $5,000 notes.

The directors of a national banking association are authorized to appoint a cashier, and delegate to him all the usual powers of such an office, including the discounting of notes. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5136. To him is properly confided the custody of its property, money, securities, and valuable paper, and the supervision of its books and accounts. He is the executive officer, who transacts its daily affairs. The directors cannot divest themselves of the duty of general supervision and control by committing this duty to him, but they properly may intrust to him all the discretionary powers which usually appertain to the immediate management of its business. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008; Wild v. Bank of Passamaquoddy, 3 Mason, 505; Franklin Bank v. Steward, 37 Me. 519; Sturges v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 153, 78 Am. Dec. 296.

Where they have acted in good faith and with ordinary diligence in exercising their duty of general control and supervision, they are not liable for losses sustained through his malversations. They are not called upon to devote themselves to the details of the business management, and may properly commit these to the clerks and bookkeepers, and to the superintendence of the cashier.

They are not required to adopt any system of espionage over their cashier, or any of their subordinate agents, or to entertain suspicion without some apparent reason, and, until some circumstance transpires to awaken a just apprehension of their want of integrity, have a right to assume that they are honest and faithful. Scott v. Depeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. 513, 514; Know v. Eden Musce American Co. 148 N. Y. 441-460, 31 L. R. A. 779; Percy v. Millaudon, 8 Mart. N. S. 68, 17 Am. Dec. 196. Directors are not merely required to be honest, but they must also bring to the discharge of the duties they undertake ordinary competency. "They cannot excuse imprudence or indifference by showing honesty of intention, coupled with gross ignorance and inexperience, or coupled with an absorption of their time and attention in their private affairs." Williams v. McKay, 46 N. J. Eq. 25. Before they can be made responsible for losses which have occurred through the mismanagement or dishonesty of the cashier, it must appear that such losses resulted as a consequence of the omission of some duty on their part. If, in all probability, these would have occurred just the same, notwithstanding they had been ordinarily diligent and vigilant, there is no justice in shifting them upon the directors, and no principle of law to justify it. They are responsible for their own acts and omissions, but not for those of codirectors in which they have not actively or passively participated.

It is manifest that the directors in this case relinquished almost untrammelled control of the bank to the cashier, and that their supervision over its affairs was so superficial as to be hardly more than perfunctory. But we are not satisfied that actionable negligence is imputable to them, collectively or individually, were it not found in their laxity of supervision over the discounts. They might have required periodical examinations of the books to be made by experts. They might have insisted upon verifying, by personal investigation from time to time, such details of the bank's condition as they ought to have known before declaring dividends, or as were required to be reported to the comptroller of the currency. And, if they had done so, this falsification of entries and accounts would probably have been discovered, if not prevented. But these would have been measures of unusual precaution, not imperative when there was no reason to distrust the integrity or efficiency of the cashier. They are not to be deemed remiss because they did not resort to exceptional methods, or because they relied on the cashier's supervision over the books and accounts, or because they reposed confidence in his reports of the amount and other clerical details of the assets and liabilities. They were under no duty to observe the extraordinary vigilance short of which a bank cannot be protected from the crimes conceived by a dishonest cashier. The systematic surveillance observed in large banks, especially in city banks, is not customary in the small village banks; and, in considering their conduct, we are at liberty to assume that the 44 L. R. A.

bank was visited and examined from time to time by those officers whose statutory duty it is to make a thorough investigation into all the affairs of such institutions and a full and detailed report to the comptroller of the currency. Such investigations, however, cannot be expected to probe the value of the discounted paper of a bank. This depends upon matters outside the cognizance of such an officer,—not only on the genuineness of the signatures and the financial responsibility of the makers and indorsers, but upon various extrinsic circumstances, as whether it is discounted for ordinary business transactions or for speculative enterprises.

We think it was incumbent upon the directors, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, and as a part of their duty of general supervision, to cause examination of this paper to be made with reasonable frequency, and to keep themselves sufficiently informed about it to enable them to pass an intelligent judgment upon its value. The solvency of the bank depended upon the character of this paper, and no dividend could legitimately be declared by the directors, unless they were reasonably certain that it was good and sufficient for the purpose. However honest and capable a bank cashier may be, he is not to be regarded as infallible; and directors are not justified in relinquishing to him unlimited discretion in investing the capital and deposits, and acquiescing blindly in all he does in that behalf. Perhaps the most important function of directors is to exercise an intelligent oversight upon the investments. See Bank Comrs. v. Bank of Buffalo, 6 Paige, 497.

The directors themselves recognized the propriety of maintaining careful supervision of the discounted paper. By resolution of the board, adopted in January, 1892, they provided that no notes of over $1,000 should be discounted unless approved by some member of the discount committee. At the meeting of the board in August, 1892, at which time the new president was elected, an examining committee was appointed, with authority to meet once in each month. It was contemplated that this committee should examine notes monthly, as appears from the record of the board meeting in January, 1893. We cannot doubt that, if the members of these committees had faithfully discharged the duties thus committed to them, or, doing less than this, had manifested their determination to acquaint themselves from time to time with the kind of paper which the bank was carrying, the bank would have escaped the greater part of the loss which it sustained through the paper discounted for the Western Improvement Company. More than this, if there had been reasonably diligent supervision of that character, its deterrent effect upon the conduct of the cashier would have tended, and possibly would have sufficed, to prevent the overdrafts, the false credits, and his misconduct generally. That they neglected such supervision, and did not use ordinary circumspection over this paper, sufficiently appears from the fact that it was examined only once in six months; that at no other time did the president or any member of the two committees undertake or suggest a methodical examination of it, or even any cursory investigation, beyond looking at such notes as the cashier saw fit to consult them about; and that at the semiannual meeting the examinations were so perfunctory that no member of the committee is able to recall having noticed a single one of the eight $5,000 notes which were submitted to the committee on the occasion when the dividend was passed. If any inquiries had been made about any of these notes, exceptionally large in comparison with the ordinary discounts, and representing in the aggregate nearly the whole capital of the bank, some of the directors would have been likely to remember the circumstance. So unquestioned and autocratic was the control over the discounts permitted to the cashier that he apparently resented any criticism, and considered it presumptuous; and the directors, unwilling to incur his displeasure, refrained from the appearance of surveillance. Mr. Colgrove, a member of the discount committee, in his testimony exhibited the situation in the succinct statement: "I saw he was offended if I made any suggestions, and I had every confidence in the way in which he conducted the business."

The adjudication in Briggs v. Spaulding does not meet a case like this, because there is but little similarity in the special facts. As was observed in the opinion, "each case has to be determined in view of all the circumstances." Judge Story says (Story, Bailm. § 11): "Indeed, what is common or ordinary diligence is more a matter of fact than of law."

The gist of the decision in Briggs v. Spaulding is stated in the concluding part of the opinion, as follows: "Without reviewing the various decisions on the subject, we hold that directors must exercise ordinary care and prudence in the administration of the affairs of a bank, and that this includes something more than officiating as figureheads. They are entitled, under the law, to commit the banking business, as defined, to their duly-authorized officers; but this does not absolve them from the duty of reasonable supervision, nor ought they to be permitted to be shielded from liability because of want of knowledge of wrongdoing, if that ignorance is the result of gross inattention. But in this case we do not think these defendants fairly liable for not preventing loss by putting the bank into liquidation within ninety days after they became directors, and it is really to that the case becomes reduced at last."

In this there is nothing inconsistent with the general tenor of the authorities.

We are of the opinion that only those directors, including the president, should be held responsible for the losses, who were members of the discount and examining committees. If these persons had performed their duties faithfully, while it cannot be said that there would have been nothing to criticise in the management of the bank, it may be reasonably inferred that the losses from the discounts for the benefit of the Western Improvement Company would not have occurred. If the other directors were cognizant of the neglect of duty by these directors, the proofs do not show it. The members of these committees were the defendants Tuttle, Colgrove, Bennett, Gray, and Haring. Haring became a member of the examining committee at the July meeting, 1893, and should not be held responsible for any negligence on the part of his predecessors upon that committee. We are not satisfied that there should be any recovery for the losses which did not accrue previous to the directors' meeting of August, 1892.

Perhaps other losses would have been prevented if the members of the discount and examining committees had properly discharged their duties, but the proofs do not satisfactorily show that. The fact that other paper turned out eventually to be uncollectible does not prove that it was such that the directors would have refused to approve, if it had been brought to their notice at the time when it was discounted. As to all these losses, the case for the complainant seems to have been prepared and presented upon the theory that when a bank has failed, and it appears that there was a general supineness and looseness of management by the directors, the burden of exoneration for the losses is on the directors. This is not a correct theory. If it were, the cases would be few in which the directors of a bank, wrecked by the misconduct of a cashier, could not be held accountable for all the losses. The court cannot decree upon conjecture. As against two of the directors, the case for the complainant is predicated upon their failure to attend the semiannual meetings of the board. It is not a necessary or legitimate inference that this omission was a contributory cause of the losses. It does not follow, because a director has failed to attend meetings, that he is legally or morally responsible for the disasters that may have befallen his bank. In the present case the board had provided for a reasonably vigilant supervision of the cashier. The cause of the losses was the neglect of those who had been appointed to keep watch of the discounts. Those directors who attended the meetings, and had no reason to suppose that the members of the discount and examining committees were neglecting their duties, are not responsible for the losses, which are solely attributable to such neglect. The directors who did not attend the meetings are in no worse category. What could they have done or prevented, exercising common diligence, if they had been present? A director who has failed to act is not liable for the thefts or shortcomings of the cashier, unless it appears, inferentially, at least, that his omission had some proximate relation to the losses.

We have reached the conclusion that there should be a decree against the directors named with great reluctance, because their neglect of a proper supervision of the bank was in a sense unintentional, and is palliated by their business inexperience, and they have already sustained very considerable losses as the principal stockholders of the bank.

The decree is reversed, with costs, and with instructions to the court below to decree, conformably with this opinion, against the defendants Tuttle, Colgrove, Bennett, Gray, and Haring. As to the other defendants, the decree is affirmed, with costs.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

Lorenzo COREY, Appt.,

v.

W. W. WADSWORTH.

(.....Ala.....)

The preference of a creditor of an insolvent corporation is not invalid because he was a stockholder, director, and president of the company, and as such participated in the transaction by which he was given a preference over other creditors.

(January 31, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Morgan County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to set aside an alleged preference given by the insolvent Decatur Building & Supply Company to its president as one of its creditors by a bill of sale. Affirmed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinions and in the opinion upon the hearing upon demurrer reported in 23 L. R. A. 618.

Messrs. Harris & Eyster and Speake & Russell for appellant.

Mr. E. W. Godbey, for appellee:

Corey's presidency and general management of the Decatur Building Supply Company; the extraordinary powers conferred upon these positions by virtue of new by-laws compiled by a committee of his own appointing; his assumption of the large claim against his brother-in-law, Hoy, whose brief general management was the last; his appropriation at first cost, less freight, of many cargoes of material ordered from distant dealers in the name of the moribund corporation; the appropriation of other choice articles at an unjustifiable discount, and of still others without charge; the unaccountable loss, during his six months' administration, of the $6,000 borrowed from his Exchange Bank, of the $25,000 represented

NOTE.—The above decision overruling Corey v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 23 L. R. A. 618, strongly reinforces the decisions which permit insolvent corporations to prefer their own officers as creditors. The conflicting decisions on this question are carefully reviewed in a note to Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 22 L. R. A. 802.

The right to make such preferences is upheld in the later case of Schufeldt v. Smith (Mo.) 29 L. R. A. 830.

For other cases on the subject of preferences by insolvent corporations, see Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell (Ill.) 31 L. R. A. 265; Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. (Ill.) 31 L. R. A. 269; Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette (S. D.) 31 L. R. A. 497; Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. (Tenn.) 31 L. R. A. 593; and Fowler v. Bell (Tex.) 39 L. R. A. 254.

44 L. R. A.

by the capital stock, of the $27,000 worth of material for which creditors were never paid, and of the $4,000 derived from his negotiation of the Peters' notes; followed by an assignment for creditors, of assets whose nominal value was only $15,000, and which produced for creditors a dividend of only 15 per cent,—constitute a striking object lesson of the wisdom of that rule forbidding preferences to corporate officers, which the following authorities declare to be well established:

Conover v. Hull, 10 Wash. 673; Wait, Insolvent Corp. § 102; Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 5 L. R. A. 378; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 143, 22 L. R. A. 807; Siccardi v. Keystone Oil Co. 149 Pa. 148; Howe v. Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 231; Bonney v. Tilley, 109 Cal. 346; Tillson v. Downing, 45 Neb. 549; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cotton Exch. Real Estate Co. 70 Fed. Rep. 155; Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624; Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. Rep. 496, 11 C. C. A. 321; Adams v. Kehler Milling Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 433; Roseboom v. Whittaker, 132 Ill. 81; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639; W. P. Noble Mercantile Co. v. Mt. Pleasant Equitable Co-Op. Inst. 12 Utah, 213; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. 241; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 122; Hill v. Pioneer Lumber Co. 113 N. C. 173, 21 L. R. A. 560.

The director is a part of the corporation, and between the two there is a substantial identity.

Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92.

Directors are sole arbiters between contending candidates for preference, and they should preserve an attitude of impartiality in the consideration of such questions. The corporation has no knowledge or notice, or power to will or to act, save that possessed by its directors; and as no natural person is thus dependent on others for the exercise of every function, so, no analogy between natural persons occupying relations of debtor and creditor is pertinent. As corporate disasters are due to the faults or mistakes of directors, they should not fare better than creditors having no part in the administration of affairs.

The right to prefer creditors is not expressly conferred upon an artificial person; it is not a power incident or necessary to the accomplishment of any of the ends of its creation, and, being inequitable, it cannot be implied.

Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 143, 22 L. R. A. 807; Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 U. S. App.

145, 63 Fed. Rep. 496, 11 C. C. A. 321; Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 5 L. R. A. 378; Tillson v. Downing, 45 Neb. 549.

The excess of Corey's debits on the books of the company over his credits, the undervaluations of items of debits, his inability to designate the items for his alleged claim against the Supply Company; his failure to claim of the assignee any dividend on such claim, while receiving dividends on claims subsequently purchased from outside creditors; and the vacillation of his pleadings in fixing the amount of said claim at various times in divers sums, ranging from $9,000 to $800,—destroy his contention that he is in any sense a creditor of the defunct corporation.

The failure of Corey while appropriating assets for the liquidation of the bank's claim for which he was bound as surety, to deduct the amount due by himself to the Supply Company, was fatal to the validity of the transaction.

Harmon v. McRae, 91 Ala. 401.

The seizure of the staple articles of the concern at gross undervaluation, to pay, long before maturity, a debt with exorbitant and illegal interest, was a wanton sacrifice, and rendered the appropriations fraudulent, even if the corporation had then been solvent.

Cole v. Millerton Iron Co. 133 N. Y. 164; Bliss v. Matteson, 45 N. Y. 22; First Nat. Bank v. Asheville Furniture & Lumber Co. 116 N. C. 827.

McClellan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the main questions in this case is whether an insolvent and failing corporation can make a valid transfer of property to one of its directors in payment of a debt owing from the corporation to him, thus preferring him to other creditors in the payment of its debts, or perhaps more accurately, whether directors of such corporation can prefer themselves in the payment of corporate debts. The writer not only has very affirmative views favorable to the validity of such a transfer on abstract principles, but he is further quite convinced that the point has been to all intents and purposes so decided by this court. We are, of course, aware that many courts have held the contrary view, and some of the text writers have strongly condemned the doctrine we believe to be absolutely sound; some of them, indeed, resorting largely to invective and epithet in denunciation of the idea that a corporation may pay a just debt to an honest creditor, though he be a director, in preference to the just debts of other honest creditors who are strangers to the corporation. We have no epithets to apply to such courts and writers, nor to the rule they declare. Many of them are able expounders of the law, and all of them are doubtless actuated only by a purpose to ascertain and expound the true principle in this connection. And they may be right, and we wrong; but we do not think so, and we shall endeavor to give the reasons for the faith that is in us.

We are utterly unable to conceive, upon 44 L. R. A.

any just and sound principle or consideration, the least shadow of difference or distinction between the debt of a director and the debt of a stranger against a corporation, upon which could be predicated one rule in respect of a preference by the corporation in the payment of the former, and another rule in respect of such preference in the payment of the latter. Take the case we have here, assuming, for the discussion of the point immediately under consideration, that the transaction involves no actual fraud. The corporation is a going concern, and its managers do not contemplate its failure. But it is in debt, and needs money to continue its business and to pay its maturing obligations. It borrows the money from a director, directly or through a pledge of his credit. At the same time it incurs debts to strangers for supplies necessary in its business. The money borrowed from the director is used for corporate purposes. It is paid out to other creditors, or is applied to liquidate corporate expenses. So, also, the supplies constituting the consideration of the debts to strangers are applied to the authorized uses of the corporation, and inure to its advantage. There is nothing covinous in the creation of either class of debts. Neither the advancing director nor the supplying stranger has any intention or expectation of receiving any undue or illegal benefit from the transaction he thus has with the corporation. It may well be that the director, being a stockholder, anticipates that the aid he gives the corporation in his individual capacity will redound to his advantage ultimately in the increased value of, or in dividends upon, his stock. But, as all debts must be paid before the stockholder can be benefited by such a transaction, the intention and expectation of the advancing director involves and presupposes the payment of all corporate indebtedness. It follows obviously that, in lending his money or credit to the corporation, the director can have no purpose or intent inimical to existing or future creditors, but, to the contrary, the primary effect of the aid he thus gives the company is of affirmative benefit to its creditors. The stranger creditor, to the contrary, does expect a direct profit to himself by the transaction in which he becomes its creditor. If he lends it money, he expects and contracts for interest, and even this remuneration does not inure to the director who pledges his credit. If he sells his wares to it, he expects and contracts for a profit upon them. Of course, all this is perfectly legitimate. But it shows that, so far as the expectation of benefit goes, the director who pledges his credit, as did the respondent here, stands in a less selfish attitude towards the corporation and its creditors than does the stranger who sells property to it on credit. And, at least, we may say that the director creditor and the stranger creditor—the respondent and the complainant in this case—stand, in the creation of their debts, equally untainted of wrong done or intended; and, regarded from the point of view of the inception of their claims, are equally and to like extent entitled to the favorable consideration of the courts and the just protection of the law.

It is equally clear that the corporation itself and its other creditors are, to say the least, as much benefited by the money it borrows on the individual credit of the director as by the wares it purchases on time from the stranger. As we have seen, both the money so borrowed and the property so purchased become assets of the corporation, enable it to prosecute its business, to pay its creditors, and to meet its expenses. There is, in other words, nothing in the uses to which the money borrowed and the property purchased are applied, or intended to be applied, which differentiates the attitude and rights, before the courts and the law, of the director who pledges his credit, from the attitude and rights of the stranger creditor. In the effects and results of their respective transactions, as well as in the purposes and intents which actuated each to the thing he did, is found no scintilla of evil, and nothing of wrong or injury, to the corporation or its creditors, which would entitle the one to more consideration than the other, which would accord to one rights denied to the other, or which would admit of a preference in the payment of the debt of the one, and condemn as fraudulent a preference in the payment of the debt of the other.

A step further in unfolding this question and case: The expectations of the officers and managers of the corporation, entertained at the time of borrowing the money on the faith of the director, as to keeping the corporation a going concern and continuing indefinitely to carry on its business, are disappointed. They find that, notwithstanding the personal efforts of the director in pledging his credit to raise money for the business and creditors of the concern, the corporation cannot keep its head above water, but must discontinue its business, cease to be a going concern, and apply its assets to the payment of its liabilities. Among these liabilities they find the debt due its director for money borrowed, and a debt due a stranger for property purchased. The assets are sufficient to pay one in full and a percentage only on the other. The debts were equally just and bona fide in their inception. The corporation and its creditors have been equally benefited by each of the transactions by which these debts, respectively, were incurred. Neither is tainted by any infirmative circumstance whatever. There is no more abstract justice in paying the stranger in full to the exclusion of the director than in paying the director in full to the exclusion of the stranger. If one may be so paid, so may the other, upon every conceivable consideration of justice and right. That the stranger creditor may be so paid to the exclusion of the director creditor nobody denies. Indeed, there is a sort of alacrity and joyousness in many of the authorities so holding, as if the director creditor had been guilty of some enormous wrong or crime in advancing his money to the corporation for the primary benefit of its stranger creditors without reward or the hope thereof, and he and his claim for simple reimbursement were unclean and unrighteous things before the law. That the director creditor may be so paid is strenuously denied by many authorities, sometimes with an acerbity of statement and a bitterness of denunciation which happily are rarely found in juridical writings. And why may the director creditor not be so preferred and paid? Confessedly, his debt is a just one. Confessedly, the corporation, its business, and its creditors are benefited by the consideration of it as fully as by the consideration of the debt due the stranger creditor. Confessedly, under a general assignment by the corporation he would be entitled to share upon the same footing as the stranger creditor. Confessedly, indeed, in every contingency and under all circumstances and conditions the director creditor and his claim stand upon the same footing and have the same rights as the stranger creditor and his claim, except only that, as is insisted, the corporation may prefer and pay the latter in full, while the preference and payment in full of the former is fraudulent and void. There is, we are firmly of the opinion, no reason whatever for this distinction, and we believe it can be so demonstrated.

Let us first examine the reasons which are advanced by the judges and writers who hold to that view. Nearly all of the adjudged cases which hold that an insolvent and failing corporation cannot convey property to its officers and directors in payment of their debts, in preference to the debts of stranger creditors, rest their conclusions entirely upon the ground that the assets of such corporation constitute a trust fund in the hands of its officers and managers as trustees for the payment of its debts, and that such trustees cannot pay themselves in preference to other creditors. We content ourselves upon this point by saying that this "trust-fund doctrine" has been utterly repudiated in this state in a thoroughly considered case, and by an opinion prepared with considerable care and research, in which all the judges of this court concurred. O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 28 L. R. A. 707. But, leaving the trust-fund doctrine out of the case, it is sought to rest the conclusion that the transfer to a director involved in this case is fraudulent upon other grounds, being the same to which a text writer or two and perhaps some courts have referred a like conclusion. And what are they?

In the first place, the notion is advanced that such a transfer involves the reservation of a benefit to somebody,—whether to the corporation, or to the director creditor, or to the other creditors, is not made at all clear in the statement of the general proposition, and, when a more concrete statement is ventured upon, the identity of the person or entity receiving an undue benefit becomes more and more uncertain. And we do not hesitate to maintain that no benefit is, in such transaction, reserved, or in any way inured, to anybody beyond what the law clearly and fully contemplates, allows, and approves. What is a benefit reserved which will vitiate the transfer of property by an insolvent and failing debtor in the payment of a debt? Is it not, in the nature of things, an undue benefit? Is it not essentially and necessarily the securing of some advantage beyond and in addition to the satisfaction of the debt sought to be paid? Can there be any such thing as the reservation of a benefit when the whole effect of the transaction is the payment of a just and honest debt by the transfer to the creditor of property precisely equal in value to the amount of the debt? By such transaction there are benefits, of course, inuring to each party, but not such as the law condemns, or as afford any ground for complaint on the part of other creditors. The debtor is benefited by the liquidation of his liability, and the creditor is benefited by receiving the money which he is entitled to receive. But these are not undue or vitiating benefits. They contravene no principle of law or rule of moral action, but to the contrary, mark the accomplishment of the ends of the law in the premises, in a manner not inconsistent with abstract justice or with any tenet of sound morals. It is of no sort of consequence what the relations aliunde of the debtor and creditor are personally, or in estate, or by contract. They may stand to each other as father to son, or brother to brother, or husband to wife, or principal to agent, or vice versa, and even as partners, but for a consideration to be hereafter adverted to. Whatever else and cumulative may be the relations of the parties, if one owes the other a just debt he may, whether solvent or insolvent, pay that debt by the transfer of commensurate property, without impeachment upon any legal or moral ground.

The suggestion that a director or stockholder creditor receives a benefit in addition to the payment of his debt, in that thereby the corporation is relieved of the liability, and his holdings of stock are enhanced in value, is palpably and obviously without the least shadow of merit. The stock can have no value to the prejudice of any creditor. All creditors must be paid before any of the assets of the company can go to its stockholders. An insolvent and failing corporation has not, and can never have, anything to go to its shareholders; and the payment of one or more debts, to the exclusion of others, cannot possibly result in giving a value to its stock, and thereby collaterally benefiting the director creditor whose debt is paid. And if it could be conceived that an insolvent and failing corporation could pay its debts and have assets over to form a basis of stock value, who would there be to complain of the benefit thus accruing to its officers and stockholders whose debts had been paid along with others? It is only creditors who can complain of undue benefits secured to the debtor or other creditors in the transfer of property in preferential payment of debts; and, in the impossible case suggested, there would be no creditors, and hence nobody to be injured or prejudiced, and hence no wrong or injury done or suffered. One just and honest debt, it seems necessary to remark, is as just and honest as any other just and honest debt, and may be paid in the same way, under the same conditions. The whole end of the law is that all the property of an insolvent debtor shall be applied to his debts. The debtor may be a father, son, brother, husband, wife, principal, agent, corporation, or individual. Whatever the outside relations are, the law requires only that his assets shall go to his creditors, and does not require that they shall go to them ratably, but only that for each dollar in value of such assets a dollar of honest indebtedness shall be paid, wholly irrespective of whether the debt so paid is due to one creditor of many, or to all of the many. We draw a line. Upon one side of it is the insolvent debtor and his insufficient property. On the other are ranged his creditors and their claims. The law is simply and merely that that property must pass to the other side of that line, to somebody on the other side, and to the payment, in whole or part, as the case may be, of some, to the exclusion of other, claims on that side, or of all of them ratably. The property must go to the indebtedness. It must reduce the aggregate of the claims of the several creditors considered as one gross sum, and though it thus reduce the gross indebtedness only by satisfying in full a particular item entering into the aggregate, by paying one claim in full and nothing on the others, the law is satisfied; its ends have been met; its purposes effectuated; no undue benefit has been reserved; no undue advantage has been taken; and it lies in no man's mouth to complain.

But it is said that "the officers of an insolvent corporation are in a position to know the real condition of the corporation, an advantage not attainable by creditors generally," and for this reason preferences in the payment of their debts should not be allowed. Has it ever been suggested before that better knowledge of a debtor's pecuniary condition by a particular creditor was any ground for declaring fraudulent and setting aside a preferential transfer to such creditor? Was such a doctrine ever ruled by any court? To the contrary, has it not been, over and over again, held by this court that, so long as all the creditor receives is the fair equivalent of his honest debt, his knowledge of his debtor's insolvency, and even his perfect consciousness that the effect of the transfer to him will necessarily be to leave other creditors unpaid and without hope of payment, are matters wholly apart from the issue,—wholly irrelevant and inconsequent? Knowledge on the part of the creditor, however accurate and exclusive, of the debtor's precarious situation, and of the injurious effects of a proposed transfer of property to such creditor, whether such knowledge be incident to the relations existing between the parties or not, is absolutely without a scintilla of influence upon a transfer of property, at a fair valuation, to pay an honest and adequate debt. Given the transfer at such a valuation in payment of such a debt, the law concerns itself in no degree whatever with the creditor's knowledge or information, or even with his purposes and intent. For whatever he knows or intends, he has taken only that which he is entitled to take under the law, and hence, in the eyes of the law, he has done no wrong.

Again, it is contended that the officers and managers of an insolvent and failing corporation must be held to the same line of duties, and subjected to the same incapacities and liabilities, as partners or mere members of an association of individuals. There is, in our opinion, no law or reason in this position. The fundamental, and in the present connection all-important, difference between the managers of an insolvent and failing corporation, on the one hand, and partners and members of associations, on the other, lies in the fact that the corporate managers are not liable, in any sense, for the debts of the corporation, and partners and members of associations are individually liable to the fullest extent for all the debts of their partnership or association. The stranger creditor of a partnership or association is entitled, as against the members thereof, to take and apply to his debt, not only all the property of the partnership or association, but also all the property of each of its members, to the entire exclusion of their claims as individuals against the partnership debtor. And, indeed, there is a vitiating infirmity in a debtor and creditor transaction between a partnership and a partner from its very inception, so far as other creditors are interested; for if it could be conceived that a partner advancing money to his firm stands upon the same footing as other creditors, abstractly speaking, the loan going, as it would, to reduce partnership liabilities, would operate to cut down the advancing partner's ultimate individual liability, and, on the assumption that he would be entitled to have the loan refunded to him, the effect would be to reduce his liabilities as an individual partner by a transaction in which he in fact has paid or parted with nothing. Of course, this cannot be allowed; and this view of such a transaction is but another way of reaching the inevitable conclusion that the partner in such case is not a creditor of his firm, in any sense, against the claims of outside creditors. The fact manifestly is that the contribution of money or property to a partnership by a partner beyond his share under the partnership articles is, especially when the firm is insolvent, in the nature, and has the effect, of a payment by such partner on his individual liability for the partnership debts, and is essentially not the creation of a debt from the firm to him, except as between the other partners and himself; and this is so, of course, as to voluntary associations and their members.

Now, as to corporations and their officers and stockholders: No officer or stockholder of a corporation is at all, or in any case, liable for any debt of the corporation. Nobody, we suppose, will question this proposition. If an officer or stockholder lends his money to the corporation, it does not go in reduction of his individual liability, because he is under no such liability. It is not in the nature of the payment of a debt to the creditors of the corporation, because he owes them no debt. Neither he nor the corporation is benefited or injured either by the loan or its repayment, except to the extent there might be benefit or detriment to the parties if the loan were made by a stranger; and, confessedly, the loan creates a debt from the corporation to the advancing officer or stockholder, not only as between the corporation and him, but also as between him and stranger creditors of the company. And this, whether the corporation be solvent or insolvent; in a prosperous condition or in failing circumstances. He may sue and recover his debt in full, whatever the effect of such recovery on the claims of other creditors. If the corporation assigns or is being wound up, he, like every other creditor, is entitled to share in its assets. The corporation may pay him as it may pay any other creditor, though the effect be to disable it to pay other creditors in full, since his is an honest and just debt, and the whole end of the law is the application of corporate assets, either ratably or preferentially, to the payment of honest and just debts. And the quo modo is immaterial. The payment may be made in money or by the transfer of property. So long as the honest creditor gets no more, either in money or property, than his just debt, no undue benefit is reserved to the corporation or inures to the officer creditor, and no detriment, in legal contemplation, results to other creditors; no wrong has been done to anybody; nobody has been unduly advantaged; and the transaction is lawful, honest, and valid.

The suggestion that a transfer by directors to one of their number, of property in payment of a debt, is invalid as being the act of the party accepting the transfer, has no merit, dissociated from the exploded trust-fund doctrine. On that doctrine the directors become trustees, and on the principle that a trustee cannot transfer the trust estate to himself as an individual is rested the further proposition that directors of an insolvent corporation cannot, being trustees, transfer its property to themselves in payment of debts which the corporation owes them. But with the elimination of the main proposition, that such directors are trustees, falls the dependent proposition that they cannot prefer themselves in the payment of debts. With the trust-fund doctrine out of the way, the separate corporate entity continues to exist for all purposes, wholly unaffected by the fact of insolvency, and its functions must continue to be performed. These functions are performed by the directors for and in the name of the corporation, and their official acts are not their individual acts at all, but the acts of the corporation; and, not being trustees for creditors, their acts, when assailed by creditors, are not subject to the rule that, if a trustee contracts with himself in reference to the trust estate, his acts are void, at the election of, or as against, the cestui que trust. There being in such case no trustee, and no relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the directors of the corporation and its creditors, the matter stands thus: A corporation, without assets to pay all its debts, owes its directors and it owes strangers. The debts of the two classes of creditors are equally honest and just, and stand upon the same footing, in law and in equity. The corporation has an undoubted right to pay some creditors to the exclusion of others. Any creditor has the undoubted right to accept a preference. The corporation has the same right to pay its directors as it has to pay strangers. The directors have the same right to preferential payment as do strangers. To the exercise of this undoubted right to make preferences it is essential that the corporation must act. It can only act through the directors. If the directors cannot act to the end of preferring their own just debts,—having the undoubted right to such preference,—the preference cannot be made, and the undoubted right of the corporation to make it, and of the directors to accept it, is denied and defeated. The ends of the law, that the assets of the corporation shall be applied to such of its debts as the corporation prefers, are defeated. And for what? Upon what ground? Not that the directors are under any incapacity to prefer themselves which can be referred to any principle of law. Not that they are trustees; for they are not trustees for the creditors. Not that they are agents of other creditors; for they are not such agents. Not that they occupy any other fiduciary relation to other creditors; for, being only the agents of the corporation, and, in that capacity only the trustees for stockholders alone, they bear and can bear to the creditors, who have to do with the corporation as an entity, and not with the shareholders at all, only the relation of the agent of a debtor to his creditor,—a relation which is obviously as devoid of every attribute of a fiduciary character as the direct relation of debtor and creditor. Upon what ground, then, we repeat, is rested the idea that directors cannot prefer themselves? Getting away from the trust-fund doctrine, it is based upon the bald assertion that the director in such case is acting both for the corporation and himself in contracting in his representative capacity with himself as an individual; and this, it is said, the law will not allow. That is the sole ground put forward. It cannot for a moment be sustained upon principle or well-considered authority. The results claimed do not follow. The contract of a director with himself as an individual, and the sale of corporate property by directors to themselves as individuals, is not void, even as against the corporation itself or the stockholders. Upon all reason and authority, it is perfectly valid, if not disaffirmed by the corporation itself or the stockholders. And the election belongs exclusively to the corporation and stockholders. If they do not exercise it, the transaction must stand. Strangers, of course, cannot question it, for they are wholly without interest in the premises. General creditors cannot question it, since no right of theirs has been violated by it. They cannot hold the directors to account as fiduciaries, as there are no fiduciary relations between them. As creditors, their only right is to have the corporate assets applied to just corporate debts, and this right is not impinged upon, but, to the contrary, fully conserved, by the payment of the just debts of the directors. They have no lien upon corporate assets. They have no rights of ownership in corporate property. They cannot claim their debts should be paid in full, to the total or partial exclusion of other equally honest and just debts. The property not being impressed with a trust in their favor, and standing, as they do, in no superior right to director creditors, they, the right of preference being recognized, have no shadow of right to insist upon even a pro rata application of the assets to all indebtedness. Their only right is to insist that all the assets shall be applied preferentially or otherwise, to the indebtedness; and this right is absolutely subserved, as we have seen, by the payment of director creditors to the exclusion of stranger creditors. They have no right to insist upon the equal payment of all debts pro rata. The right of preference, which every debtor confessedly has, necessarily involves favoritism,—the right of choice of one creditor, and of any one creditor, to the exclusion of others. It is utterly inconsistent with all notions of equality, and, as a natural person may prefer his relatives and his friends to the exclusion of strangers, so an artificial person may prefer its friends and those occupying official relations to it to the exclusion of strangers.

There is, the writer thinks, no semblance of sound principle or well-considered authority for a different conclusion. It seems to him that those courts which have taken a different view have been largely moved thereto by a consideration of the danger of fraudulent claims being brought forward by directors, and of the facility afforded directors by their positions to establish such claims, rather than by any just consideration of any recognized principle of law or equity obtaining in the premises. They have allowed themselves to be driven to the denial of a right altogether because of a practical difficulty in mere matter of evidence. They deny an undoubted right to the directors, because, forsooth, the persons asserting the right have opportunities for deceiving the courts as to the existence of the facts upon which it rests. They deny the right, though proved beyond all peradventure in the particular case, because in other cases it may be supported by fraud and perjury. The same considerations are as applicable to other relations, and the courts might, with equal force and propriety, strike down all conveyances and transfers in payment of debts between parent and child, brother and brother, husband and wife, and the like, because those relations afford opportunities for simulation and fraud. Yet nobody pretends that such transfers in preferential payment of honest debts are under the ban of the law, as being constructively fraudulent. And no more upon reason and principle and well-considered authority can like transactions by directors be avoided on the ground that such officers have opportunities for fraud and simulation, which have, however, not been utilized in the particular case. It is not for the courts to be governed by such considerations. They are to ascertain the facts in each case, and to apply the law thereto, and the law is not to be changed in its application in a given case by the fact that to apply it as it exists might be to admit of difficulties of proof in another case. If the danger of administering the law as it is sufficiently great and imminent to require a change of the law, that is a matter for the legislature, and not for the courts. It is a question of legislative policy, and not of existing law.

We have considered this matter on principle at some length, because of its importance, and because it has been not a little mooted in this state. For the same reasons, we will now, at some length, refer to authorities sustaining the view we have declared. The first case to which we will invite attention, as well because of the ability of the court deciding it as because it is among older ones, is that of Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516. The opinion is by John F. Dillon, a judge and law-writer of national reputation for ability and learning. Buckingham & Co. were general creditors of a corporation. Buell was also a creditor, a director thereof, and its president. Buell participated with the other two directors, the presence of all three being necessary to a quorum, in a sale and transfer of the corporate property to himself in payment of the debt the corporation owed him. The transaction was assailed by Buckingham & Co. on the same grounds that are advanced by the corporation in the case at bar. Assuming Buell's participation as president and director in the sale to himself as an individual, Judge Dillon proceeds: "This makes it necessary to discuss the nature of the relations which Buell and the defendants, respectively, sustained to the corporation. In one respect, their relations were common and identical. They were both creditors. Their equities in this respect were equal and the same. Being an officer in the corporation did not deprive Buell of the right to enter into competition with other creditors and run a race of vigilance with them, availing himself in the contest of his superior knowledge and of the advantages of his position to obtain security for or payment of his debt. He has an advantage, it is true, but it is one which results from his position, and which is known to every person who deals with and extends credit to a corporation. This is one of the causes which have operated to bring corporate companies into discredit, and may constitute a good legislative reason for giving priority to outside creditors. But the legislature must furnish the remedy. That the act of Buell was not legally or constructively fraudulent in consequence of his being an officer or member of the corporation, see Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425, 444; Ang. & A. Corp. § 390; Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 386, 26 Am. Rep. 75; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Claghorn, Speers, Eq. 562. But, in addition to being a creditor, Buell sustained to the company the relation of a stockholder and director. Such companies are essentially partnerships, except in form. 'The directors are the trustees or managing partners, and the stockholders are the cestuis que trust, and have a joint interest in all of the property and effects of the corporation.' Per Walworth, Ch., in 44 L. R. A.

Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige, 222, 232, 24 Am. Dec. 212; Cunningham v. Pell, 6 Paige, 607; Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. 479, 10 Am. Dec. 273; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320. The corporation is an artificial person, owning its property and necessarily acting by its agents, and these agents are the directors. After much reflection, it seems to me that the correct view of Buell's position is this: He is a trustee and the beneficiaries are the corporation, or, in other words, the stockholders; or, what is in essence the same, he is an agent and the stockholders the principal. If this is the relation, then the rules of law applicable to purchasers by agents and trustees apply to the purchase in question. There is a manifest impropriety in allowing the same person to act as the agent of the seller and to become himself the buyer. There may be, in all such cases, a conflict between duty and interest. Acting for himself, Buell's interest would be to obtain payment. Acting for the best interests of the corporation, his disinterested and unbiased convictions of duty might be to advise against a sale of the entire property to one creditor or against any sale at all. It is in view of these considerations that 'the wise policy of the law hath put the sting of a disability into the temptation, as a defensive weapon against the strength of the danger which lies in the situation.' Even these principles would not, in my judgment, apply to the case, if there had been a quorum without Buell. Now, the purchase of property by an agent or trustee, or by any person acting in a fiduciary capacity, is not void ab origine and absolutely. It is voidable only. It is made subject to the right of the principal or beneficiary, in a reasonable time, to say that he is not satisfied with it. It is valid in equity as well as law, unless the parties interested repudiate it or complain of it, and these may set it aside without showing either fraud or injury. Bank of Old Dominion v. Dubuque & P. R. Co. 8 Iowa, 277, 74 Am. Dec. 302; Davous v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; Bostwick v. Atkins, 3 N. Y. 53, 60; 1 Parsons, Contr. 75, 76, and cases in note; [Fox v. Mackreth] 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 167; MacGregor v. Gardner, 14 Iowa, 326, 335. As the principal or parties interested may confirm the sale, a mere stranger cannot make the objection that the trustee was the purchaser or that the sale was irregular. The remedy belongs only 'to persons who had an interest in the property before the sale, and no other person can apply to set aside the sale.' Hawley v. Cramer, 4 Cow. 717, 744; Edmondson v. Welsh, 27 Ala. 578; Foster v. Goree, 5 Ala. 428; Hannah v. Carrington, 18 Ark. 85; Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 581; Greenleaf v. Queen, 1 Pet. 139, 7 L. ed. 85; Hillegass v. Hillegass, 5 Pa. 97; Wightman v. Doe, Reynolds, 24 Miss. 675. Adopting this as the true view, it follows that Buell's participation in the sale and purchase of the property did not make the same void. The utmost effect it could have would be to make the sale voidable at the instance of any person having an interest in the property sold. But the defendants, being at that time general creditors, and having no interest in or lien upon the property, and there being no actual fraud, are not entitled to avoid the sale simply on the ground that Buell was one of the three directors necessary to constitute a quorum. This, in my judgment, is the correct view to be taken of the case. But adjudged cases go farther (and it is possible some of them go too far), and sustain the purchase of Buell on broader grounds. I will refer briefly to some of them. Thus, it is held that if three persons are appointed a committee 'to finish and repair a schoolhouse' (Geer v. 10th School Dist. 6 Vt. 76), or to superintend the building of a church, they may 'as effectually bind the society by a contract concluded with one of their own number as with a stranger.' These cases were confirmed in Rogers v. Danby Universalist Soc. 19 Vt. 187, where the court says: 'There is perhaps some incongruity in thus allowing a person to act in a double capacity as an agent for a corporation contracting with himself. But, whether a majority or the whole act, the party contracted with, as well as any other, may participate in the bargain. Partiality so gross as to amount to fraud will, when sustained, defeat the contract.' In these cases the court held the objection not good, even when made by the corporation. The case of Hayward v. Pilgrim Soc. 21 Pick. 270, shows that where the trustees are creditors of the society, and therefore interested, they may nevertheless vote that the treasurer execute a note to them for the amount, and it is valid."

In Planters' Bank v. Whittle, 78 Va. 737, like questions arose and were decided in the same way, the court, by Lewis, P., saying: "There is no proof of actual fraud in the transactions involved, but the appellees insist that the assets of an insolvent corporation are a trust fund for the payment of its debts; that the directors are trustees for the creditors, whose duty it is to apply the assets ratably for the benefit of the general creditors, and that therefore they can make no lawful preferences in favor of themselves, or in favor of those creditors for whose claims they are individually responsible. That the directors of a corporation are bound to act in discharge of their duties with prudence, vigilance, and fidelity, and to apply its assets, in the event of insolvency, for the benefit of the creditors in preference to the claims of stockholders or other persons, is a proposition which is not, and cannot be, disputed. But that they are technically trustees for the creditors, and bound to apply the assets ratably among the general creditors, is a proposition which has never been judicially affirmed in this state, and is in conflict with the great weight of authority elsewhere. Much stress is laid by the appellees on the case of Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 731. In that case the well-established principle was asserted that the capital stock of the corporation, especially its unpaid subscriptions, is a trust fund for the benefit of the general creditors, which cannot be withdrawn from their reach by any act or device on the part of the directors. But no such doctrine as is here contended for was there laid down. On the contrary, the court recognized a distinction between the capital stock of a corporation and its ordinary assets, with which, it was said, the directors may deal as they choose. It is not only settled that the directors may make preferences between creditors, but such preferences may be made in their own favor when they themselves are creditors of the corporation. Of course, in such cases they must act with the utmost good faith, and the transactions, to be upheld, must be free from the taint of fraud or suspicion. This was distinctly held in the well-considered case of Buell v. Buckinham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516. There the controversy was between a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation and one of its directors. An execution in favor of the former was levied on certain property which the latter claimed by purchase in discharge of a debt due him by the company. The property was sold and conveyed to him pursuant to an order made by the directors, at a meeting at which he was present and voted, his presence being necessary to make a quorum for business. The transaction was assailed by the judgment creditor as illegal and void, but it was held to be valid. . . . In Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 385, 26 Am. Dec. 75, a mortgage by a corporation was held good which was assailed by creditors, on the ground, among others, that it was in favor of the president and treasurer of the company, and who were present at the meeting of the directors when the mortgage was authorized and executed. Chief Justice Gibson delivered the opinion of the court. He said: "That a director may sustain the relation of debtor or creditor in regard to the corporation, and in the latter receive a security, is a proposition which requires not the aid of an argument, and here the existence of a meritorious debt is not disputed." In Ashhurst's Appeal, 60 Pa. 290, Judge Strong, for the court, said: "There must be many things which directors can do for their individual benefit which are binding upon a corporation of which they are directors. If they have advanced money, I cannot doubt they may pay themselves with corporate funds. If they have become liable as sureties for the corporation, they may provide for their indemnity. And though, ordinarily, the law frowns upon contracts made by them in their representative character with themselves as private persons, such contracts are not necessarily void; they are carefully watched, and their fairness must be shown."

The case of Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Claghorn, decided by the court of appeals of South Carolina as far back as 1844, is to the same effect. There it was insisted by general creditors that a mortgage executed to directors of a corporation to indemnify them against liability as indorsers on the company's paper was constructively fraudulent, on the ground that in the execution of the mortgage the directors contracted with themselves. The validity of the transfer by the directors to themselves was sustained, the court saying: "There is, upon a superficial view, something very startling in this, if the facts be true, and they probably are as to some, perhaps all, of the indorsers, but the alarm will cease when we take into consideration the motives and influences which operate upon men to lend their credit to assist individuals or corporations to pursue their enterprises. The directors of a corporation ought to be, and generally are, better informed as to its liabilities and resources than anyone else, and if they, having the means, refuse to aid them in their operations by the loan of money or credit, no one else will be found to do it; and I need not add what is known to all having any experience that an overweening confidence in their capacity to manage the affairs of a corporation, and a mistaken view of the state of its finances, have often involved the stockholders, and especially the directors, in distress and ruin. No man likes to give up an enterprise in which he has embarked, until he is satisfied that it cannot succeed, and this feeling is strengthened by the numbers that are embarked in it. Few are willing to recede while there are any to persevere. Now, there is nothing, either in law or equity, which forbids a member, or even a director, of a corporation from contracting with it, and, like any other individual, he has a right to prescribe his own terms, which the corporation is at liberty to accept or reject, and when the contract is concluded, he stands in the same relation to the other creditors of the corporation as any other individual would under the same circumstances. When the question of priority arises, it must depend on the bona fides of the transaction, fraud or no fraud. If by greater diligence, and without fraud, he has fairly gained an advantage over the other creditors, he is entitled to retain it; and I cannot, from the evidence in this case, detect the slightest ground of suspicion that there was any fraud on the part of the indorsers in obtaining the mortgage to secure the debt of the steamboat company." Speers, Eq. 545, 562.

The supreme court of Vermont committed itself many years ago to the same doctrine. Speaking to the questions we have before us here, for that court, that eminent jurist and commentator, Isaac F. Redfield, used the following language: "But it does not occur to us that there is any just ground for charging the defendants, with the exception of Cummings, perhaps, with any actual or constructive fraud. As to constructive fraud, it is not competent, certainly, to predicate this of the mere fact of a stockholder's availing himself of his superior advantages to obtain security for debts due to himself, to the exclusion of other debtors. The stockholder and the stranger, who are both creditors of a corporation, no doubt stand in very unequal positions. But it is an inequality which the law allows, and which is understood by those who contract with corporations, and one which will always tend, more or less, to bring in doubt the credit of such bodies. But it is a subject with which this court has nothing to do. Some modification of the law upon this subject has been attempted, I believe—to what purpose, time must determine. We are content to leave that subject as it is. And while we would, no doubt, guard the exercise of such a privilege, in the stockholders of a corporation, with some degree of severity, we must not forget that all just rights are entitled to a fair consideration in a court of justice. We should not, then, watch the exercise of a right with so much strictness as to declare its mere exercise to be a constructive fraud." Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425, 444.

The supreme court of Connecticut unequivocally declares the same doctrines. In the case of Smith v. Skeary, 47 Conn. 47, 53, 54, the following is the opinion of the court on the questions now before us: "The plaintiff Hotchkiss, and Smith, the intestate of the other plaintiff, were stockholders and directors of the Star Tool Company, a joint-stock corporation. They were creditors to the corporation to an amount exceeding $6,000, which was justly due and unsecured. On the 15th day of December, 1876, pursuant to a vote of the board of directors, there was transferred to them from the corporation, in payment of their claim, personal property, including that embraced in the present suit, of the value of about $6,000. The corporation was in fact insolvent, although it was supposed by the parties at the time that it would be able to pay all its debts and liabilities. The transaction was in entire good faith, with no intention to defraud creditors, and there was no fraud unless the same arises as matter of law from the facts found. We are unable to discover any principle of law which renders the transaction fraudulent. The corporation had a right, and it was its duty, to pay this debt. These creditors had a perfect right to receive pay in money or goods, and the fact that they were stockholders and directors did not modify or abridge that right, so long as there was no actual fraudulent intent. The fact, if it be a fact, that it operated to prefer these creditors, is not sufficient at common law to stamp it as fraudulent, for the common law favored the vigilant, and a creditor might lawfully obtain a preference. It does not become fraudulent under our insolvent laws, because no proceedings in insolvency were instituted in due time, so that the case cannot be brought within the operation of those laws. The consideration was good and adequate, so that there is no badge of fraud in that respect."

In a later Iowa case the principles declared by Dillon in Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516, were again announced and reaffirmed, the court saying: "May a director enforce such a debt? We understand that he may become a creditor of the corporation, may advance it money, or sell it property, and obligations of the corporation executed therefor may be enforced by him. In this regard he occupies no different position from that of any other creditor; and if the debt he holds was contracted in good faith, and there is an absence of fraud on his part, he may take security or payment though the corporation be insolvent, and he may thereby acquire priority in the payment of his claim. Counsel for defendants admit this proposition, with an exception in the case of the insolvency of the corporation. They insist that the directors of an insolvent corporation cannot take from it security, by mortgage or other conveyance creating a lien upon its property, even though given in good faith and without fraud in the transaction. We are not prepared to admit this proposition. A creditor may accept payment or security from an insolvent debtor free from any claim of other creditors. A corporation may make payment of its debts, or give its property in security therefor, just as a natural person may do. If, therefore, a director holds the indebtedness of an insolvent corporation, he may take payment or security in a good-faith and honest transaction. No reason can be given why a director who holds a valid debt against his corporation may not, though it be insolvent, in a fair and honest way, take its property in security. If the property, money, or other consideration of the debt was fairly used for the benefit of the corporation, was added to its assets, or used in its business, it would be unreasonable to hold that the director is deprived of rights and remedies held by other creditors. It is not shown, in the answer of defendants, that there was any bad faith or dishonest practices on the part of the creditors for whom plaintiff is trustee in becoming creditors of the plow company, and taking security from it. It is true that the courts will scan with care, and even with suspicion, such transactions, and demand that they be accompanied by the utmost good faith." Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697, 701, 59 Am. Rep. 461.

And in a yet later case the same court uses the following language: "Counsel for the appellant contends that the organization of the company by the stockholders of the old corporation was for the purpose of transferring the property of the old organization in fraud of creditors." It is not alleged in the petition that such sale and conveyance were made with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding creditors, but that what was done amounted to an unlawful preference. In other words, we understand the claim to be that what was done amounts to a legal fraud, as distinguished from an actual fraudulent intent. If wrong in this, we find, from the evidence, that the defendants did not intend to defraud anyone. Such was not their purpose, but they honestly believed they had the legal right to procure the mortgage and thus secure themselves, although other creditors of the corporation were not secured or paid; and whether they had this right is the important question in this case. The evidence satisfies us that the Marshall County Company was indebted to the mortgagees in the sum of $10,000 at the time the mortgage was executed, and that such indebtedness was contracted in good faith. The mortgagees, it is true, were officers and stockholders of the corporation; but, notwithstanding this fact, they had the right to procure the corporation to execute the mortgage, although other creditors of the corporation are unable to obtain payment of their indebtedness. Corporations can make contracts and transfer property possessing the same powers in such respects as private individuals. Code, § 1059 [par. 6]. Such is the rule in the absence of a statute, and therefore it has the right to prefer one creditor to another. 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 802. The fact that the preference is exercised in favor of directors or shareholders of the corporation is immaterial, although the director or shareholder may have voted for the proposition, and the security given was to secure an indebtedness to himself. Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697, 59 Am. Rep. 461. It is insisted that this case is distinguished from those cited, because of the fact that all of the officers, directors, and shareholders voted in favor of the creation of the indebtedness and the execution of the mortgage. We do not believe this can or should make any difference. The material question is one of right and power, and, if this exists, it is immaterial whether this power is exercised by all or a part of the persons in whom the power is vested." Warfield v. Marshall County Canning Co. 72 Iowa, 666, 669.

The supreme court of Missouri fully supports all the views we have set forth in this opinion. Among the many cases decided by that court upholding the right of director creditors of an insolvent corporation to pay themselves by a transfer of corporate property, we refer specially to two among, if not, the latest. The opinion of the court in the case of Schufeldt v. Smith, 131 Mo. 280, 286, 29 L. R. A. 830 et seq., is as follows: "Most of the questions involved in this record have, in some recent cases in this court, been given careful and exhaustive consideration. The investigations given the subject have been more labored and thorough on account of apparent want of harmony in some of the previous decisions of this court, as well as on account of the diversity of opinion in other jurisdictions. The conclusion reached by each of the divisions, which received the concurrence of all the members, may be briefly given, in the language of the syllabi prepared by the judge who wrote one of the opinions, as follows: 'A corporation in failing circumstances may . . . prefer one creditor to another in discharging its obligations, if such preference is made in good faith, while the property of the company remains in its possession, unaffected by liens or by process of law. . . . Mere insolvency of a corporation does not, of itself, transform its assets into a trust fund for the equal benefit of all its creditors.' Alberger v. National Bank of Commerce, 123 Mo. 313; Slavens v. Cook Drug Co. 128 Mo. 341; Waggoner-Gates Milling Co. v. Ziegler-Zaiss Commission Co. 128 Mo. 473. . . . It would seem to follow logically, from these decisions, that a preference may be made to a director for a debt directly due him from the corporation, unless it would be defeated by his own act in voting himself the preference. But it is insisted with much earnestness, and argued with great ability, that the directors had no power to bind the corporation to an agreement made with themselves and in which they had a personal interest, and that therefore the resolution of the board of directors authorizing preferences to be given the members thereof over other creditors, and the deed of trust executed in pursuance thereof, were absolutely void. This contention must rest upon one of two theories; either that the directors of a corporation are trustees for its creditors, and its assets constitute a trust fund which they must apply ratably toward the satisfaction of all the debts, or that such a transaction is upon its face constructively fraudulent. As has been seen, the so-called trust-fund theory, as applied to a corporation while dominion over its property is retained, is not recognized in this state as being sound. Nothing additional need be said on that subject. The board of directors are undoubtedly trustees for the corporation and stockholders, and when acting for them, are bound to exercise the utmost good faith. Any attempt, in dealing with its property or affairs, to secure themselves personal advantages over other stockholders, should, at least, be subject to the most rigorous scrutiny. Hill v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 119 Mo. 9, and cases cited. But it cannot be said, as a correct proposition of law, that officers of a corporation cannot themselves, and in their own names, contract with it. To so hold would virtually deny to corporations the credit upon which so much of the business of the country is transacted and which is so essential to success. If the stockholders and officers of corporations are not permitted to advance money to them, or to indorse for them, without subjecting themselves to such disadvantages, they would be deprived of their most valuable source of credit. A corporation naturally looks to those interested in its affairs for accommodations. If directors can lend the corporation money or indorse for it, they should certainly have the same right to collect the debts or secure themselves as is accorded to other creditors. The cases cited abundantly show that a corporation, so long as it has control of its property, though insolvent, may, when acting honestly, prefer one creditor to another. A mortgage, then, giving such preference, is not constructively fraudulent. Neither the corporation nor the other stockholders are injured by the preference given. To defeat them, actual fraud should be shown. The honest debts all stand, and should stand, on equal footing. All the creditors should have equal rights to enter in the race of diligence. The fact that the race may be unequal should not deprive the winner of his reward. An individual debtor can prefer his family, his neighbors, and his friends. If the preferred debt is honest, the preference cannot be impeached, though the wife of the debtor secure the advantage. Hart v. Leete, 104 Mo. 338; Riley v. Vaughan, 116 Mo. 176. No reason can be seen why a corporation may not also prefer its friends. There is no more equity in allowing an individual debtor to prefer his creditor wife or children than in allowing a corporation to prefer its stockholders and officers. To permit equities to control would defeat all preferences. While the owner of property retains the power of its disposal, he may apply it to the payment of any honest debt, is the rule upon which the right to make preferences among creditors rests. The rule should apply as well to corporations as to individuals, and any change should be made by the legislature, and not by the courts. If the debt is an honest one, and the corporation had the power to contract it, it has the right to pay or secure it, and no fraud can be imputed to it from the fact that it is paid or secured in preference to another. 'It may be conceded,' said Judge Taft in a recent case, 'that the trust relation justifies and requires courts of equity to subject preferences by an insolvent corporation of its own directors to the closest scrutiny, and places the burden upon the preferred director of showing beyond question that he had a bona fide debt against the corporation; but we do not see why, if a corporation may prefer one creditor over others, it may not prefer a director who is a bona fide creditor. Preferences are not based on any equitable principle. They go by favor, and, as an individual may prefer among his creditors his friends and relatives, so a corporation may prefer its friends.' Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 16 U. S. App. 221, 58 Fed. Rep. loc. cit. 292, 7 C. C. A. 231, 22 L. R. A. 817. See also Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562, and cases cited."

And in the yet later case of Butler v. Harrison Land & Min. Co. 139 Mo. 467, the following propositions, as shown by the headnotes, were laid down: "(1) The transfer by an insolvent corporation of its property to its directors, who are bona fide creditors because of money previously advanced by them to the company, is valid as against general creditors. (2) The law does not limit the power of a corporation to transfer its property by fair dealing, in the interest of its stockholders, so long as the corporation undissolved, holds the title thereto, and the possession thereof; nor is it true that, as soon as a condition of insolvency is approached, its property is impressed with a trust for the general good. (3) A corporation can transfer its property to its directors to pay money advanced to it by them in the same way that it can use that property to pay the president or other officer for services performed by him in managing the business. (4) The trial court committed error in holding that land honestly transferred by a corporation to its directors in liquidation of subsisting debts was impressed with a lien or trust in behalf of a third party who had obtained a judgment against the company after such transfer. (5) The directors of a corporation, when bona fide creditors, stand on a footing equally as good as its general creditors; and, if such corporation has in good faith transferred its entire property to such directors in payment of an honest debt, a general creditor whose claim was not a lien at the time of the transfer has no remedy."

In New Jersey, also, it is the established law that a sale, at a fair valuation, by the directors, of the property of an insolvent corporation, to themselves, in payment of just debts due them, is valid as against stranger creditors whose debts in consequence go unpaid. Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 41 N. J. Eq. 635, 643-645.

The supreme court of Arkansas, speaking by Riddick, J., after utterly repudiating, as we have done, the idea that the assets of an insolvent corporation constitute a trust fund for its creditors, proceeds to discuss the right of such corporation to prefer its directors in the payment of debts, as follows: "But it is contended that the funds of an insolvent corporation are in the hands of the directors, to be disbursed on their unbiased and impartial judgment, and that, when personal interest or individual gain is an element subserved through their preference, it should be set aside, as being in contravention of sound equitable principles. To support this contention, counsel cite, among other cases, the well-considered case of Mallory v. Mallory Wheeler Co., 61 Conn. 131. In that case the directors of a corporation undertook to use their official position for their own benefit, and to increase their salary, to the injury of the interests of the corporation. The familiar rule that no one acting in a fiduciary capacity shall be permitted to make use of that relation for his own benefit, at the expense of the interests of his principal, was invoked by the corporation and applied by the court. There can be no doubt that the rule was properly applied in that case, for the directors are agents, and, to a certain extent, trustees, of the corporation. They will not be allowed to enter into engagements in which they have a personal interest conflicting with the interests of their principal, whose interests they are bound to protect. The rule is of wide application, and applies, as was held in that case, to agents, partners, guardians, executors, and to trustees generally, as well as to the directors and managing officers of corporations. If personal engagements hostile to the interest of their principals are entered into by persons holding such fiduciary relations, they are not, in law, absolutely void, but voidable, at the election of their principals. We do not see how that rule can apply in this case, for the party complaining here is not the corporation, but certain creditors of the corporation. The directors of a corporation are neither trustees nor agents of the creditors, and they do not occupy a fiduciary relation towards them, and therefore the rule does not apply. Although there are expressions in many of the cases cited by counsel that seem to support the contention that, even when an insolvent corporation may make preferences, the directors of such corporation must be free from personal bias in disbursing its assets and making such preferences, yet we do not believe that such a rule has any sound reason to rest upon. The very fact that preferences are made shows always that the party making them is biased more or less towards the person in whose favor they are made. As long as preferences are allowed to be made by insolvent debtors, they will be dictated more or less by the personal bias of the person making them. The individual debtor, when insolvent and forced to make an assignment, generally prefers his friends, and often members of his own family. The home creditor and neighbor is preferred at the expense of the nonresident one, perhaps equally deserving. So, when this drygoods company came to make an assignment, it is not strange that, in making preferences, it should favor the home creditors. The contention that the estate of an insolvent debtor should be disbursed by someone acting without bias or personal interest would apply almost as well to the case of an assignment by an insolvent individual or partnership as to that of a corporation, and, if adopted, would result in forbidding all preferences in assignments by insolvent debtors,—a result that might be productive of much good, but it is one that the courts must leave to the wisdom of the legislature to accomplish; for, to quote the language of Judge Caldwell in Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co., the right to make preferences 'is too firmly embedded in our system of jurisprudence to be overthrown by judicial decision, and it can no more be overthrown by the courts in its application to corporations than to individuals.' Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 684. That was a case that arose in this state, and was controlled by the laws of this state, and, after an examination of the authorities, the court held that an insolvent corporation of this state may prefer its creditors, whether they be officers of the corporation or strangers. 'The doctrine established by the best-considered cases and by the Supreme Court of the United States,' says Judge Caldwell in his opinion in that case, 'is that the mere fact that creditors of a corporation are directors and stockholders does not prevent their taking security to themselves as individuals to secure a bona fide loan of money previously made to such corporation, and used by it in conducting its legitimate business.'" Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562, 578.

The same position has been taken by the circuit court of appeals of the sixth circuit. In Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 16 U. S. App. 221, 58 Fed. Rep. 236, 7 C. C. A. 225, 22 L. R. A. 817, the court, by Taft, circuit judge, says: "We now come to the question whether the fact that Harry W. Long, and W. J. Long, Jr. [directors] were interested as guarantors and indorsers upon most of the notes secured by the mortgages, and that they were directors and stockholders in the corporation, and as such voted to give the mortgages, renders the mortgages invalid. . . . Several cases have been cited, some of them decisions of circuit courts of the United States, in which it has been held that, while it is lawful for a corporation to prefer creditors, it is not equitable or permissible for directors of a corporation to prefer themselves, even if they are bona fide creditors, because they are trustees. It may be conceded that the trust relation justifies and requires courts of equity to subject preferences of its own directors by an insolvent corporation to the closest scrutiny."

tiny, and places the burden upon the preferred director of showing beyond question that he had a bona fide debt against the corporation; but we do not see why, if a corporation may prefer one creditor over others, it may not prefer a director who is a bona fide creditor. Preferences are not based on any equitable principle. They go by favor, and as an individual may prefer among his creditors his friends and relatives, so a corporation may prefer its friends."

The supreme court of Michigan is fully committed to the same doctrine. In Bank of Montreal v. J. E. Potts Salt & Lumber Co. 90 Mich. 345, 350, opinion by Montgomery, J., it is said: "Nor is it the law of this state that, as soon as a corporation becomes insolvent, the directors of the corporation become trustees for all the creditors alike, in such sense as to prevent their giving valid security by way of preference to one of the stockholders or directors. We are aware that the decisions in the various states are not uniform as to the question, and that a number of very eminent text writers have deprecated a state of the law which admits of such preferences. But to adopt the language of Dillon, J., in Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516, this condition of the law 'may constitute a good legislative reason for giving priority to outside creditors, but the legislature must furnish the remedy.' In the case referred to, it was held that being an officer of the corporation did not deprive Buell of the right to enter into competition with the other creditors, and run a race of diligence with them. . . . The rule in this state has, we think, been established since the case of Town v. Bank of River Raisin, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 530, that a corporation may, in the absence of legislative restriction, deal with its property precisely as an individual may, and may prefer one creditor over another; and hence that the assets do not become a trust fund for pro rata distribution among all its creditors. . . . This is the substance of the rule stated in both Town v. Bank of River Raisin, and Turnbull v. Prentiss Lumber Co. 55 Mich. 387. And in the later case of Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634, a mortgage had been given to secure the directors of the corporation and to secure paper upon which they were indorsers. The question under consideration was fully discussed in the briefs of counsel, and it was said by Mr. Justice Campbell: 'There seems to be no reason why one honest creditor should be on a worse footing than another, and we do not find in our law any such distinction.'" See also Lucas v. Friant, 111 Mich. 426.

The supreme court of Mississippi in effect indorses the doctrine that director creditors of an insolvent corporation may prefer themselves in payment of their claims by a transfer of corporate property. Sells v. Rosedale Grocery & Commission Co. 72 Miss. 590.

In Gould v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 52 Fed. Rep. 680, 684, it is said by Caldwell, J., after repudiating the trust-fund doctrine: "It is next contended that the deed of trust is void because it was executed to secure debts due to persons who were directors of the corporation and large holders of its stock and mortgage bonds. The money was actually advanced by the directors in good faith, for the benefit of the company, and was used by the company for legitimate corporate purposes. It was not loaned or advanced for the purpose of obtaining any advantage over the corporation or its other stockholders or creditors, but to conserve and protect the best interests of all persons interested in the property. It is obvious that the directors who made these advances did not do so from choice, or because they esteemed it a safe or profitable investment in itself. They made the advances because the corporation stood in pressing need of the money, and its failure to get it was likely to result injuriously to all its creditors and stockholders. The inducement to make the loan was to protect and give value to their own large interests as creditors and stockholders of the corporation; but all other creditors and stockholders, in proportion to their interests, were equally protected and benefited by the loan. Upon these facts the deed of trust executed by the direction of the stockholders and board of directors to secure the advances previously made by these four directors to the company is a valid security. The advances constituted a valid debt against the corporation, which it was legally liable to pay, and could have been compelled to pay by suit. Where a corporation is legally liable to pay a debt it may undoubtedly give security for its payment. The use of its property to pay or secure a bona fide debt is not an unlawful use or diversion of its property, no matter what official relation the creditor sustains to the corporation. The corporation is under the same obligation to pay a bona fide debt due to one of its directors and stockholders that it is to pay a debt due to a stranger, and a security given for a debt due to a director and stockholder is as valid as a security given to any other creditor. The doctrine established by the best-considered cases and by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is that the mere fact that creditors of a corporation are directors and stockholders does not prevent their taking security to themselves as individuals to secure a bona fide loan of money previously made to such corporation, and used by it in conducting its legitimate corporate business. Among the states maintaining this doctrine may be mentioned Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Illinois, Minnesota, and Iowa. . . . And, to the same effect, see Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 190, 88 N. Y. 1; Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 226; Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Stratton v. Allen, 16 N. J. Eq. 221; Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 41 N. J. Eq. 635; Planter's Bank v. Whittle, 78 Va. 737; Ashhurst's Appeal, 60 Pa. 314; Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425; Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 386, 26 Am. Dec. 75; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743; Kitchen v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 69 Mo. 224; Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 329. An exhaustive and luminous discussion of this question is found in the opinion of the supreme court of Minnesota, delivered by Judge Mitchell in the case of Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470. The reasoning of the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court in that case makes it extremely clear that an insolvent corporation may prefer its creditors, whether they be officers of the corporation or strangers, and that there is no foundation for the doctrine that the insolvency of a corporation has the effect to convert its assets into a 'trust fund,' in the technical sense of that term, and its officers into mere trustees charged with the duty of distributing its assets ratably among its creditors."

The view we have been elaborating is fully supported, also, by the English courts. It is there held that the assets of an insolvent corporation are not a trust fund for creditors; that its directors are not trustees for creditors; and that, of consequence, stranger creditors cannot avoid the disposition of its assets by directors in the preferential payment of their own just claims. In Re Wincham Shipbuilding, Boiler, & Salt Co. L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 322, the facts were that assets of the corporation were used by the directors in paying a corporate debt for which they were personally liable. The transaction was attacked by stranger creditors on the ground that the directors were trustees for them, and as such could not thus contract for their own benefit to the detriment of the complainants. Vice Chancellor Bacon agreed with them, and granted relief, but, on appeal, the learned Jessel, M. R., reversed the decree and sustained the transaction, saying: "The vice chancellor decided the question on this ground, that the directors were trustees of all their powers. So, no doubt, they were. But it is further said that they exercised their powers in breach of trust and for their own benefit, and, therefore, that the act which they did was nugatory. But it appears to me that the question is, For whom were they trustees? It does not appear that the vice chancellor considered this point; but it makes all the difference whether they were trustees for the persons who were injured by what had been done in this case,—namely, the other creditors of the company. It has always been held that the directors are trustees for the shareholders; that is, for the company. They are the managing partners of the company, and if they abuse their powers, which they hold in trust for the company, to the damage of the company, for their own benefit, they are liable to make good the breach of trust to their cestuis que trust, like any other trustees. But directors are not trustees for the creditors of the company. The creditors have certain rights against a company and its members, but they have no greater rights against the directors than against any other members of the company. . . . That being so, there was nothing to impose a duty on the directors not to pay a debt of the company for which they were themselves liable, in priority to other debts, unless § 164 of the act of 1862 applied, which it certainly does not 44 L. R. A.

in the present case. The payment to the bank was not a fraudulent preference; it was made in the ordinary course of business. It was a good payment, and could not be recovered back; therefore the directors, although they derived a collateral advantage to themselves, did not injure their cestuis que trust. The payment was not any breach of duty to the only persons for whom they were trustees."

The reasoning of these authorities cannot, in our opinion, be answered. Certainly, the naked assertions of some courts that the law is otherwise is not even a pretense of refutation. Surely, also, such logic is not met by invective. And the conclusions which they reach, the principles which they establish, are not only logical, and the legitimate and necessary consequence of the most familiar and elementary doctrines of the law, long recognized, but they are also, in the highest degree, just and right.

The application of these principles to the case at bar leads to this result: The transfer of property by the Decatur Building Supply Company to Corey in payment of debts the company owed him, or to indemnify him against liability as indorser for the company, is not rendered fraudulent and void by the facts that the corporation was insolvent, and that he was a stockholder, director, and president of the corporation, and as such participated in the transaction by which his claims were thus preferred to those of complainant and other stranger creditors. The case of Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618, was directly, and the cases of Gibson v. Troubridge Furniture Co. 96 Ala. 357, and Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439, were, in effect, overruled by the subsequent case of O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 28 L. R. A. 707, which has been several times reaffirmed by this court. Barrett v. Pollak Co. 108 Ala. 390; Pollak Co. v. Muscogee Mfg. Co. 108 Ala. 467. The later case of Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Knox, 110 Ala. 632, is irreconcilable with the three cases last above named, and with the foregoing opinion in the case at bar. On the point under consideration it must be overruled.

But, as we shall presently see, the sale to, and purchase by, Corey of the property of the corporation, was covinous and vicious, wholly apart from the consideration of his personal and official relations to the company. The decree of the chancellor was, however, based equally upon those relations and upon actual fraud, and the foregoing will stand as the opinion of the court upon one of the two grounds on which his conclusion was rested, and also as supplying the reasons for our conclusion in the case of Anderson v. Bullock County Bank (which we now hand down) (Ala.) 25 So. 523.

Now, as to the other question in the present case, namely, whether the respondent Corey was under an honest liability for, or held an honest debt against, the Decatur Building Supply Company, commensurate in amount with the value of the property he took from the company in case of his liability or in payment of his debt, one or both, we reach the conclusion, the onus being on him, that he has failed to show, with that clearness and fullness which the law requires, that he received from the corporation in payment of honest debts due from the corporation to himself, or to others for which he was bound as surety or guarantor, property which, reckoned at its fair value, was only sufficient to reimburse him or to save him harmless. In reaching this conclusion, we concede the integrity of the bank's claim of $6,000 against the supply company, as to which he was guarantor or surety. But it is clear, upon the whole evidence, that he received property of considerably greater value than $6,000; so that, all other questions out of the way, the transaction could not be allowed to stand. He seems to have appreciated this, and insists that the company owed him directly about $800, which constituted in part the consideration for the property he received. We do not find that the company owed him this $800. In the first place, he was very laggard in bringing forward this claim at all; so much so, indeed, that it has earmarks of afterthought. Then, his testimony as to the precise amount of the claim and the manner of its accrual is quite unsatisfactory. He, indeed, makes no pretense of an accurate statement in either respect, but in his testimony constantly refers to the books of the company, to the effect that they correctly set forth the amount, and upon what account the corporation incurred the debt, etc. When the books, thus vouched for by him, are looked to, they not only do not show that the company owed him this or any other sum; but, to the contrary, when taken in connection with his own evidence, they affirmatively show that he was, at the time of the transfer of this property to him, heavily indebted to the company himself. We suppose it will not be controverted that a creditor who is also, in less amount, the debtor of an insolvent, cannot take property in payment, except to the amount of his claim as reduced by deducting therefrom his indebtedness to the insolvent. As applied here, this rule would have allowed Corey to take property of the value of $6,000 for which he was bound to the bank, less the amount he individually and directly owed the insolvent corporation. That he took largely more than this there can be no doubt. It is true that he testifies, in a general way, that the property was worth less than the amount of his just claims against the company, and that it sold for less. But these conclusions of his are manifestly based upon the unfounded assumption that the company owed him about $800, independently of the bank matter, and they take no account of the fact, as we find it to be, that, instead of the supply company owing him that sum, he was indebted to it for himself, and on account of Hoy, two or three or more thousands of dollars. Then, too, it is shown very satisfactorily that a great deal of the property he received was not estimated at its real value. For instance he took several carloads of material—sash, blinds, doors, lumber, etc.—as it came into the company's possession about the time of the sale to him, at 10 per cent off the cost at the factory, the supply company paying the transportation charges. And when added to all these considerations, attention is had to the fact which is inferable from the evidence and which the chancellor found, that the goods received by him were to a large extent ordered by the supply company at his instance, his brother-in-law being general manager and he president of the company, from complainants in this case, for the purpose of applying them to his alleged claims against the insolvent corporation, we are driven to the conclusion that the whole transaction was tainted with actual fraud, and that the effect of it was not to pay a bona fide debt with property of equal value, but to give a large bonus to Corey over and beyond the amount of his just claims against the corporation; and upon this view the decree of the Chancery Court must be affirmed.

NOTE.—The following opinion was written by Hon. Thomas W. Coleman, at the time a justice of this court. At his suggestion the case was passed over to the present court. The opinion has been again read and considered in consultation, and, though it has never been adopted or concurred in by any of the judges, it is printed here at Judge Coleman's request:

The present bill is purely and simply a creditors' bill seeking to subject the assets of the insolvent corporation, which, according to the averments of the bill, were sold and transferred to Lorenzo Corey in fraud of creditors. That complainants were creditors of the Decatur Building Supply Company, a corporation, at the time of the sale and transfer of the assets to Corey, is not controverted. That Corey was a stockholder, a director, and president of the corporation at the time of the transfer to him, and that Hoy, the general manager, was his brother-in-law, are admitted facts. A few days prior to the 26th of July, 1888, the president, general manager, and other officers discussed the pecuniary condition of the corporation, and the necessity of making a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and this course was then agreed upon. Corey employed and paid attorneys to prepare the deed for a general assignment, and the assignment was executed on July 26, 1888. At the time of the execution of the general assignment its indebtedness was $26,000, and general creditors, other than those who were officers of the corporation realized only 15 per cent of their demands from the property assigned. There is no contention that the assignee failed to discharge his duty, or that less than their value was realized from the assets conveyed to the assignee. That on and from the 19th of July, to and including a part of the 26th of July, 1888, many thousands of dollars' worth of its available assets (salable property) and some choses in action were sold and transferred and delivered to Lorenzo Corey, and by him appropriated to his own use, are facts averred in the bill and fully sustained by the proof. The complainants base their right to relief upon two propositions: First, that if, in point of fact, Corey was bound for certain debts of the corporation as a guarantor, and that if Corey was a creditor of the insolvent corporation, being a stockholder, director, and its president, and exercising a controlling influence, the law will not permit him to indemnify himself against liability as a guarantor, and to prefer himself as a creditor to all the other creditors, by the purchase of the assets of the corporation in payment of his demands and liability, he at the time knowing its insolvent condition and that it must necessarily cease to do business in a few days; second, that the demands claimed by Corey to be due him were not bona fide, and that the transaction of the purchase of the assets was a scheme concocted at the instance of Corey to protect him and other officers of the corporation, who were coguarantors, and to wreck the corporation for his own benefit, and that in the transaction actual fraud existed, and that, under either aspect, Corey should be held a trustee in invitum and made to account for the assets thus appropriated. The defense relied upon is that Corey was liable as a guarantor to the Exchange Bank of Decatur for a debt of the Decatur Building Supply Company, the debtor and defendant corporation, for $6,000, and that the corporation was indebted to him individually in large sums of money advanced and loaned by him; and that he paid by checks on the Exchange Bank, payable to the Decatur Building Supply Company, $6,000, with the understanding and agreement that it was to be applied to and in payment of the debt of the corporation due the bank for which he and other officers were bound as guarantors, and that the remainder of the property purchased by him was in satisfaction of bona fide debts due him from the building supply company, and that the transaction was free from fraud. It was proved that Corey was also a stockholder and director in the Exchange Bank of Decatur; otherwise, it does not appear that the Exchange Bank had any knowledge of the understanding as to the means provided for the payment of this debt. A further statement of the facts can be found in the report of the case in 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618.

The pleadings and evidence show that Lorenzo Corey, a stockholder, director, and president of the building supply company, a corporation, with a knowledge that it was insolvent, upon the eve of and in contemplation of a general assignment, appropriated, under the form of a purchase, largely more than half of its available assets to the payment of a debt for which he and other officers were personally bound as guarantors, and in payment of debts claimed to be due him individually; thereby securing such an advantage and preference over other creditors so that he sustained but little, if any, loss, while the other creditors did not realize more than 15 per cent of their claims. The question is, Can the purchase by a director and president be sustained in a court of equity against the claims of the other creditors? Under well-settled principles such a transaction, the debts being bona fide, would not necessarily be fraudulent and void if made between individuals, although the debtor might have been hopelessly insolvent at the time, provided the assets were sold for a fair price and the debtor received no benefit from the transaction. Can the same rule be applied in favor of officers in control of corporations, after the corporations have become insolvent and ceased to do business, without doing violence to well-established rules necessary to prevent undue advantage and injustice?

The direct question was settled by this court, after full discussion, in the case of Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. 96 Ala. 357, in which the court used this language: "The corporation, however, became insolvent, and he [Gibson], being a director, could not purchase its stock in trade, and close its operations, and thereby make himself a preferred creditor."

In the case of Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George 44 L. R. A.

D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439, this court declared that an insolvent corporation could prefer some of its creditors, but that a director or member of the governing board of an insolvent corporation was without authority to make himself a preferred creditor. In this case Scott was a guarantor or indorser of the insolvent corporation.

The direct question was again presented by demurrer to the bill in the case at bar on a former appeal (99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618), and, after thorough consideration, the conclusion was reached by the court, as then constituted, that a director or governing member of the board of an insolvent corporation was not authorized to prefer himself to general creditors. True, the learned chief justice who wrote the opinion contended that the trust-fund doctrine was the "sounder rule,"—a doctrine which has not been accepted by this court, and upon which the equitable principle that a director or governing member of the board cannot prefer himself to other creditors does not depend. In the subsequent case of Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. 110 Ala. 632,—a case held under consultation for a long time, and reconsidered pending an application for a rehearing,—we used the following language: "The rule that a director of an insolvent corporation cannot prefer himself, directly or indirectly, over other creditors, is but the application of a very familiar principle to the directors and stockholders of a corporation. No insolvent person who is a debtor is permitted to dispose of his property by which a benefit is reserved to himself, to the prejudice of his creditors. . . . In one sense, corporations are entities; but corporations and the stockholders are not separate and distinct entities for all purposes and in all respects. A corporation is a collective body, composed of different persons. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 124; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 227. Whatever is of benefit to the corporation, as a collective body, is a benefit to the stockholders [or persons] of which it is composed. Corporations are controlled by and act through a board of directors or stockholders. When, therefore, an insolvent corporation, acting by its governing body, which, by reason of their relations to the corporation, may know its condition and have advantages superior to other creditors, sells or transfers its assets, or any portion of them, on such terms or conditions as to place the property beyond the reach of its creditors and thereby protect the members or any of them from loss, and yet secure a benefit to those who effect the sale and transfer, whether consummated directly or through another corporation of which they are the owners and beneficiaries, such sale or transfer is in violation of the rule which prevails as to persons, and is void as to such persons making the sale and who are thus benefited. The rule is as much a necessity to prevent fraud, injustice, and undue advantage on the part of the directors and stockholders of corporations as to similar transactions between individuals. A person cannot be debtor to and creditor of himself but by reason of the fact that the same persons may be the directors and stockholders of separate corporations, one of which may become the debtor of the other; and thus, though not in name and form, in fact, stockholders often sustain the relation of debtor and creditor to themselves. In arriving at the bona fides of transactions and motives of parties thus situated, for the prevention of fraud and undue advantage and the administration of justice, courts should not regard corporations as separate, distinct entities from the owners and stockholders, and sanction as valid transactions which, if done by individuals under the same circumstances, would be set aside and annulled. We would not apply, however, to corporations, whether solvent or insolvent, which have not been dissolved or ceased to do business as going concerns, a different rule than that applied to individuals acting as such in this respect, and disable them from paying some creditors at the expense of others, under any and all circumstances. Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 439.

These decisions declare the law to be that the mere insolvency of a corporation does not convert its assets into a trust fund for its creditors, but by reason of the nature of a corporation, and the relation its governing officers bear to it, any disposition of its property, after insolvency, by its officers, by which they are preferred, or a benefit is reserved to themselves, over the other creditors, will be set aside as fraudulent and void, at the instance of creditors. This is the conclusion reached by the great weight of authority. All the courts holding to this view do not proceed upon the same grounds. It is the logical conclusion from the trust-fund doctrine, and the courts maintaining that rule, for the most part, declare their conclusion from it. Other courts, which do not accept the trust-fund doctrine, as this court has done, reached the same conclusion, upon other grounds. Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162, 17 Am. St. Rep. 291, and extended notes; Sweeney v. Wheeling Grape Sugar & Ref. Co. 30 W. Va. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 88; La Grange Butter Tub Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 122 Mo. 154, 43 Am. St. Rep. 558; Rouss v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 15 Am. St. Rep. 644, and note; First Nat. Bank v. Knowles, 67 Wis. 373; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639; Ballin v. Merchants' Esch. Bank, 89 Wis. 278, 27 L. R. A. 357, 46 Am. St. Rep. 834, reviewing the Wisconsin cases.

These authorities refer to many others. It is true that other courts hold to a different view, and declare that an insolvent corporation may prefer any creditor, even a director or president, to other creditors. Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa. 697, 59 Am. Rep. 461, and notes; Worthen v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562, and 43 Am. St. Rep. 50, and notes. The principle upon which these latter cases proceed is that a corporation is a legal unit in every respect, as much so as an individual, and that the same rules of law must be applied to both alike. The argument, we are of opinion, proceeds from a false premise. A corporation is composed of several persons, and not of one person. It cannot act by itself, but only by agents. When the corporation increases in wealth, the enhancement redounds to the benefit of those who compose it. When it loses money, it is their loss. The persons who compose it are affected with the same infirmities of human nature, after the incorporation, as before. In all business transactions done in the name of the corporation, those engaged in accomplishing these business transactions, as its managing and governing officers, are subject to the same selfish influences which would operate upon them acting in their individual names, for their personal interest. These officers are in a position to know the real condition of a corporation, an advantage not attainable by creditors generally. The maxim that the law favors the diligent can have no just application to parties having such advantages. When an insolvent debtor prefers one creditor to another, it is of no pecuniary advantage to the debtor, and even in such cases, if he secures a benefit to himself, the preference will be 44 L. R. A.

set aside. If this be sound law and good morals, certainly, when an insolvent corporation sells to those who make up and constitute the corporation, the same legal and moral rule is violated. Why is it that a partnership is prohibited from preferring one of its own members to the other creditors, and the same principle is not applicable to corporations dealing with its own members and officers? When a person is solvent, having no creditors, he can dispose of his property to whom and on such terms as he sees proper and reserve to himself any benefit he may desire, but, when he is insolvent, a different rule arises. On account of the limited liability of corporations, the rule should, at least, be as strictly enforced against its beneficiaries as against persons. There is but one sound and practical way of dealing with insolvent corporations so as to prevent an unfair and unjust advantage by its officers and for protection of the creditors in their just rights, and that is "to treat the officers and stockholders as the proprietors"; or, as Morawetz says, always keep in mind that a corporation is an association of persons, and to apply the same rules to them as are applied to partnerships and individuals, so far as to prohibit them from acquiring the assets in preference to its general creditors. Mr. Thompson, in his comprehensive work on Corporations [vol. 2] has collected and cited a great many authorities which treat of the rights of creditors to the assets of insolvent corporations, and in § 1569 declares the trust-fund doctrine to be "nothing more than a rule which the law applies to every other debtor." He says: "In considering the power of corporations with reference to their capital and shares, it is necessary to note a fundamental distinction between the English and American cases. In 1824 the fertile brain of Mr. Justice Story invented the doctrine that the capital stock of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its creditors; and that the creditors have an equitable lien or charge upon it superior to that of the stockholders. This has become the settled doctrine of American courts. If this doctrine means anything more than that the creditors of a corporation must be paid before its property can be distributed among its shareholders, then there would be no difference in this respect between the English and American decisions; for this is the rule which obtains in the winding-up of partnerships: The partnership creditors must be paid before the individual partners can divide the social assets among themselves. And, indeed, treating the shareholders as proprietors,—and this is the only practical juridical conception of their status,—this rule is nothing more than that which the law applies to every other debtor; he cannot keep and enjoy his property, leaving his debts unpaid." A great many authorities are cited to this text. Upon the doctrine that an insolvent corporation can prefer its own directors, he uses the following language (3 Thomp. Corp. § 6496): "The writer wishes to weigh his words carefully, and not to speak disrespectfully of the judicial courts; but he feels that he does not characterize this doctrine in the language which it deserves, unless he calls it an infamous doctrine which is not supported by any underlying principles of justice. It gives added weight to calamity which the public suffer through the fact of nearly every form of industry passing into the hands of limited liability corporations. The infamy is intensified where the directors are allowed to appropriate the property of the corporation in payment of debts due from the corporation to themselves, leaving its other creditors hopelessly without remedy." Id. § 6498: "It is to be regretted that some of the American courts have carried the right of an insolvent corporation to prefer creditors to the extent of holding that it may not only prefer creditors who are its own shareholders, but may prefer such as are its own directors. This infamous doctrine has been pushed to the extent of allowing the directors and shareholders of a corporation to prefer themselves at the expense of its creditors at large, although the director or shareholder may have voted for the proposition. A conception which proceeds upon a similar level is that the fact that the directors had falsely represented to the public, by means of the letter heads on which they conducted the business correspondence of their company, that it had a certain capital, does not estop them from preferring themselves before the general creditors of the company, whom they have thus deceived into giving credit to it. It cannot escape attention that this doctrine offers a new inducement to the incorporation of every species of business, because it gives the members of corporations an advantage over their creditors which the members of partnerships do not possess. A partnership cannot distribute its assets to its partners in preference to its creditors; but, under this miserable doctrine, if it becomes incorporated, it can do so." Id. § 6499: "It would not be profitable to quote the mouthings of judges upon this question; but it is strange that judges can be found so destitute of a sense of justice as to announce the following proposition: 'There is nothing, either in law or equity, which forbids a member, or even a director, of a corporation, from contracting with it, and, like any other individual, he has a right to prescribe his own terms, which the corporation are at liberty to accept or reject; and, when the contract is concluded, he stands in the same relation to the other creditors of the corporation as any other individual would under the same circumstances. When the question of priority arises, it must depend on the bona fides of the transaction, fraud or no fraud. If, by greater diligence and without fraud, he has fairly gained an advantage over the other creditors, he is entitled to retain it.' Undoubtedly, the directors have a right to contract with the corporation while it is a going concern, provided they do it fairly; but, in general, they are the only ones whose knowledge of the internal affairs of the corporation will enable them to predict, in any state of circumstances, whether it can continue a going concern, or must suspend and go into liquidation; and to say that when they avail themselves of this knowledge, as against outside creditors, who have, and from the nature of the case can generally have, no such knowledge, they are merely exercising 'greater diligence, and without fraud,' is a strange perversion of language, and one which exhibits a low sense of justice. The principle under consideration does not, of course, apply to the case where directors have advanced money to the corporation in good faith while it is a solvent and going concern, to enable it to prosecute its ordinary business, and the corporation, while still a solvent and a going concern, repays this advance. Nor does the principle have any necessary connection with a case where, a corporation being in difficulties, some of its directors come to its rescue, and advance money, and take a mortgage to secure their present advances, and thereby help the corporation out of its difficulties, and put it upon its feet, so that it becomes prosperous,—after which other of its members, who failed or refused to aid it in its difficulties, come forward, and, in a suit brought in its name, endeavor to make the directors, who have purchased its property under 44 L. R. A.

their mortgage at a foreclosure sale, account for the profits which they have realized."

In the case of Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 63 Fed. Rep. 496, 24 U. S. App. 145, 11 C. C. A. 320, Harlan, J., considered the question at great length, reviewing many of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and drew the distinction between the rights and duties of the managing officers of an insolvent corporation and an individual who was not able to pay his debts. He uses the following language: "A corporation is not required, by any duty it owes to creditors, to suspend operations the moment it becomes financially embarrassed, or because it may be doubtful whether the objects of its creation can be attained by further effort upon its part. It is in the line of right and of duty when attempting, in good faith, by the exercise of its lawful powers and by the use of all legitimate means, to preserve its active existence, and thereby accomplish the objects for which it was created. In such a crisis in its affairs, and to those ends, it may accept financial assistance from one of its directors, and by a mortgage upon its property secure the payment of money then loaned or advanced by him, or in that mode protect him against liability then incurred in its behalf by him. Of course, in cases of that kind a court of equity will closely scrutinize the transaction, and, in a contest between general creditors and a director or managing officer who takes a mortgage upon its property, will hold the latter to clear proof that the mortgage was executed in good faith, and was not a device to enable him to obtain an advantage for himself over those interested in the distribution of the mortgagor's property. Richardson v. Green, 133 U. S. 30, 43, 33 L. ed. 516; Ticin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 588, 23 L. ed. 329. Entirely different considerations come into view when an insolvent corporation, having no expectation of continuing its business, and recognizing its financial embarrassments as too serious to be overcome, mortgages its property to secure a debt previously incurred by one of its directors, or, in a general assignment of all its property, gives him a preference. To a general assignment by a private corporation for the equal benefit of all its creditors, including directors, no objection could be made, because it recognizes the equal right of creditors to participate in the distribution of the common fund. Such an assignment, Lord Ellenborough said in Pickstock v. Lyster, 3 Maule & S. 371, 375, is to be referred to an act of duty rather than of fraud, and is an act by the assignor that 'arises out of a discharge of the moral duties attached to his character of debtor to make the fund available for the whole body of creditors.' The contention of the defendants is that, in disposing of their respective properties, an individual and a corporation were recognized at common law as having equal rights; and as the former may, in the absence of a statute forbidding it, transfer the whole or part of his property with the intention or with the effect of giving a preference to some of his creditors, to the exclusion of others, so an insolvent corporation, when financially embarrassed and not intending to continue its business, may make a preference among its creditors, whoever they may be, and whatever their relation to the corporation or to the property transferred. If this be a sound rule, it would follow that directors, being also creditors, of an insolvent corporation which has abandoned the objects of its creation and ceased an active existence, may distribute among themselves its entire assets, if the rea-reasonable value thereof does not exceed their aggregate demands. We cannot accept this view. In our judgment, when a corporation becomes insolvent, and intends not to prosecute its business, or does not expect to make further effort to accomplish the objects of its creation, its managing officers or directors come under a duty to distribute its property or its proceeds ratably among all creditors, having regard, of course, to valid liens or charges previously placed upon it. Their duty is "to act up to the end or design" for which the corporation was created (1 Bl. Com. 480), and, when they can no longer do so, their function is to hold or distribute the property in their hands for the equal benefit of those entitled to it. Because of the existence of this duty in respect to a common fund in their hands to be administered, the law will not permit them, although creditors, to obtain any peculiar advantage for themselves to the prejudice of other creditors. This rule is imperatively demanded by the principle that one who has the possession and control of property for the benefit of others—and, surely, an insolvent corporation which has ceased to do business holds its property for the benefit of creditors—may not dispose of it for his own special advantage, to the injury of any of those for whom it is held. That principle pervades the entire law regulating the conduct of those who hold fiduciary relations to others and, instead of being relaxed, should be rigidly enforced in cases of breach of duty or trust by corporate managers seeking to enrich themselves at the expense of those who have an interest equally with themselves in the property committed by law to their control. It would be difficult to overstate the mischievous results of a contrary rule as applied to those intrusted with the management of corporate property."

The latest decision bearing on the question, to which our attention has been called, is that of Sanford Fork & Tool Co. v. Howe, B. & Co. 157 U. S. 312, 39 L. ed. 713, the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Brewer. In this opinion it is declared that "a corporation acting in good faith, and without any purpose of defrauding its creditors, but with the sole object of continuing a business which promises to be successful, may give a mortgage to directors who have lent their credit to it, in order to induce a continuance of that credit, and to obtain renewals of maturing paper, at a time when the corporation, although it may not be then in fact possessed of assets equal at cash prices to its indebtedness, is in fact a going concern, and is intending and expecting to continue its business." The circumstances under which a corporation not in fact possessed of assets equal, at cash prices, to its indebtedness, may execute a mortgage of indemnity in favor of its directors, is stated with great care and precision, as if the court intended carefully to guard against committing itself to the conclusion under different circumstances. The case of Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. Rep. 496, 11 C. C. A. 320, is cited in the opinion, without an intimation of disapproval of any of its statements. It is impossible to read the opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer, supra, without being impressed with the conclusion that the court would not uphold a mortgage to indemnify directors of an insolvent corporation made with a knowledge of its insolvency, having no intention to continue its business or aid it, but in anticipation of its speedy termination as a going concern, the effect of which transaction merely secured a preference over other creditors. On page 319, 157 U. S., and 44 L. R. A.

page 716, 39 L. ed., Mr. Brewer, says: "Carrying on business after the giving of an indemnifying mortgage, with a knowledge of insolvency, with the expectation of soon winding up the affairs of the corporation, and only for the sake of giving an appearance of good faith, leaves the transaction precisely as though the mortgage was executed at the moment of distribution and with the view of a personal preference."

The illustration that a line drawn, with the insolvent debtor and his insufficient property on one side, and the creditors and their claims on the other side, and that the passing of the property to somebody on the other side, is what the law demands, is misleading and fallacious. The fundamental difference is overlooked. In the case of the insolvent corporation, on one side of the line stands the director, having the power to dispose of the insufficient property, and on the other side of the line this same director is ranged with the other creditors with his claim. The grantor and the grantee are one and the same person. No amount of argument or assertion can ever satisfy an impartial judgment that the general creditors stand upon equal footing with a creditor who has the power to dispose of the assets subject to debts. Under such conditions, to apply the rule that the law favors the diligent perpetrates a travesty on justice. We do not believe that in any case has it ever been contended that it is right to permit a grantor to convey directly to himself, to the injury of creditors of the conveyed assets. The only escape from such an obnoxious rule is to take refuge behind the doctrine that a corporation is, in law, and must be regarded for all purposes as, a single individual. With this circumstance out of the way, there is nothing left to support the doctrine that a controlling officer of an insolvent corporation may prefer himself to all other creditors.

In the case of Moblie & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92, one of the principal questions settled involved this question. The case was one of unusual importance, discussed orally, and at great length by written argument, by eminent counsel, and, after thorough discussion and great deliberation, this court unanimously approved the declaration that, for many purposes, a corporation was not in reality a person or thing distinct from its constituent parts. It required no statute to authorize stockholders, as such, to resort to courts of equity for protection against the corporation of which they were constituent parts, and yet an individual cannot maintain an action against himself. Many individuals are wealthy by reason of their stock in corporations. The debt of the corporation, and the appropriation of its assets to the payment of its debt, lessen the individual wealth of the owner of its stock. Whatever affects the interest of the corporation affects the pecuniary values of the stockholder in his individual capacity. The fact that by law the property of an individual partner may be subjected to the payment of partnership debts, and the liability of a stockholder for the debts of the corporation is limited to his corporate interest, emphasizes the fact that the debt of the corporation is his individual debt to the extent of his corporate interest. It is noticeable that so many of the authorities which announce the conclusion that the directors of an insolvent corporation may prefer themselves to other creditors seemingly admit that the contrary rule is the sounder and more just, but hold that it requires legislation to authorize the courts to so hold. This conclusion proceeds solely from the premise that courts cannot distinguish between the members associated as a corporation under a corporate name and with corporate privileges and the corporation as a unity,—a holding contrary to everyday practice in the courts in other matters, and contrary to obvious facts and many adjudications.

Independent of these considerations, there stands the undisputed fact that the directors of an insolvent corporation, whose skill and supposed integrity have induced the credit and confidence of the business public, without warning of its tottering condition and approaching dissolution,—a condition known to the directors, and by them kept concealed from the confiding public,—conscious that the creditors, if perchance they should come to a knowledge of its condition, will be forced to the slow process of suit, can, by a simple transaction of purchase from the corporation, which they alone can execute, secure all its assets in satisfaction of their claims and demands. Of course, being the governing board, they know exactly how far to trust the electrified corpse, and when to act for their own security. No others can know. They are not deceived. It is in their power, and theirs alone, to see that they are fully paid. They run no risk in giving credit. When the creditors complain, they must be content with the reply that the "law favors the diligent;" that "our credit and money have kept the concern apparently alive for the past. True, you were deceived, and we were not, but that is your misfortune. We are in control of the assets, and will pay ourselves."

This court, in four decisions cited above, has deliberately condemned such a transaction as unjust and fraudulent. Justice and fair dealing must be against it. The great weight of authority is against it. We cite from brief of counsel a few decisions which have been verified out of the many which might be cited:

"The allowance of preferences was termed a 'pernicious doctrine,' in Oonover v. Hull, 10 Wash. 673, 45 Am. St. Rep. 810, 'at variance with the whole theory of the law.' 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 803. 'The law does not intend or allow such an appropriation.' Scardi v. Keystone Oil Co. 149 Pa. 148. 'Weight of authority and reason was against the validity of such preferences.' Howe, B. & Co. v. Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 231. 'It is a doctrine which is at variance with the whole theory of the law concerning the rights of creditors of insolvent corporations.' Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, and 5 L. R. A. 378, 383. . . . 'Is entitled to take precedence among the many reckless absurdities,' etc. Walt, Insolvent Corp. § 162. 'Great weight of authority denies the right.' Editorial note, Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 22 L. R. A. 807 [86 Tex. 143]. 'Could not be rightfully done.' Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. Rep. 496, 11 C. C. A. 321. The invalidity of such preferences has been said to be 'well settled.' Bonney v. Tilley, 109 Cal. 346. This is said to be 'in line with the great weight of modern authority.' Tillson v. Downing, 45 Neb. 549. 'The conservative and preservative tendency of the courts . . . has been to establish and maintain the doctrine of invalidity. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cotton Exch. Real Estate Co. 70 Fed. Rep. 155. 'A careful perusal of what is said by the leading text writers on the subject, and a laborious examination of the cases to which they refer, have convinced us that the decided weight of American authority is as indicated.' Lowry Bkg. Co. v. Empire Lumber Co. 91 Ga. 624. . . . 'The rule which prohibits directors, when a corporation is insolvent and about to go into liquidation, from preferring debts due to themselves,' etc. Adams v. Kehlor Milling Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 483. 'The modern authorities, almost without exception, utter the same strong condemnatory language.' Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618. 'That the appellants came within the prohibition of this rule is beyond controversy.' Roseboom v. Whittaker, 132 Ill. 81 (directly in point.) 'This principle was applied to the taking of a mortgage by the directors on the property of the corporation to secure their liability as sureties on the note of the corporation.' Hainwood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639. 'It seems to be well settled that directors of an insolvent corporation . . . cannot secure to themselves any preference. . . . ' Bonney v. Tilley, 109 Cal. 346. 'It appears to be well settled by authority.' W. P. Noble Mercantile Co. v. Mt. Pleasant Equitable Co-Op. Inst. 12 Utah, 213. In speaking of cases holding to the same effect, it was said in Tillson v. Downing, 45 Neb. 549: 'We think both these cases are in line with the great weight of modern authority.' This is said in 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. 241, to be a 'general rule.' 'The only just and equitable rule.' Editorial note, Conover v. Hull, 45 Am. St. Rep. 835 [10 Wash. 673]. 'A general rule.' 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 122. 'The above case is clearly in accord with the weight of authority.' Editorial note to Corey v. Wadsworth, 23 L. R. A. 618 [99 Ala. 68]; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 143 and 22 L. R. A. 802; Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 5 L. R. A. 378."

No satisfactory argument has been adduced to show that this court should depart from its settled doctrine, and certainly none which has not been met and successfully controverted in one or more of the decisions cited.

The fifteenth paragraph of the amended answer avers that "Corey is the owner and possessor of a large indebtedness of the building supply company, which was existing at the time of the assignment; and that the same has been assigned and transferred to him, and that it amounts to about $5,000, besides $1,500 mentioned in the original answer, and he claims to be a creditor," etc. The prayer is that the answer be taken as a cross bill, and that he be allowed to share in the distribution. To the cross bill the complainant demurred, and among others, assigned substantially, as a ground of demurrer, that the claims set up in the cross bill were not described with sufficient definiteness to enable the complainant to tell whether the claims were by account or note, nor from whom nor when obtained. The demurrer to the cross bill was well taken, and properly sustained.

The evidence of the respondent that the corporation was indebted to him, other than the debt due the Exchange Bank, is not clear or satisfactory. He testified, in a general way, that the property purchased by him was in payment of advances and loans made by him, but when these advances were made, in what amounts, and how evidenced, is not stated, though he was interrogated thereto. The most that could be obtained from him, as to the price of the goods, was that he did not remember, but that the books of the company would show. The account taken from the books, and the testimony of Poley, who kept the books in part, and was an officer, does not sustain Corey. We are satisfied that the decree of the chancery court has done the appellant no injury, and that there is no error of which he can complain.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Guy LAMKIN.

v.

BALDWIN & LAMKIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(.....Conn.....)

1. Debts of the partnership must be postponed to those contracted by the corporation after its organization, where a corporation is organized to continue the business of a partnership whose assets are transferred to it upon its undertaking to pay the partnership debts, and the corporation becomes insolvent.
2. The insertion in a deed conveying the assets of a partnership to a corporation organized to continue the business, and which has agreed to pay partnership debts to a certain amount, of a clause obligating it to pay "all the liabilities" of the partnership, will not operate to extend its liability beyond the amount specified, unless the insertion of such clause was authorized or ratified by the corporation.
3. To entitle a creditor of a partnership to payment out of assets of a corporation which was organized to continue the partnership business, and received a conveyance of the partnership assets upon undertaking to pay a specified amount of the partnership liabilities, which proves to be less than all, he must show that his claim was among those estimated in fixing the amount so specified.
4. Taxes against the real estate of a corporation will be entitled to preference in payment in case the corporation goes into the hands of a receiver.
5. Real estate of a corporation which has passed into the hands of a receiver is properly listed for taxation in the name of the corporation, where the right of possession only, and not the title, vests in the receiver.
6. Taxes due by a partnership whose business a corporation is organized to continue, which receives the partnership assets upon undertaking to pay its liabilities, are not, in case the corporation becomes insolvent, entitled to preference out of assets in the hands of its receiver, where the statute gives such preference to taxes assessed against the insolvent debtor.
7. That an organization never became more than a de facto corporation will not relieve it from liability for the debts of a partnership whose business it was organized to continue, and whose assets it received upon undertaking to pay its liabilities.
9. In an action by a creditor of a partnership to recover his debt from a corporation which was organized to continue the partnership business and received its assets upon undertaking to pay its debts, evidence is admissible to show the true character of the transaction out of which his equity arose, as compared with the form which it assumed in the proceedings incident to the organization of the corporation.
9. The de facto character of a corporation will not be varied by the fact that it was insolvent from the beginning.

NOTE.—On the question of the liability of a corporation formed by the consolidation of other companies, for their debts, see note to 44 L. R. A.

10. The vote of the directors of a corporation assuming payment of the debt of a third person, duly recorded, is a sufficient memorandum in writing, and the signature of the recording officer in attestation of the minutes a sufficient signing of the party to be charged, to satisfy the statute of frauds.

(June 8, 1899.)

RESERVATION by the Superior Court for New Haven County for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Errors on questions arising in proceedings for the appointment of a receiver for the defendant corporation as to the priority of the lien of the town of Milford for taxes upon funds which went into the receiver's hands. Priority allowed in part and denied in part.

Statement by Baldwin, J.:

The finding stated these facts: The defendant is a corporation organized under the general law, in February, 1898, to take up and carry on the business theretofore conducted by a partnership. The members of this partnership were the principal subscribers to the capital of the corporation. One of them, Albert A. Baldwin, conveyed his interest in the firm assets, real and personal, to the other, Guy Lamkin; one of the conveyances stating as part of the consideration that Lamkin agreed to assume and pay all the partnership debts and liabilities. Lamkin then conveyed to the corporation, upon the same consideration, pursuant to a vote of the directors that such conveyances, together with $17,060 in cash, should be received in full payment of 80 per cent of his subscription to 632 out of the 750 shares of $100 each, which constituted its capital, and should be taken subject "to obligations of said partnership of Baldwin & Lamkin in amount $61,000, which said obligations the Baldwin & Lamkin Manufacturing Company assumes and agrees to pay." This vote recited that the partnership property to be so conveyed was "appraised at the actual value" of $94,500, leaving, after deduction for the obligations assumed, its "actual value" $33,500. Of the property so bargained for, a part, to which a value of $69,500 was thus assigned, was worth less than half that sum, and the rest, valued at $15,000, was worth several hundred dollars less than that; while the partnership liabilities were several thousand dollars in excess of $61,000,—all of which Lamkin then well knew. The partnership business had been run at a loss for several years prior to the transfer. A suit is pending against Lamkin in favor of the receiver to recover an alleged balance due on his stock subscription, on the ground that what the corporation accepted in payment was not payment in fact.

The claim of the town presented to the receiver was for taxes assessed against the partnership, in 1894, 1896, and 1897, on property, real and personal, which passed to the corporation and came into his hands, and also for taxes assessed against the corporation upon its real estate in 1898, pending the receivership. No tax liens had been filed by the collector.

Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 23 L. R. A. 231; also Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight (C. App. 4th C.) 30 L. R. A. 823.

The town offered evidence that when the transfers from Baldwin to Lamkin, and also those from Lamkin to the corporation, were made, the partnership was insolvent; that Lamkin never paid anything on his stock subscription, except by said transfers, save that he agreed to pay, and did pay, $23,500 of the firm indebtedness which the corporation had assumed, and also paid $4,900 for the running expenses of the business from January 19 to February 14, 1898, to which former day the books of the corporation were dated back; that most of the other stock subscriptions were made by creditors of the partnership, who paid no cash upon them, but took the stock in liquidation of the debts so due them; and that an organization certificate was duly executed and recorded February 16, 1898, stating that the corporation had a capital stock of $75,000, of which $15,000 had been actually paid for in cash. This evidence was objected to by the receiver as immaterial and irrelevant, because the facts stated did not affect the existence of the corporation, because they were not in issue or relevant to this proceeding, and because the claimant was estopped from attacking the validity of the corporation,—especially at this stage of the proceedings.

The court found that, if the evidence was admissible, the facts were established which it went to prove. A time was limited for the presentation of claims against the corporation, which has expired. During the time so limited no claim, except that now in question, was presented for any liability incurred before February 14, 1898. Claims amounting to $28,000 have been presented and allowed for debts incurred by the corporation since that date.

The receiver was appointed in a suit brought by Lamkin against the corporation, under the statute, as the principal stockholder, to wind up its affairs and dissolve it on account of its financial embarrassment.

The receiver claimed: As to the taxes assessed against the partnership: (1) That they were not a claim against the corporation, and could not be proved in this proceeding; (2) that they were not a preferred claim, being, if anything, for a debt assumed, and not for taxes assessed against it; (3) that any claim was for the taxes upon the personal property only; (4) that the evidence objected to by the receiver, as hereinbefore set out, was inadmissible. As to taxes assessed against the corporation: (1) That they should not be allowed, being laid upon property in custody of the law; and (2) that they did not constitute a lien against the property, and that the same could be sold by the receiver, free from any such lien. The town claimed: (1) That the receiver, having taken into his possession all the property upon which the taxes were assessed, was bound by the contract upon which said property was sold; (2) that said taxes were privileged claims; (3) that the payment of said debts, including said taxes, was the consideration upon which said property was conveyed, and the receiver was bound to perform the contracts; (4) that said contract was for the benefit of the town, and could be enforced by it; and (5) that said corporation was never legally organized, and that the receiver was in fact the receiver of said partnership, and could not avoid the partnership agreements to the injury of the town and benefit of said corporation. All questions arising on these claims were reserved for the advice of this court.

Mr. W. B. Stoddard, for town of Milford:

Where a party obtains title to property upon an agreement to pay certain debts, the grantee is bound to perform his contract, both in law and equity.

Randall v. Latham, 36 Conn. 50; Foster v. Atwater, 42 Conn. 250.

Where one purchases property, and in consideration therefor promises to pay the grantor's debts to a third party, such promise may be enforced by the creditor.

Bassett v. Bradley, 48 Conn. 224; Root v. Wright, 84 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 495; Lawrence v. Fow, 20 N. Y. 268; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 749.

The rule is different where the grantee only purchases the equity of redemption, and assumes an outstanding mortgage.

Meech v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 191, 44 Am. Rep. 225.

The taxes are privileged in order of payment.

Re E. S. Greeley & Co. 70 Conn. 498.

Owing to the public interest in the payment of taxes, it is the duty of the receiver to pay the same.

Smith, Receiverships, 287; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland R. Co. 117 U. S. 436, 29 L. ed. 963; Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 250, 1 L. R. A. 260.

Where the property is in the hands of a receiver the lien of the state for taxes has priority over all other liens and claims except judicial costs.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 236, note 1.

The receiver has only such rights and title as the corporation had in the property.

Smith, Receiverships, 138; Greene v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Co. 52 Conn. 361.

There must be a full compliance with all the provisions relating to the organization before the corporation comes into such legal existence as enables it to make contracts with third persons.

Naugatuck Water Co. v. Nichols, 58 Conn. 408, 8 L. R. A. 637; Johnston v. Allis, 71 Conn. 214.

If the subscribing stockholders do not legally complete the organization they remain unincorporated persons associated in business.

New Haven Wire Co. Cases, 57 Conn. 394, 5 L. R. A. 300.

Messrs. E. P. Arvine and George E. Beers, for the receiver:

There are several reasons why this receiver ership cannot be treated as a receivership over the partnership.

The partners must be parties to the suit, and notice must be given to them.

Bostwick v. Isbell, 41 Conn. 305.

The court would have no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of a partnership upon the facts disclosed by the complaint.

Tomlinson v. Ward, 2 Conn. 396.

The appointment is under a law which provides for the winding up of a corporation and the appointment of a receiver of its estate.

Greene v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 52 Conn. 330; New Haven Wire Co. Cases, 57 Conn. 352, 5 L. R. A. 300.

The defendant is a corporation.

As it is a body formed under a law providing for incorporation, and as there has been at least a colorable compliance with the terms of that law, and as it has exercised corporate functions, it is at least a corporation de facto.

McTigue v. Macon Constr. Co. 94 Ga. 306, 32 L. R. A. 208; Re Gibbs, 157 Pa. 59, 22 L. R. A. 276.

There are only two requisites to the existence of a corporation de facto,—viz., either a charter or a general law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might have been created, and the assumption of such powers.

Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482; Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 239, 18 L. R. A. 778.

The members of a de facto corporation are not liable as partners.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 746-748; Stafford Nat. Bank v. Palmer, 47 Conn. 443.

The corporation is not liable for the debts of the firm because it succeeded to the business.

The claimant has no standing because of the assumption of liability in the bills of sale.

The town of Milford was a total stranger to the contract.

No fund was put in the hands of the corporation to be handed over or divided.

The case cannot be brought thus within the exception suggested by the cases of some other courts, where assets are received which in equity belong to a third person.

The assets which were transferred were a minus quantity.

A man cannot acquire rights under a contract to which he is not a party.

Price v. Easton, 4 Barn. & Ad. 433; Anderson, Contr. Huffcut's ed. 279, 280; Holland, Jurisp. 5th ed. 242; Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 42 L. R. A. 514; Clapp v. Lawton, 31 Conn. 95; Meech v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 191, 44 Am. Rep. 225; Mellen v. Whipple, 1 Gray, 317; Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199; Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge of F. & A. A. Masons, 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75; Borden v. Boardman, 157 Mass. 410; Prentice v. Brimhall, 123 Mass. 291; Exchange Bank v. Rice, 107 Mass. 37, 9 Am. Rep. 1; Linneman v. Moross, 98 Mich. 178; Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522; Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 31 L. R. A. 862.

44 L. R. A.

There was no consideration for the assumption.

The contract between Lamkin and the new company was fraudulent.

Fraud is a necessary legal inference from gross and known overvaluation of property conveyed in payment of stock subscriptions.

Kelly v. Fourth of July Min. Co. 21 Mont. 291, 42 L. R. A. 621; Whitney v. Cady, 71 Conn. 166; Lathrop v. Atwood, 21 Conn. 117; Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445.

The only paper, so far as appears, evidencing the agreement to pay debts, is the bill of sale, which is not signed by the party sought to be charged.

Gen. Stat. 1366.

The agreement is hence void by the statute of frauds.

Clapp v. Lawton, 31 Conn. 95; Dillaby v. Wilcox, 60 Conn. 71, 13 L. R. A. 643; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7740; 1 Reed, Stat. Fr. § 340.

The fact that a suit for the appointment of a receiver is an equitable proceeding does not vary the rule.

Keller v. Ashford, 3 Mackey, 444; Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 42 L. R. A. 514.

Taxes are not preferred in a receivership proceeding.

The right of the state to be preferred rests exclusively upon statute.

United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. 29, 8 L. ed. 308; Middlesex County Freeholders v. State Bank, 29 N. J. Eq. 268, Affirmed in 30 N. J. Eq. 311; 1 Kent, Com. 248; State v. Harris, 2 Bail. L. 593.

Such statutes as interfere with the equal distribution of the debtor's assets among his creditors, the great principle of the insolvency laws, are strictly construed.

Com. v. Phoenix Bank, 11 Met. 129.

Being a mere assumed debt, liability does not extend to taxes.

A debt due a county or town is not a debt due to the state, within the meaning of the insolvency law.

Hargrove v. Lilly, 69 Ga. 326.

One who pays taxes is not subrogated to the rights of the state or municipality in bankruptcy proceedings.

Re Parker, 6 Ben. 286.

When taxes are collected by the collector the state has not a preferred claim against his estate.

Hargrove v. Lilly, 69 Ga. 326; Wallace's Estate, 59 Pa. 401; Bent v. Hubbardston, 138 Mass. 99.

When these were laid, the property was in custodia legis.

Walsh v. Raymond, 58 Conn. 251; Brooks v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 112.

Baldwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A corporation known as the Baldwin & Lamkin Company acquired, in payment of subscriptions to its capital stock, certain real and personal property formerly belonging to the firm of Baldwin & Lamkin, under conveyances, part of the consideration for which was its undertaking to pay certain of the partnership debts. The company is now in the hands of a receiver, who holds the property. But one claim against the partnership has been presented to him for allowance, and that is a bill for taxes due the town of Milford. Other claims to a large amount have been presented for liabilities contracted by the corporation in the course of its business after receiving the conveyances in question. The corporation stepped into the shoes of the partnership in respect to certain property and certain debts. There is no legal objection to such a contract, and the receiver is bound to fulfil its obligations so far as he has assets which are equitably applicable to the purpose. Waterman's Appeal, 26 Conn. 96, 108. No right of action at common law was given to the creditors whom it was designed to secure. Clapp v. Lawton, 31 Conn. 95; Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 42 L. R. A. 514. If the town of Milford be one of them, it has only an equitable claim derived from the partners, who made this provision for it. But their manifest object in the conveyances from Baldwin to Lamkin and Lamkin to the corporation was to shift the firm liabilities, in whole or part, upon a corporation which should succeed to its property and continue its business. It was to be little more than the partnership under a new form. To accomplish this it was necessary (Gen. Stat. §§ 1947, 1948) to represent it to the world as possessed of a certain capital, of which 20 per cent had been paid in cash; and this was done. Upon the credit of this capital the corporation afterwards contracted debts of its own to a considerable amount, which have been allowed by the receiver. These must be satisfied in full before anything can be paid on the partnership debts.

The provisions as to the latter, in the deeds of conveyance, created no specific charge in terms upon the property conveyed. They were referred to as part of the consideration; but the title transferred was absolute. No equity to such a charge followed it, unless in favor of the partners; and those now claiming under them must work through their equities, and can have no rights superior to theirs. Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370. It is plain that neither Baldwin nor Lamkin could divert to the discharge of his own liabilities property on the faith of which the corporation, with his aid and consent, had gained credit for itself, and which was necessary to satisfy the indebtedness thus contracted. The partnership creditors must be postponed under the same rule. Ashmead's Appeal, 27 Conn. 241, 247. Subject to such postponement, so many of their claims are prima facie entitled to be allowed as were embraced in those amounting to $61,000, which the corporation assumed by vote of the directors on February 14, 1898. The conveyance to it by Lamkin, its principal stockholder, made the next day, in which it is part of the expressed consideration that it shall assume and pay all the liabilities of the partnership, cannot avail in his favor, or in favor of those claiming through him, to enlarge its obligation, in the absence of proof that the insertion of this clause was authorized or ratified by the corporation.

44 L. R. A.

It is found that the firm in fact owed a sum exceeding $61,000 by several thousand dollars. The burden is upon the town of Milford to show that its claim for taxes was included in the debts estimated at $61,000. Unless that be shown, its claim for the taxes assessed against the partnership should be disallowed. If that be shown, this claim should be treated as if it had been presented by Lamkin after he had paid the amount due upon it to the town. The equities that might arise in that event between him and the receiver we cannot fully determine upon the facts found. It may be that the latter could properly set up as a defense in whole or in part the falsity of the estimates upon which the capitalization of the corporation was based.

The taxes assessed against the corporation upon the real estate in the hands of the receiver should be allowed, and are entitled to a preference. As to them, the only effect of the receivership was to change the mode of collection. To levy a warrant upon property thus in the custody of the court would be inadmissible; but this is because the fund is already in course of judicial administration, and may be said to be held by the receiver in equitable execution. Re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 183, 37 L. ed. 689, 695. In the settlement of the estate of an insolvent debtor, in the court of probate, "all lawful taxes" are entitled to a priority of payment. Gen. Stat. § 532; Pub. Acts 1889, p. 20. If such an estate is settled in a court of equity through the agency of a receiver, the same rule must be applied. The principles which determine the rights of creditors cannot be varied because presented in one forum rather than another, under the same government. Re Waddell-Entz Co. 67 Conn. 324, 338; Re E. S. Greeley & Co. 70 Conn. 494.

The title to the land remained in the corporation, only the possession passing to the receiver. It was therefore properly listed for taxation in the name of the corporation. Gen. Stat. § 3805.

As to cash realized by a receiver from sales, and held temporarily to await an order of distribution, a different rule may, under certain circumstances, be applied. Brooks v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 112.

This preference can in no event extend to the claim founded on the taxes due from the partnership. The statute refers only to taxes assessed against the insolvent debtor. It is not one to be extended by construction beyond the plain meaning of its terms. Taxes assessed against third parties, which the insolvent debtor has promised them to pay, may be a proper foundation of a claim against his estate; but the claim itself will be simply on his own contractual obligation.

The form in which the town presented its claim was not well adapted to express the real matter in demand. There should have been a statement that the taxes against the partnership were assumed by the corporation, and that Lamkin, with whom the contract was made, has presented no claim upon it against its estate. For want of this, the equity which the town intended to set up was left without any proper support. No exception on this score, however, having been taken to the claim, the informality is to be treated as waived. Cothren's Appeal, 59 Conn. 545.

The evidence offered by the town and objected to by the receiver was relevant and admissible. It went to show the true character of the transaction out of which the equities in favor of the town accrued, as compared with the outward form which it assumed in the proceedings incident to the organization of the corporation.

It did not follow from the facts proved that the corporation never came into existence. There was at least a corporation de facto, and it is immaterial, as respects the claims of the town, whether it was or was not one de jure also. Canfield v. Gregory, 66 Conn. 9, 17. A corporation de facto is, in plain English, a corporation in fact. It can incur obligations as a corporation which do not bind those who associated to constitute it in their individual capacities, and from which they cannot, by procuring the appointment of a receiver, enable it to escape. Every liability of the Baldwin & Lamkin Company is the proper subject of a claim against its estate in the present action. The receiver is its receiver, not that of the partnership; nor is he bound to fulfil the partnership obligations, except so far as they may have been assumed by the corporation. That liability rests on a mere personal contract, and is secured by no lien upon the property which it received. The town, so far as the partnership taxes are concerned, must claim under the contract of the corporation, and has no claim, unless there was a corporation capable of contracting with it. As to its demand for taxes assessed against the corporation, that rests equally upon the existence of the corporation as a holder of the legal title to the land assessed. They are due from the corporation or its representatives, and the claim was properly presented against its estate, and against that only.

That the partnership was insolvent did not show that the corporation originally was, since some of the partnership creditors were subscribers to its capital, and thus converted their claims into stock. But had it been insolvent from the beginning, this would not have varied its character as a corporation de facto, nor the relations of the receiver to the property which came down from the partnership, so far as concerns the claims for taxes presented in this proceeding.

The receiver claims that in no event could the corporation be bound to respond to the partnership obligations, because of the statute of frauds. Gen. Stat. § 1366. The vote of the directors of a corporation, duly recorded, is a sufficient memorandum in writing, and the signature of the recording officer in attestation of the minutes a sufficient signing by the party to be charged. It is found that the vote of the directors of the Baldwin & Lamkin Company was passed at a meeting at which all of them were present. It thereupon became the duty of the clerk of the board to record it, and at a proper time verify the record by his signature. The law presumes, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that all this was done. Lane v. Brainerd, 30 Conn. 565; Chase v. Tuttle, 53 Conn. 455, 468.

The superior court is advised that the taxes assessed against the corporation on the list of 1898 should be paid next after the expenses of executing the trust and settling the estate, agreeably to the rule prescribed in Gen. Stat. § 532, that the claim for taxes assessed against the partnership is not a lien or charge upon any of the property in the hands of the receiver, and can in no event be a preferred claim, or paid at all until after all claims, other than those founded on the assumption by the corporation of the partnership obligations, have been paid in full, and that whether it should be allowed at all should be determined upon the principles laid down in the foregoing opinion, with the aid of any further evidence which may be necessary to present all the material facts.

The other Judges concurred, except Hamersley, J., who dissented.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

PULLMAN'S PALACE-CAR COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

L. H. HALL.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. A sleeping-car company is not liable to a passenger for the loss by theft of personal effects taken into the car by the passenger for his own use, and of which he retains possession, either under the rules which apply to an innkeeper for the loss of the goods of his guest, or those of a carrier for the loss of baggage intrusted to it to transport. Such a company owes to a passenger the duty of exercising reasonable care to guard the property of the passenger from theft; and if, through the want of such care, the personal effects of the passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable therefor. But if such reasonable care shall have been used, and such personal goods are stolen by one not its employee, such company is not responsible for the loss.

2. The company having shown in this case that after the car had gone about one mile from the station, and in crossing another road, the speed had been reduced

*Headnotes by LITTLE, J.

NOTE.—As to liability of sleeping-car companies, see also Mann-Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre (C. C. App. 5th C.) 21 L. R. A. 289, and note; 44 L. R. A.

also Ball v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Va.) 32 L. R. A. 792; and Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin (Ga.) 29 L. R. A. 498.

See also 45 L. R. A. 767; 47 L. R. A. 286.

to about five or six miles an hour, that the rear door was securely locked, that the conductor and porter were guarding the open door in front, when it appears that a thief on the outside caught on to the moving car, and, standing on a rod underneath the car, took the valise from the seat and drew it through the window, the loss of the valise is not to be attributed, under the circumstances of the theft, to the want of reasonable care exercised by the company for its protection. The company not being an insurer of the goods against theft, or having the exclusive custody of the valise for transportation, and showing its servants to be on watch at the only open entrance to the car at the time, reasonable care would not require it also to specially guard the windows of a moving train.

- †3. In view of the admitted facts upon which this case was tried before a jury in a justice's court, and the legitimate inferences that may be drawn therefrom, as well as in view of an absence of proof on material points which the admission leaves in doubt, there was testimony authorizing the conclusion that the defendant company had not overcome the burden resting upon it, to show it was in the exercise of reasonable care in protecting the property of the passenger from theft. Such questions being peculiarly for the jury, and the only error assigned in the petition for certiorari being that the verdict was contrary to law and evidence, the judge of the superior court did not abuse his discretion in overruling the petition.

(March 16, 1899.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the loss of plaintiff's valise while he was a passenger in one of defendant's cars. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Dorsey, Brewster, & Howell, for plaintiff in error:

Under the law and facts there is no liability in this case. Can it be said that the employees failed to exercise that degree of care which under the circumstances they were bound to exercise, and were therefore negligent?

Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Martin, 92 Ga. 164.

It is the unexpected that happened; and a man can look back, and tell better what would have prevented the theft than one can reasonably contemplate a protection against some unforeseen occurrence.

Perhaps Hall was negligent in thus leaving his baggage anyway.

Whitney v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 143 Mass. 243; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Martin, 92 Ga. 162, 95 Ga. 314, 29 L. R. A. 498.

If the passenger retains the custody of his baggage, the carrier is liable only in cases where the loss is due to the negligence or misconduct of its servants or agents.

Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gaylord, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 279, 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 788; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 547, 548; Welch v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 1 Sheldon, 457, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. 352.

†Paragraph 3 by LEWIS, J., dissenting.

44 L. R. A.

In the ordinary railway car a passenger may sleep, but it is at his own risk that he does so. He is the custodian of the property retained in his possession, and he must look out for it. Is there any difference where a passenger is in a sleeper, and awake?

Dargan v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 607; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 677-719.

Mr. W. J. Speairs, for defendant in error:

If the plaintiff in error so negligently watched while the passenger slept as to allow her money and jewels to be stolen, he was liable.

Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Martin, 92 Ga. 161.

Smoking is as much the privilege of the passenger as sleeping,—a special room being assigned for that purpose. If the plaintiff in error watches so negligently while the passenger smokes that his valise is stolen, why shall he not be liable? He is paid to watch; he was in control of the valise, and put it in the place it was stolen from.

Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin, 95 Ga. 314, 29 L. R. A. 498; Kates v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 95 Ga. 810; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Harvey, 101 Ga. 733; Code, § 2935; Rockwell v. Proctor, 39 Ga. 105; Bohler v. Owens, 60 Ga. 185; Murchison v. Sergeant, 69 Ga. 206, 47 Am. Rep. 754.

Negligence being a question for the jury, and the jury having passed upon this case, the verdict of the jury and judgment of the court below should not be disturbed,—especially inasmuch as they are both supported by the evidence.

Little, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error brought suit in a justice's court against the car company for $30.50, being the value of a valise and its contents. Judgment in his favor was rendered for the amount for which he sued. The car company filed its petition for certiorari, after hearing which the judge of the superior court sustained the judgment rendered in the justice's court, and dismissed the certiorari. The car company excepted.

The case was tried in the justice's court on an agreed statement of facts, as follows: "It is agreed: That L. H. Hall, the plaintiff, was a passenger on the car Suwanee on October 25, 1894: said car leaving Cincinnati at 8 P. M. That said passenger, Hall, occupied room H, assigned him by porter; porter placing valise therein, in said car. Said passenger Hall took on board the articles set out in the bill of particulars attached to the suit; and it is agreed that the valuation therein placed on said articles is correct and reasonable. L. H. Hall was accompanied by W. C. Rawson. They engaged two lower berths in the same state room, and on going into the state room, found the window up, and put the window down. They together left their valises in the state room, and went forward to the smoking room, just before the train started. Afterwards, as they were leaving the station, and as they were passing through yard, and as train No.

3 on the Q. & C. (this being the train Hall was on), was slowing up at the C. H. & D. crossing about 1 mile from the Central Depot, from which they started, and from where plaintiff boarded the train, the porter, Wright, caught young man taking a large and small valise from the room H. When the thief saw the porter he dropped the large valise, but succeeded in getting away with the small valise; this being the valise of the plaintiff. At this point the porter ran forward to the smoking room and pulled the air cord, and was asked at that time by Mr. Rawson what he was doing that for, when he informed Rawson that someone had stolen a valise out of one of the state rooms. Rawson and Hall went back to see, and found that the thief had gotten Mr. Hall's and would have gotten Rawson's but for the efforts of the porter, who caught Rawson's valise as the thief was taking it through the window. One door of the car was locked, and the conductor and the porter stood at the open end of the car; and Rawson does not know how the thief could have gotten in the car, as everyone was required to show a ticket before entering station, and a sleeping-car ticket before getting on board the car. Valise was taken from open window in the side of car from room H; the thief being on outside, clinging to window, and standing on hog chain of car. The porter, Wright, was in the aisle of the car at the time, and saw two tramps hanging on the outside of car, and ran them off. Conductor's attention was immediately called to same, and train was stopped, but too late to get the valise. By the time the train was stopped the men had gotten too far away, and it was impossible to catch them. No suspicious person was noticed by the conductor or porter in the car. As train passed by Big Four yards, where the valise was stolen, it was going at the rate of from 5 to 6 miles an hour. Conductor and porter did all they could to save valise after thief was discovered."

1. Under these admitted facts the question arises, first, What is the liability of a sleeping-car company to its passengers for personal baggage which the passenger takes with him in the sleeping car? This court has, in two cases heretofore considered, ruled upon the liability of a sleeping-car company for the loss of goods of a passenger, when the same were lost at night, when the passenger was sleeping. In the case of Kates v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 95 Ga. 810, the action was to recover the value of certain money and papers which it was alleged were taken from the pocket of the plaintiff's clothing at night. This court in that case did not undertake to define the precise relation which existed between a sleeping-car company and a passenger, but ruled that, from the character of the business in which the company was engaged, a duty on the part of the company was created, to exercise some watch and care over the passenger, and, within certain reasonable limits, over his property as well, and that if a loss occurs the burden of proof is on the company of showing that it exercised such reasonable care during the hours of the night as was necessary to secure the safety of the passenger's property, and that the loss was not occasioned because of the failure on the part of the employees of the company to do so. The other case to which we refer is that of Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Harvey, 101 Ga. 733. There this court was asked to reverse the ruling made in the Kates Case, 95 Ga. 810; but, after consideration, adhered to such ruling. Chief Justice Simmons, in rendering the opinion in the case, said that the law as to the liability of sleeping-car companies is not well settled. Courts in different states have laid down different rules as to their liability. And he suggests that legislation should be had, defining the exact liability of sleeping-car companies to a passenger for loss of goods. In determining the question now under consideration, it seems to be necessary to define and fix the rule of liability which attaches to a sleeping-car company for the loss of goods which were stolen by someone not in the employ of the company, and while the passenger was awake. A fair examination of the question renders it necessary to note that the passenger whose valise was taken from his berth, or state room, under the evidence in this case, had, on reaching the car, delivered to the porter of the car his valise, as is customary, and that the valise had been taken to the state room or berth which had been assigned to the passenger, and in his presence there deposited; that, finding the window to the berth or state room open, the passenger closed it, and then, leaving his valise, went forward to the smoking room; that in no other manner did the company, by its employees, have charge of such baggage. Also, the other facts, that the rear door of the car was locked, and the conductor and porter stood at the front door of the car; that while the car was in motion the valise was taken by a thief, who stood on a rod underneath the car, on the outside, and abstracted it through the window. In the case of Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co. 1 Flipp. 500, as cited in Voss v. Wagner Palace Car Co. 16 Ind. App. 271, a number of reasons are given why a sleeping-car company is not liable as an innkeeper. Among those reasons are the following: "The peculiar construction of sleeping cars is such as to render it almost impossible for the company, even with the most careful watch, to protect the occupants of berths from being plundered by the occupants of adjoining sections." That the innkeeper is given a lien upon the goods of his guests for the price of their entertainment. That the innkeeper is obliged to receive every guest who applies for entertainment, while the sleeping-car company receives only first-class passengers. That the innkeeper is bound to furnish food as well as lodging, and to receive and care for the goods of his guests, and, unless otherwise provided by statute, his liability is unrestricted in amount, while the sleeping-car company contracts to furnish a bed only. That the conveniences of the inn are imperative necessities to the traveler; a sleeping-car is not. That the inn-keeper has a right to exclude from his house all but his guests.

and servants; the sleeping-car company must admit the employees of the train to collect fares and control its movements. That the sleeping-car company cannot protect its guests in all particulars, because the conductor of the train has a right to put them off for nonpayment of fare or for a violation of rules. The court in that case then ruled that sleeping-car companies are not subject to a passenger, as an innkeeper. The cases of Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 258, and Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Gaylord [6 Ky. L. Rep. 279], 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 788, held that a sleeping-car company is not liable for loss of the effects of a passenger, as a carrier, because it is not a carrier; that the railway company is the carrier; that the carrier's liability depends upon his possession of the goods; that a sleeping-car company does not have possession of the goods,—they are in the control of the passenger. It was also ruled in Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car Co. 143 Mass. 267, 58 Am. Rep. 135, that a sleeping-car company was not liable as a common carrier nor as an innholder. But each of these cases rules that it is a clear duty of the car company to use reasonable care to guard the personal effects of passengers from theft, and if, through want of such care, such as he might reasonably carry with him are stolen, the company is liable. The rule of liability is stated by the Texas supreme court in the case of Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pollock, 60 Tex. 120, as follows: While a sleeping-car company does not assume towards personal baggage taken into a car by a passenger the duties and liabilities which the common law imposes upon common carriers as to ordinary freight, or upon an innkeeper as to guests, it is responsible in the same way as any common carrier for a failure to perform the duties which devolve upon a common carrier in relation to baggage of a passenger which is not given into its exclusive custody; and if, through a failure of the company to exercise reasonable care, the passenger's baggage is stolen, the company is liable therefor. In 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 526, the author, discussing this subject, says: "For obvious reasons the rule of absolute liability of a carrier of goods or innkeeper is not extended to cases of theft from passengers occupying berths in a sleeping car;" and, citing Carpenter v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 53, 11 L. R. A. 759, says: "It is properly held, in view of such arrangements [of berths], and of the powerlessness of a sleeping passenger to defend his property from theft, or his person from assault, that it is part of the contract of hiring the privilege of occupying a berth that protection should be afforded him by the car proprietor, with a degree of care and vigilance commensurate with the danger to which he is exposed." Mr. Wharton, in his Law of Negligence, 7th ed. § 610, says: "It has been urged that such a proprietor [sleeping-car company] is, if not a common carrier, at least an innkeeper, and therefore an insurer of the property of his guests. But it has been ruled in several cases that such a proprietor is not either a common carrier or an innkeeper, but is a special bailee, who is not an insurer, but is charged with the duty of exercising in his business a degree of care and diligence proportioned to risks to which those engaging places in his cars are exposed." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1623, sums up from the rules in adjudicated cases as follows: "Our conclusion is that where the passenger takes his baggage into the coach with him, and does not place it in charge of the railroad company or of the sleeping-car company, that neither company is liable, unless the loss of the baggage was caused by the negligence of one of the companies." Ray, in his work on Negligence of Imposed Duties, Passenger Carriers (pp. 241, 242), citing authorities, says: "While it [the sleeping-car company] is not liable as a common carrier or as an innholder, as is said by some of the authorities, . . . it is its duty to use reasonable care to guard the passenger from personal injury and his property from theft; and if, through want of such care, . . . the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable therefor." See also Stevenson v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 112; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 258; Chamberlain v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 55 Mo. App. 474; Henderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 437; Belden v. Pullman Palace Car Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 22. While there are decisions of a number of courts which have held sleeping-car companies liable to a passenger for the loss of his baggage, as a common carrier, and others which apply the law of liability as that of innkeepers, the weight of authority, as we understand it, is that such companies are not liable as innkeepers nor as carriers for personal effects taken with the passenger into the car, and of which he retains possession. But it is the duty of such a company to use reasonable care to guard the property of the passenger from theft; and if, through the want of such care, the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable therefor.

2. Such being the rule, the question which next arises is, Was the property of the passenger stolen through the failure of the employees of the company to exercise reasonable care for the protection of his property? It will be borne in mind that the passenger was not sleeping when his goods were stolen. A higher degree of care to protect the goods of a sleeping passenger would seem to be required than that which it is necessary to exercise when the passenger is awake and able to protect it himself; and while extraordinary diligence is not, under the law, required in either case, because the passenger does not intrust his effects to the company, but retains possession himself, for his own comfort and convenience, yet, having engaged the accommodations offered by the company for the purpose of sleep during proper hours, and paid for the same, and the company having accepted him with the implied agreement that he should do so, the care which is reasonable to protect the goods of a sleeping passenger must be exercised. And, while the same degree of care in the case of a passenger awake might not be required, yet in each case such care as is reasonable under the circumstances is required. For the want of it the company is liable. Having exercised it, it is not. The court of appeals of Missouri, in the case of Chamberlain v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 55 Mo. App. 474, held that, in a case where the porter in charge of the car was not directed to look after the effects of a passenger in his absence, "a passenger on a sleeping car, who leaves his watch in his berth while he is in the toilet room, is, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence if it is stolen in his absence, and therefore cannot recover from the company for the loss." Whether or not the property of the passenger in the case at bar was stolen because of the failure of the company to exercise reasonable care for its protection must, of course, depend upon the manner in which, and by whom, the valise was stolen and the precautions used to prevent the theft. The agreed statement of facts found in the record is somewhat confused. When critically examined, however, it appears: That the train to which the sleeping car was attached had left the station where the passenger boarded the car, and proceeded about a mile on its journey. The train reduced its speed to 5 or 6 miles an hour when it approached the crossing of another railroad. At that time one of the car doors was locked, and the other guarded by an employee of the sleeping-car company. That the valise was taken from the seat of the passenger on which it had been placed, through an open window, by a thief who was on the outside, clinging to the window, and standing on the hog chain of the car. The porter of the car was in the aisle, and ran off two tramps whom he saw hanging on the outside of the car, and discovered that another thief had seized two valises. The porter caught one of the valises as the thief was taking it through the window. The other one he could not recover. Immediately the employees of the car pulled the air cord, and had the train stopped, but the thief had gotten away with one of the valises. The circumstances of the theft were remarkable, and showed the perpetrator to have been a very daring lawbreaker,—willing to incur, not only the risk of violating the law, but his personal safety as well. To guard all the windows of a moving car from rogues who did not hesitate to risk their lives in catching hold of a moving train, with the hope of abstracting valuables, would have required extraordinary diligence. Such acts ordinarily are not to be anticipated, and without such a degree of diligence could not have been prevented. To have securely fastened one of the doors of the car, and guarded the other, while another employee stood in the aisle, was certainly as much as any anticipated danger would have required. Such precautions, in our judgment, amounted at least to reasonable care; and no greater diligence than this being required, under the rule the company should not be held liable for the loss.

44 L. R. A.

For these reasons, it is our opinion that the certiorari should have been sustained, and the judgment rendered in the justice's court set aside.

Judgment reversed.

Lewis, J., dissenting:

Under the view I take of this case, the question decided by the first headnote is not involved. There is no error of law complained of on account of any ruling or view of the court below to the effect that a sleeping-car company is liable to its passenger for loss by theft of his baggage, to the same extent as an innkeeper would be for the loss of the goods of his guest or a common carrier for the loss of baggage intrusted to it by a passenger for transportation. The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts before a jury in a justice's court. The petition for certiorari complained simply that the verdict was contrary to law and evidence. The order of the judge overruling the certiorari does not indicate that he entertained a different view of the degree of diligence required of the company than is expressed by a majority of this court. That order is as follows: "After hearing and considering this case the verdict and judgment in the magistrate's court are affirmed and the certiorari dismissed. Negligence and diligence are peculiarly questions for the jury and they may not only consider the facts admitted but may draw inferences therefrom. Whether the porter was negligent in placing the valises where he did place them, whether the agents exercised due diligence in guarding the property, whether the window itself had proper catches or safeguards,—in fact, all questions touching the conduct of the company and its employees,—were for the jury. I think there was enough to sustain their finding."

In addition to the suggestions contained in the above judgment, attention is directed to the following points in the evidence: The sleeping-car porter placed the two valises in the state room of the two passengers. At this room was a window in the side of the car, which was open, and the passengers closed it down,—probably to protect their goods from thieves. They then went into the smoker, and never left there until after the larceny; hence, never opened the window. The inference is reasonable that it was opened either by the porter or the thief. If by the former, he voluntarily and unnecessarily removed the protection given the baggage by the passengers. If by the latter,—the evidence negating the fact that the thief was inside of the car,—he must have opened the window by force from the outside of the car, while it was in motion.—a very improbable theory; and, if that was done, it does seem that the porter, standing in the aisle, by the exercise of ordinary diligence would have had his attention attracted to the elevation of the window by the trespasser in time to have prevented the theft,—it being admitted that the porter was at the time standing in the aisle. The train started from the Central Depot of Cincinnati. It had gone but a mile, and was running at a slow rate of speed, and the presumption is that it had not gone to the limits of a populous portion of that large city. Besides these facts, it does not appear where the conductor was at this time, and what he was doing. It is true, it is stated that he and the porter were at the door, where they were receiving passengers who were entering. If it refers to the entire time, then it contradicts other facts admitted. In one portion of the admission it is stated that the porter, at the time of the theft, was in the aisle and seized the larger valise; thus preventing the thief from getting that also. In another portion it is stated that at that time he saw two tramps on the outside of the car, and ran them off. It is difficult to understand how he could do so many things at the same time, and be in different places. As I understand it, it is conceded by my brethren that the burden of proof was on the company to show the exercise of reasonable care and diligence. Could not the jury have inferred, both from the evidence and the want of evidence, that this burden had not been successfully carried? I only allude to some of these points on the facts, with a view of showing, to say the least of it, that whether the company was negligent or not is a reasonably debatable question; and this should be an end of the matter, so far as the power of this court is concerned, after the jury have passed upon that issue, and the judge of the superior court, having carefully considered their finding and the evidence upon which it was based, has approved their verdict. I therefore believe that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and respectfully dissent from the decision rendered by a majority of the court.

W. T. BARTLETT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

City of COLUMBUS.

(101 Ga. 300.)

*A municipal corporation is not liable, in an action for false imprisonment, for damages alleged to have been occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of his imprisonment under

*Headnote by FISH, J.

NOTE.—Liability of municipal corporations for false imprisonment and unlawful arrest.

I. Introduction.

II. General rule stated.

III. Application of the maxim Respondet superior.

IV. Liability as affected by ratification.

V. Reasons for the rule.

VI. English and Canadian decisions.

As to the liability of municipal corporations for acts of policemen, see note to Whitefield v. Paris (Tex.) 15 L. R. A. 783.

I. Introduction.

The principal case is strictly in line with the earlier decisions upon this question. The cases unanimously hold that a municipality is not liable in damages for the acts of police officers in making an arrest, or for false imprisonment. 44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 215.

a judgment rendered against him by a municipal court for the violation of an ordinance, and this is true though such judgment may have been irregular, erroneous, or even void.

(May 21, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Muscogee County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. C. J. Thornton and A. E. Thornton for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Francis D. Peabody, for defendant in error:

No writ of certiorari was ever sued out by Bartlett, to review the judgment of the recorder in the superior court, as was his right (Code 1882, § 4049); and until such judgment shall have been appealed from, it is conclusive between parties and privies, whether the judgment be right or wrong, or whether or not the ordinance, under which the conviction was had, be beyond the power of the city to pass.

Code 1882, §§ 2807, 3577, 3826, 3827; Childs v. Hayman, 72 Ga. 797.

For errors of judgment committed in the performance of judicial powers and duties, the corporation is not responsible.

Semmes v. Columbus, 19 Ga. 490; Duke v. Rome, 20 Ga. 635; Rivers v. Augusta, 65 Ga. 376; Collins v. Macon, 69 Ga. 544; Gaskins v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 746; Wright v. Augusta, 78 Ga. 241; Columbus v. Sims, 94 Ga. 483; Love v. Atlanta, 95 Ga. 129; Trescott v. Waterloo, 26 Fed. Rep. 592; Weathers v. Columbus (U. S. C. C. W. D. N. D. Ga.) June Term, 1896, not yet reported; 1 Beach. Mun. Corp. § 767; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 949; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 324.

Fish, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Bartlett sued the city of Columbus for false imprisonment, alleging that the defendant, without legal authority, imprisoned and detained him in the common jail of Muscogee county for forty-eight hours. Upon the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the court below granted a nonsuit, and Bartlett excepted.

as the duties cast upon such officers are of a public nature in the exercise of public governmental powers as agents or servants of the state, and not as agents or servants of the municipality. See infra, V.

If, however, the acts are done in the exercise of special corporate rights, and not in the interest of the public, the city will be liable.

In all cases, however, the liability depends upon the character of the service. Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, 453, et infra, II.

In the case of BARTLETT v. COLUMBUS one of the grounds upon which the decision was based was that no action can be maintained against a municipal corporation for an error in judgment in the exercise of its judicial functions where no corruption or malice is imputed.

II. General rule stated.

The current of authorities is almost uniform that a municipal corporation is not liable for

The plaintiff showed by his testimony that the office of recorder of the city of Columbus was duly and legally constituted, and that said officer was authorized to preside over the "mayor's court," and to try all persons charged with a violation of the ordinances of said city. It further appears from his testimony that he was tried, convicted, and sentenced by the recorder, in said court, for an alleged violation of an ordinance of said city, in carrying on the business of keeping a boarding house, taking transient guests, without first having registered, and obtained the city license prescribed therefor. This being true, it is not necessary to consider the grounds upon which the plaintiff in error contends that his trial by the recorder and the judgment rendered therein were illegal and void, because it is clear that a municipal corporation is not liable, in an action for false imprisonment, for damages alleged to have been occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of his imprisonment under a judgment rendered against him by a municipal court for the violation of a city ordinance; and this is true though said judgment may have been irregular, erroneous, or even void. In the case of Duke v. Rome, 20 Ga. 636, Lumpkin, J., says: "Can an action in any form be maintained against a municipal corporation for an error in judgment only when exercising judicial functions, where no corruption or malice is imputed? We think not. Just as well, upon principle, sue this or any other court." A case that is exactly in point is that of Trescott v. Waterloo, which was tried in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Iowa, and is reported in 26 Fed. Rep. 592. In that case the court held that "a party who has been arrested for violation of an unconstitutional municipal ordinance, requiring a license fee to be paid by nonresident peddlers, and, on conviction, has served out his fine, cannot maintain an action against the municipal corporation for false imprisonment." The passage of the ordinance by the city council of Columbus, for the alleged violation of which the plaintiff in error was tried, convicted, and imprisoned, was an exercise of the legislative power, and his trial and sentence by the recorder was an exercise of the judicial power conferred by the state upon the municipal corporation. It is well settled that for errors of judgment committed in the exercise of either of these powers a municipal corporation is not liable in damages. Rivers v. Augusta, 65 Ga. 376, 38 Am. Rep. 787.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

a trespass or assault by a police officer; if he has authority to arrest, then nobody is liable, and if he has not, then he is acting wilfully on his own responsibility. Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 468.

It has been stated that the nonliability of a municipal corporation for the wrongful acts of its police officers, constables, or marshal in making arrests or detaining prisoners is too well known to require discussion. Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278, 279, wherein it was sought to make the city liable for damages occasioned by the arrest and unlawful detention and imprisonment of the plaintiff in the village prison.

A distinction is drawn between the liability of a municipal corporation for acts of its officers in the exercise of powers which it possesses for public purposes and which it holds as part of the government of the country, and those which are conferred upon it for private purposes. Within the sphere of the former it enjoys the exemption of government from responsibility for its own acts and the acts of its officers deriving their authority from the sovereign power, whereas in the latter it is answerable for the acts of those who are in law its agents. Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 462, et infra.

In the case of Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, et infra, reversing 76 Hun. 390, it is said that if the corporation appoints or elects the officers, and controls them in the discharge of their duties; if it continues or removes them or holds them responsible for the manner in which they discharge their duties; and if their duties relate to the exercise of corporate powers, and are for the peculiar benefit of the corporation in its local or special interest,—they must be regarded as its agents or servants, and the maxim Respondent superior applies.

If such officers are elected or appointed by the corporation in obedience to a statute to perform a public service, not local or corporate, but because this mode of selection has been deemed expedient by the legislature in the distribution of the powers of government, they are not to be regarded as the servants of the corporation, but as public or state officers, with such powers and duties as the statute confers upon them, and the doctrine of respondent superior does not apply. Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, reversing 76 Hun. 390; McKay v. Buffalo, 9 Hun. 401, 74 N. Y. 619; Maxmillan v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468.

The same principles are recognized and adopted by the court in Rusher v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 151, 153. To the same effect, Galveston v. Posnalsky, 62 Tex. 132, 50 Am. Rep. 517; Galveston v. Hemmis, 72 Tex. 550.

Where a municipal body is simply exercising its police powers, any acts of its officers or agents, including the board of trustees or aldermen, in violation of and against the terms and spirit of the statute while acting as a legislative body, or as agents and officers executing the ordinance, are ultra vires and in excess of the power of the city, and for the acts of such officers whereby damage occurs to any citizen there is no remedy against the corporation. Blake v. Pontiac, 49 Ill. App. 543, 550, a case of illegal arrest and imprisonment.

A city is not liable for an arrest made by a police officer which is illegal for want of a warrant, or for unlawful acts of violence in the exercise of his official duties, in the absence of a state statute expressly creating such liability. Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah. 401, 407; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa. 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154; O'Dell Trustees v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243; Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654; Culver v. Streator, 130 Ill. 238, 6 L. R. A. 270, 271; Pollock v. Louisville, 13 Bush. 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260; Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 468; Harris v. Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290.

Cities are not liable in actions for false imprisonment for the acts of their officers while enforcing invalid ordinances or for other illegal and unauthorized acts, and where the provision in question is a police regulation, and the officers in enforcing it are exercising a public function, for the manner in which they exercise their powers and duties in that respect the city is not liable. Caldwell v. Prunelle, 57 Kan. 511.

If there is no authority in the mayor and marshal under an ordinance to make the arrest they are trespassers and may be held personally liable for false imprisonment or assault and battery, but for their acts in making such arrest under the city ordinance the city cannot be held liable. Rusher v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 152.

And the fact that the trustees of a town have knowledge of the false imprisonment will not in any manner render the town liable for the reason that when they have provided proper ordinances for the police of the town, they have performed their duty and are not required to give their personal attention to their enforcement. Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353, 355.

So, the fact that a city has knowledge that the officer who makes the arrest was unfit and incompetent, and that the injury was caused by such unfitness, and still retains him in its service, does not take the case out of the rule relieving the city from responsibility for the act of police officers in their capacity as public officers for the benefit of the public at large. Rusher v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 152.

Again, the fact that the trustees of the town adopt an ordinance and appoint the town constable to see that it is executed will not render the town liable. In a case of false imprisonment, for the unauthorized, illegal, and oppressive acts of such constable, for the reason that the trustees as representatives of the town only empower him to do what the ordinance requires, and not to oppress citizens of the place. Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353, 355.

And the bare allegation, in an action against a municipal corporation in damages for false imprisonment and malicious arrest, that the marshal and recorder committed a trespass upon the person of the plaintiff, though done colore officii does not make a prima facie case against a municipal corporation, since it is not liable for any and all voluntary, malicious, and unauthorized acts and trespasses of its officers. Worley v. Columbia, 88 Mo. 106, 110.

It has been frequently held that a municipal corporation is not liable for acts of police officers in making arrests for alleged violations of law or of local ordinances. Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505; Trammell v. Russellville, 34 Ark. 105, 36 Am. Rep. 1; Fox v. Northern Liberties, 3 Watts & S. 103; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am. Rep. 591; Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154; Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721; Worley v. Columbia, 88 Mo. 106; Kansas City v. Lem-en, 12 U. S. App. 640, 57 Fed. Rep. 905, 906, 6 C. C. A. 627.

And in Culver v. Streater, 130 Ill. 238, 6 L. R. A. 270, 271, the court relied upon authorities holding that a city is not liable for an arrest made by police officers which is illegal for want of a warrant. In that case, however, the action was for the unlawful acts of the police in enforcing an ordinance relating to dogs. Pollock v. Louisville, 13 Bush, 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260; Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 468; and Harris v. Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290, infra, were relied upon.

A person who has been arrested for the violation of an unconstitutional municipal ordinance requiring a license fee to be paid by nonresident peddlers, and who has on conviction served out his fine, cannot maintain an action against the municipal corporation for false imprisonment. Trescott v. Waterloo, 26 Fed. Rep. 592.

And a city is not liable for the malicious arrest and false imprisonment of a person for the violation of an ordinance, neither is it liable for the act of the council in passing the ordinance, or for the act of the marshal in issuing the warrant, nor for the acts of the marshal and his deputy in making the arrest, as the acts are done in a judicial capacity and within the scope of the jurisdiction. Trammell v. Russellville, 34 Ark. 105, 36 Am. Rep. 1, 3.

In this case the court adopted the doctrine as stated by the court of appeals of Maryland in the case of Anne Arundel County Comrs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 476, 83 Am. Dec. 557, as follows: "With regard to the liability of a public municipal corporation for the acts of its officers, the distinction is between the exercise of its legislative powers which it holds for public purposes and as part of the government of the country and those private franchises which belong to it as a creation of the law. Within the sphere of the former it enjoys the exemption of the government from responsibilities for its own acts, and for the acts of those who are independent corporate officers deriving their rights and duties from the sovereign power."

And a demurrer to the cause of action was sustained, upon the ground that the city could not be held responsible for wrongful arrest and imprisonment, in Stedman v. San Francisco, 63 Cal. 193, where the plaintiff was arrested by members of the police department and imprisoned under an ordinance of the board of supervisors.

An action for false imprisonment and unlawful and forcible arrest for the violation of a city ordinance does not lie against a municipality, even though it may be unauthorized. Grumbine v. Washington, 2 MacArth. 578, 20 Am. Rep. 626, 628.

In Attaway v. Cartersville, 68 Ga. 740, the city was held not liable for the arrest and imprisonment of the plaintiff by the marshal and a policeman of the city unlawfully and without authority of law. To the same effect, Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 468.

The same principles were applied in McElroy v. Albany, 65 Ga. 385, 389, 38 Am. Rep. 791, where the party making the arrest was a night watchman or quasi policeman of the town, and the town was not liable under the doctrine of respondet superior.

So, the nonsuit of the plaintiff was upheld, so far as the city was concerned, in Harris v. Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290, which was an action against the city and certain keepers of the guard house and jail, for imprisonment and unreasonable compulsory detention.

In Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353, it was held that the town was not liable for the wrongful imprisonment of a person by a constable on an execution.

The city was not liable, in the case of Blake v. Pontiac, 49 Ill. App. 543, 550, for the acts of its officers in arresting the plaintiff and incarcerating him in a calaboose, as the act for which redress was sought was one which the city had to perform in its public capacity in the exercise of police power, and not in the nature of corporate acts, and the persons officially charged with the execution and enforcement of such powers and regulations were quoad hoc police officers.

And the city was freed from liability in Laurel v. Blue, 1 Ind. App. 128, an action for false imprisonment, where the plaintiff was arrested by the town marshal without a warrant under the provisions of an ordinance which was without authority and void.

In the case of Vaughtman v. Waterloo, 14 Ind. App. 649, 652, the plaintiff as acting marshal of the town sought to recover from the city the loss he had sustained in an action for false imprisonment. The real question was whether the city would have been responsible for the arrest of the party by the plaintiff if suit had been brought against it therefor. The plaintiff's action failed for the reason that officers appointed to execute laws and ordinances are not agents engaged in corporate duties, but are public officers appointed at the command of the legislature by the corporate authorities.

Again, in Kansas City v. Lemen, 12 U. S. App. 640, 57 Fed. Rep. 905, 906, 908, 6 C. C. A. 627, the city was not liable for damages for unlawfully interfering with the plaintiff's rights and preventing his exhibiting his show and hippodrome in the city, for which he had obtained a license, and for unlawfully arresting him and his employees.

So, the judgment was rendered in the city's favor in Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654, an action for damages for false imprisonment. The police officers of the city were not regarded as the servants or agents thereof, as their duties were of a public nature and their appointment was made by the city as a convenient mode of exercising a function of the government, which duties were to preserve the good order and provide for the safety of the people of the city. In these duties they acted as public servants of the state under the law, and not as mere agents of the city, and for that reason the relation of principal and agent does not exist between the city and the police officers.

And the city was exempt from liability in the case of Caldwell v. Prunelle, 57 Kan. 511, an action for false imprisonment brought against the city for an illegal arrest of the plaintiff for non-compliance with an ordinance of the city relating to license tax on traveling salesmen, for the refusal to pay which he was committed to the city prison, from which he was subsequently discharged upon habeas corpus.

In the above case the court relied upon Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654; Trescott v. Waterloo, 26 Fed. Rep. 592; Bail v. Woodbine, 61 Iowa, 83, 47 Am. Rep. 805; and Grumbine v. Washington, 2 MacArth. 578, 29 Am. Rep. 626.

The same doctrine is announced in Fox v. Richmond, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 326.

In the above case the plaintiff recovered against the city the amount of his services rendered in working out a fine imposed upon him by police authorities, as the city had appropriated them to its own use. In that case, however, the court further held that he could not claim damages against the city for the trespass committed on his person, and his only remedy for this was against the police justice, who was alone personally responsible.

A city is not liable for an arrest made by police officers which is illegal for want of a warrant. Pollock v. Louisville, 13 Bush, 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260, 263.

And in Taylor v. Owensboro, 98 Ky. 271, the city was freed from liability for damages for an unlawful arrest, conviction, and imprisonment in the workhouse of the city for the violation of a penal ordinance relating to the public peace which was unconstitutional, as it inflicted a greater penalty than the state statute allowed.

Since, under the sanction conferred by the Louisiana statutes and the authority given by the Constitution itself, watchmen may be appointed as a necessary branch of the police of the city, and their duties are the preservation of public order and tranquillity, and the city in appointing them exercises a governmental function conferred upon it in its public or municipal character for public purposes exclusively, it is not liable for the acts of its officers. Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 462, 61 Am. Dec. 218. In this case action was brought against the municipality by the owner of a slave for the wrongful act of the police officers in arresting the slave and inflicting injuries upon him, of which he died.

And in Liberty v. Hurd, 74 Me. 101, where the plaintiff had been unlawfully arrested for the nonpayment of a tax which had been previously paid, the city was held not liable, as the collector in making the arrest was not the agent of the town, but was a mere trespasser.

So, in Dunbar v. Boston, 112 Mass. 75, the city was held exempt from liability for the amount of a tax paid by the plaintiff under protest upon his illegal arrest by a constable and deputy clerk, since if the arrest was illegal no action could be maintained for the reason that the constable and deputy clerk serving the warrant of arrest did not act as servants or agents of the city, but as public officers of the law, and if they exceeded their authority the plaintiff's remedy was against them. In support of its contention the cases of Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721; Kimball v. Boston, 1 Allen, 417; and Rossire v. Boston, 4 Allen, 57, were relied upon.

And a town cannot be made liable for damages for an assault and false imprisonment by reason of the plaintiff's arrest for the nonpayment of city taxes, where the illegal acts of its officers or agents are not done under its authority previously conferred, or subsequently ratified. Perley v. Georgetown, 7 Gray, 464.

And a town is not responsible for damages occasioned by an arrest and false imprisonment of the plaintiff for the violation of a void town ordinance where the marshal and recorder of the town are without authority, express or implied, general or special, from the town to do the acts complained of as tortious and injurious, and are not its agents or officers. Worley v. Columbia, 88 Mo. 106, 110.

In Purcell v. Long Island City, 84 Hun, 439, an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution, the facts showed that the plaintiff had been arrested and imprisoned upon a charge brought against him at the instance of one of the school trustees of the city, but as the evidence was not sufficient to connect the defendant corporation with the acts of the trustees judgment was rendered for the municipal corporation. In this case the court stated that it was not then necessary for it to decide whether such an action could be maintained against a municipal corporation for the reason that the facts failed to connect the defendant corporation with the prosecution in the case.

In Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, Reversing 76 Hun, 390, the city was held not to be responsible for damages for an alleged false imprisonment arising out of the arrest of the plaintiff by a police officer appointed by the trustees of the Brooklyn bridge under N. Y. Laws 1875, chap. 300, § 8, under which laws the trustees had power to appoint an adequate police force to regulate and direct the travel over the bridge with the same authority as policemen of the cities of New York and Brooklyn.

In Coley v. Statesville, 121 N. C. 301, 316, the charter and ordinance of the city authorized the police to arrest persons found intoxicated upon its streets, and hold them until they were fit for trial or sober enough to give bail, and it was held that if the city appointed suitable police it incurred no liability for their action in making the arrest. In this case the ordinance authorized the arrest of such persons without warrants.

A corporation is not liable when the policeman for whose wrongful acts compensation is sought is acting under a municipal ordinance, and in an attempt to enforce its provisions or to apprehend one accused of violating them. Alvord v. Richmond, 3 Ohio N. P. 136.

In Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am.

Rep. 591, 592, it was sought to make the city responsible for a false arrest by a police officer which resulted in the loss of the plaintiff's horse and injury to his carriage. The court held that it was unnecessary to enter into any discussion of the question, inasmuch as it regarded it as settled adversely to the plaintiff by the case of Fox v. Northern Liberties, 3 Watts & S. 103, which was an action wherein the superintendent of the police had illegally seized the plaintiff's horse under the pretense that he had violated the ordinance, and the plaintiff brought action for damages for tort.

In the last-mentioned case the court stated that it was not conceivable how any blame could be fastened upon a municipal corporation because its officer, who was appointed or elected for the purpose of causing to be observed and carried into effect the ordinances duly passed by the corporation for its police, either mistakenly or wilfully, under color of his office, committed a trespass; for in such a case it could not be said that the officer acted under any authority given to him, either directly or indirectly by the corporation, but must be regarded as having done the trespass of his own will, and that he alone must be looked to for compensation by the party injured. Fox v. Northern Liberties, 3 Watts & S. 103.

Again, the city was relieved from liability for the acts of its officers in Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401, 407, for the false imprisonment of the plaintiff for vagrancy, for which alleged offense he had been arrested without a warrant and placed in custody and set at work breaking rock by the city marshal, although there was no sentence of hard labor imposed upon him, and he was injured while performing such work, as the acts of its officers were ultra vires, and were not done by them as the agents of the city.

So, in Corsicana v. White, 57 Tex. 382, the city was not liable for the wrongful acts of its authorities in a course of criminal proceedings taken against the plaintiff for obstructing a street, under which he was arrested and imprisoned, and money extorted from him, as, if liability existed at all, it was a personal liability attaching to the parties committing the trespass. To the same effect, Harrison v. Columbus, 44 Tex. 418.

In Rusher v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 152, where the plaintiff was arrested by the police officer without warrant and without affidavit made as required by law, upon the assumption that he had violated the city ordinance which provided for the conviction and punishment of "persons who permitted disorderly conduct" in their places of business; the city was not liable for damages, and the facts that the officers used unnecessary violence, and that the ordinance was not violated and therefore the arrest was unauthorized, and that the officer was incompetent, and that such incompetency was known or ought to have been known to the city, were held not to strengthen the plaintiff's case.

In order to make a corporation impliedly liable for the wrongful acts of an officer, it must not only be shown that the officer was its officer either generally as respects the particular wrong complained of, and not an independent public officer acting under his own discretion as to the manner of discharging his duties, nor as a public agent, but also that the wrong was done by such officer in the legitimate exercise of some duty of a corporate nature which devolved upon him by law, or by the express direction or authority of the corporation, and within the scope of its chartered powers. Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401, 407.

But if the ordinance or by-law is enacted for 44 L. R. A.

the sole benefit of a municipal corporation and of its citizens the city will be liable for the acts of its officers in enforcing such ordinance or by-law. McGraw v. Marion, 98 Ky. 673, 680, wherein the plaintiff had been imprisoned by the town marshal for failure to pay a fine imposed under an unconstitutional ordinance, and for the arrest and imprisonment the city was held liable.

In this case the court followed the ruling of the Massachusetts court in Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 513, 31 Am. Dec. 157, which held that a city was liable in an action on the case where an act was done on its authority which would warrant a like action against an individual, provided such act was done by the authority and order of the city government, or of those branches of the city government invested with jurisdiction to act for the corporation upon the subject to which the particular act related, or where after the act had been done it had been ratified by the corporation or by any similar acts of its officers. In that case, however, the action was brought against the city of Boston for an obstruction of a passageway by the officers of the city.

And police commissioners were held liable in an action for false imprisonment brought against them for the wrongful arrest and imprisonment of a person for appearing on the streets wearing the uniform of a police officer, upon the ground that the act was not judicial or authorized by law. Bolton v. Vellines, 94 Va. 393.

III. Application of the maxim Respondet superior.

In Taylor v. Owensboro, 98 Ky. 271, 278, wherein it was sought to make the city responsible for an alleged unlawful arrest, conviction, and confinement in the workhouse of the city for violation of a city ordinance relating to riots and unlawful assemblages and breaches of the peace, the court relied upon the doctrine of respondet superior as announced in 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 974, to the effect that if the corporation appoints or elects the officers or servants or agents it can control them in the discharge of their duties, and continue or remove them and hold them responsible for the manner in which they discharge their trusts, and if such duties relate to the exercise of corporate powers, and are for the benefit of the corporation in its local or special interest, they may justly be regarded as the agents or servants of the corporation, and the maxim Respondet superior would apply. But if they are elected or appointed by the corporation in obedience to statute to perform public services not peculiarly local or corporate, but because such mode of selection was deemed expedient by the legislature in the distribution of governmental power and if they are independent of the corporation as to the tenure of office and the manner of the discharge of duties, they cannot be regarded as the agents or servants of the corporation for whose acts or negligence the city would be liable, but they are in such a case to be looked upon as public or state officers with such powers and duties as the statute conferred upon them, and the doctrine of respondet superior would not apply. This principle is also sustained by the cases of Pollock v. Louisville, 13 Bush, 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260; Jolly v. Hawesville, 89 Ky. 279; Prather v. Lexington, 13 B. Mon. 550, 56 Am. Dec. 585; McGraw v. Marion, 98 Ky. 673.

If the officers are elected or appointed by the city government in obedience to a statute or charter power to perform a public service not particularly local or corporate in its nature, but because the mode of selection is deemed expedient by the legislature in distributing the powers of government if they are independent of the corporation as to tenure of office and the manner of discharging their duties,—then they are not to be regarded as servants or agents of the corporation, for whose acts or negligence it is impliedly liable; they would be regarded as public or state officers with such powers and duties as the statute confers upon them, and the doctrine of respondeat superior is not applicable. Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401, 407, supra.

The following cases which are strictly in line follow the above doctrine in holding that in such cases the municipality is not liable for false imprisonment and unlawful arrest, upon the maxim Respondeat superior: Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505; Trammell v. Russellville, 34 Ark. 105, 38 Am. Rep. 1; Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 468; McElroy v. Albany, 65 Ga. 388, 389, 38 Am. Rep. 791; Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154; Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654; Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243; Worley v. Columbia, 88 Mo. 106; Alamango v. Albany County Supers. 25 Hun, 551; Albany v. Cunliff, 2 N. Y. 165; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Stoddard v. Saratoga Springs, 127 N. Y. 261; Fox v. Northern Liberties, 3 Watts & S. 103; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am. Rep. 501; Rusher v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 152; Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401, 407; Little v. Madison, 49 Wis. 605, 35 Am. Rep. 793; Kansas City v. Lemen, 12 U. S. App. 640, 57 Fed. Rep. 905, 906, 6 C. C. A. 627.

As to when the maxim would apply, see the case of Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, 454, supra, II.

IV. Liability as affected by ratification.

It has been held that as a city has no power to authorize a police officer to commit an unlawful act, and cannot be held liable therefor, it cannot be held responsible for the same by ratification. Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154.

In the above case it was sought to make a city responsible for the acts of a police officer in arresting the plaintiff under pretense of enforcing an ordinance of the city providing for the punishment of intoxicated persons. The plaintiff alleged that he was not drunk, but that nevertheless the city ratified the acts of the deputy marshal and caused him to be imprisoned maliciously, and without probable cause prosecuted him for the offense of which he was finally acquitted.

It is not within the power of a city to authorize its officers to perform an illegal act which will render them liable for an action of false imprisonment, and if the city has no power in the first place to authorize the commission of such act, it can have no power to ratify it after it has been performed. Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654.

And as a city has no power to authorize a police officer to commit an unlawful act, what it cannot do directly it cannot do indirectly by ratification. Blake v. Pontiac, 49 Ill. App. 543, 550, which was an action for false imprisonment and unlawful detention.

And it has been held that if a town does not authorize its treasurer to commit the plaintiff to prison for not paying a tax, he does not ratify the act of imprisonment by paying the collector's fees, and the city is not liable. Perley v. Georgetown, 7 Gray, 464.

In the above case the court further stated that even if the payment of the collector's fees 44 L. R. A.

for the commitment of the plaintiff, and the jailer's charges, had been paid by the town, such act would not render the town liable in an action for false imprisonment, as such payment might have been made for different purposes than that of ratifying or justifying the act of the officer.

V. Reasons for the rule.

The authorities place this kind of a servant on special grounds. He is a police officer; his duties do not lie in the line of special private duties or rights of the corporation, but they are duties connected with the public peace in which the state is interested, and in a very wide sense he is a state officer; many of his duties are connected with the prevention and punishment of crime, and as to such officers the ruling is almost universal that the corporation, though it appoints them, is not liable for torts committed by them. Cook v. Macon, 54 Ga. 465.

The nonliability of municipalities in such cases is based upon the ground that they are subdivisions of the state, created in part for convenience in enabling the state to enforce its laws in each locality with promptness, and simultaneously, when occasion requires it, in the different subdivisions within its boundaries, and that while enforcing those laws which pertain to the general welfare of the state, and to the people generally in all its subdivisions, the state acts through these subdivisions and uses them and their officers as its agents, for the purposes for which a state government is instituted and granted sovereign power for state purposes; and further, that the state has not made them the insurers of public or private interest, or liable for any careless or willful acts of its officers. Alvord v. Richmond, 2 Ohio N. P. 136.

In the distribution of the powers of government the legislature has made municipal corporations special public agents, and delegates to them the authority, to a limited extent, to enact and enforce prescribed police regulations within their respective localities, and in the execution of such laws the officers of the corporation discharge duties for the public rather than the corporation, and this is true whether the laws were enacted by the state or by the corporate authorities. Any officer of a municipal corporation whose duty in whole or in part is to enforce observance of any such laws or ordinances, while so engaged is acting for the public, and is not the agent of the municipality in its domestic or corporate character. Laurel v. Blue, 1 Ind. App. 128, et supra.

The authority to enact by-laws is delegated to the city by the sovereign power, and the exercise of the authority gives to such enactments the same force and effect as if they had been passed directly by the legislature, and in the enforcement of such by-laws officers act in their public capacity, and not as agents of the city. Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Rep. 721, 722.

The decisions are based upon the doctrine that all laws and ordinances intended to secure the peace and good order, or to preserve the health and morals, of the public, are in the nature of police regulations, and are essentially governmental in their character. Their enactment and enforcement are functions of the sovereignty, and they are designed for the benefit of the public as distinguished from the municipality. Laurel v. Blue, 1 Ind. App. 128.

And the duty imposed in enforcing an ordinance in the nature of a police regulation which the city has power to enact and which is passed as necessary for the good government of the city or town, is one which is owed to the public. Vaughtman v. Waterloo, 14 Ind. App. 649, 632.

Police officers can in no sense be regarded as agents or servants of the city. Their duties are of a public nature and their appointment is devolved on cities and towns by the legislature as a convenient mode of exercising the functions of government, but this does not render the city liable for their unlawful or negligent acts, as the detection and arrest of offenders, the preservation of the public peace, the enforcement of the laws, and other similar powers and duties with which these officers and constables are intrusted, are derived from the law, and not from the city or town under which they hold their appointment, and for the mode in which they exercise their powers and duties a city or town cannot be held liable. Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721, 722.

The above theories are further illustrated and adopted by the following cases: Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 489, 70 Am. Dec. 505, 510; Trammell v. Russellville, 34 Ark. 105, 38 Am. Rep. 1, 3; Grumbine v. Washington, 2 MacArth. 578, 29 Am. Rep. 626, 628; Harris v. Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290; Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353; Blake v. Pontiac, 49 Ill. App. 543, 551; Lafayette v. Timberlake, 88 Ind. 330; Faulkner v. Aurora, 85 Ind. 130, 44 Am. Rep. 1; Anderson v. East, 117 Ind. 126, 2 L. R. A. 712; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154; Peters v. Lindsborg, 40 Kan. 654; Kansas City v. Leinen, 12 U. S. App. 640, 57 Fed. Rep. 905, 906, 6 C. C. A. 627; Prather v. Lexington, 13 B. Mon. 559, 56 Am. Dec. 585; Pollock v. Louisville, 13 Bush, 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260, 263; Taylor v. Owensboro, 98 Ky. 271, 278; Curran v. Boston, 151 Mass. 505, 8 L. R. A. 243; Dunbar v. Boston, 112 Mass. 75; Kimball v. Boston, 1 Allen, 417; Rossire v. Boston, 4 Allen, 57; Gullikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 278, 279; Worley v. Columbia, 88 Mo. 106, 109; Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, 454; Rusner v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 152; Royce v. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401, 407; Fox v. Northern Liberties, 3 Watts & S. 103; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am. Rep. 591; Trescott v. Waterloo, 26 Fed. Rep. 592, 593.

VI. English and Canadian decisions.

In Clark's Case, 5 Coke, 64a, which was an action of false imprisonment, the defense was that the imprisonment was justified for the reason that power had been given the city to make the ordinance in question, for refusal to obey which the plaintiff was imprisoned. The court held that the mayor and city authorities had no power to make the by-law including the imprisonment, and that it was no plea that the by-law was made with the consent of the plaintiff and other citizens.

In Walker v. Montreal, 4 Leg. N. (Super. Ct.) 215, the plaintiff was arrested for indecent exposure under the Canadian vagrant act, 32 & 33 Vict. chap. 28, by a municipal policeman without a warrant some time after the offense had occurred. The city was held liable in damages as under the act the arrest, after the interval of time, was unauthorized and illegal.

In McSorley v. St. John, 6 Can. S. C. 531, the plaintiff had been arrested and imprisoned for nonpayment of an assessment made for street purposes under a statute relating to the streets of the defendant city. He brought action for the arrest and false imprisonment. It was held that the party who issued the warrant (the receiver of taxes) which was founded on a void assessment, committed a trespass, and that he was at the time a servant of the corporation and under its control, and specially appointed to collect and levy the amount of the assessment, the maxim respondet superior applied, and that therefore the city was liable.

In this case, however, there was a dissenting opinion by Chief Justice Ritchie, and also by Justice Taschereau, in which they inclined to the opposite opinion, and cited the case of Maxmillian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 165, 20 Am. Rep. 468, among other American authorities supporting the contrary contention.

In Longuenil v. Brals, 11 Rev. Leg. (Montreal Super. Ct.) 503, a barrier erected by a municipal corporation in a street not yet opened to the public was broken through by a person upon a claim of right to pass through the street. He was arrested on the spot by a constable and afterwards liberated on account of the informality in the warrant subsequently preferred. His action against the municipality for false imprisonment and illegal arrest failed inasmuch as the erection of the barrier was within its rights. E. W.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, ex rel.
Charles S. DENEEN, State's Attorney,
Appt.,

v.

Robert M. SIMON.

(176 Ill. 165.)

1. Judicial power is not conferred upon a registrar of deeds within the prohibition of a constitutional provision separating the departments of government by a statute requiring him to make certain entries when it appears to him that the person intending to create a charge on property "has the title and right to create such charge," and that the person in whose favor it is to be made "is entitled by the terms of the act to have the same registered,"—especially where a party aggrieved is given the right to apply to a court of equity for relief.

2. A statute permitting a registrar of deeds to record a transfer of land held in trust upon the written opinion of two examiners that the transfer is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust, which registration shall be conclusive in favor of the grantee, merely abrogates the rule which requires the purchaser of trust property to see to the application of the purchase money, and does not confer judicial power upon the registrar.

3. The rule of law as to the notice afforded by the registration of a transfer of property which is subject to a condition or trust may be changed by the legislature.

4. A statute providing for the registration of land titles after they are established in a court of equity may be upheld as against all upon whom service of process is properly made, although it contains a void provision permitting judgment against a resident of the state notified only by publication.

NOTE.—As to the constitutionality of Torrens registration acts, see also People, Kern, v. Chase (Ill.) 36 L. R. A. 105, and State, Monnett, v. Guilbert (Ohio) 38 L. R. A. 519.
44 L. R. A.

5. A landowner is not deprived of his property without due process of law by a statute which provides that after the title has been judicially determined and registered, the tenure of the owner, the right of transfer, and encumbrance, and all rights subsequently accruing shall be determined in accordance with the rules prescribed by that statute.
6. A statute making a judicial determination of title to land forever binding and conclusive upon all persons after the lapse of two years may be given effect against parties to the proceeding and persons who must bring legal proceedings to establish their rights, although it would be void in favor of persons in possession of all they claim who were not parties to the proceeding.
7. A statute will be construed as a limitation law if it can be upheld by such construction while a literal construction of it would destroy vested rights.
8. That a statute is to take effect only after a favorable vote by the counties does not make it void as an attempt to delegate legislative power or as making the law a special one.

(Boggs, J., dissents.)

(October 24, 1898.)

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Criminal Court for Cook County in favor of respondent in a quo warranto proceeding to determine by what authority respondent was exercising the powers and duties of the office of registrar of titles in and for the County of Cook. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles S. Deneen, with Messrs. Pence & Carpenter, Shope, Mathis, Barrett, & Rogers, for appellant:

The act of the general assembly entitled "An Act Concerning Land Titles," approved May 1, 1897, is unconstitutional because it purports to vest the registrar or the registrars and examiners of titles with judicial power.

People, Kern, v. Chase, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105.

Equitable liens arising in various ways, based upon facts dehors the record and which it is impossible to have appear upon the record, are attempted to be covered by conferring upon the registrar judicial power to pass upon the validity of such claims, and that, too, upon ex parte affidavits.

The power of the registrar touching all these subjects is a judicial power which affects the rights of individuals.

State, Atty. Gen., v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L. R. A. 519.

Section 46 of the act reads: "The bringing of land under this act shall imply an agreement which shall run with the land, that the same shall be subject to the terms of the act and all amendments and alterations thereof."

This cannot amount to a stipulation to 44 L. R. A.

submit all controversies to the arbitration of the registrar.

The act of registration is only a declaration by the registered owner, and not a covenant or agreement.

The covenantor binds no one but himself, and may revoke his act prior to the time when any other person obtains rights thereunder.

Hamilton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 124 Ill. 235.

An agreement to arbitrate, if this be an agreement, cannot be specifically enforced, and any party in interest may revoke the same.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 664, 667: Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365; Scott v. Avery, L. R. 5 H. L. Cas. 811; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 154 Ill. 9; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 30 L. ed. 915; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 468.

Even if this proceeding could be held to be an arbitration, still it could have no force, inasmuch as no notice is required to be given to the parties in interest.

Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 31; Hoagland v. Creed, 81 Ill. 506; Klokke v. Dodge, 103 Ill. 125; Leman v. Sherman, 117 Ill. 657.

The registrar's determination as an officer is given the force and effect of a judgment: the judgment is required to be entered of record and a certificate is issued upon the basis of such judgment, and it is notice to all the world.

Judicial power cannot be conferred by consent, either upon an individual or upon a court not invested with it by law.

Hoagland v. Creed, 81 Ill. 506; Fahs v. Darling, 82 Ill. 142; Bishop v. Nelson, 83 Ill. 601; Cobb v. People, 84 Ill. 511; Fleischman v. Walker, 91 Ill. 318; Richards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 Ill. 516.

There is no reference in the act that he is to sit as arbitrator, but it does appear from the act that parties were entitled to expect from the registrar valid, judicial action as an authorized court. Consent cannot empower him to exercise these powers.

Fahs v. Darling, 82 Ill. 142; Richards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 Ill. 516.

The statute is unconstitutional because the proceedings providing for initial registration do not constitute "due process of law."

A decree undertaking to bind persons residing within the state, and who do not conceal themselves, upon substituted service, and not upon actual service of summons, is a nullity, and cannot bind such parties.

People, Atty. Gen., v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L. R. A. 519; Brown v. Levee Comrs. 50 Miss. 468; Bardwell v. Collins, 44 Minn. 97, 9 L. R. A. 152; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 43; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. (*404,) 500; Webster v. Reid, 11 How. 459, 13 L. ed. 770; Cook v. Union Bank, 14 New South Wales, L. R. (Eq.) 230; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Blatchford v. Newberry, 99 Ill. 11.

A statute which requires that the owner of property in actual possession, who has never been cut off by any judicial proceedings, may be deprived of his estate unless he shall find out about such judicial proceedings and bring suit within two years thereafter, is not a limitation law but an act of confiscation, and it is unconstitutional. It is an effort to divest property by act of the legislature.

Dingey v. Paston, 60 Miss. 1038; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Cooley, Const. Lim. *366; Harding v. Butts, 18 Ill. 503; Newland v. Marsh, 19 Ill. 376; Higgins v. Crosby, 40 Ill. 280; Paullin v. Hale, 40 Ill. 274; Steele v. Gellatly, 41 Ill. 39; Orthwein v. Thomas, 127 Ill. 569, 4 L. R. A. 434; Newell v. Montgomery, 129 Ill. 58; Miller v. Pence, 132 Ill. 149; Eldridge v. Kuehl, 27 Iowa, 160; Wain v. Shearman, 8 Serg. & R. 357.

Section 39 of this act provides that the first certificate of registration shall for two years be prima facie evidence that the provisions of the law have been complied with, and that the same has been issued in compliance with a valid order or decree, and that the title to the land is as therein stated; and after that it shall be conclusive evidence of the same facts.

This throws upon the real owner, who may be in adverse possession, or who may be in constructive possession, the burden of disproving the legal effect of the certificate, and of proving by the preponderance of evidence his own title, thus changing that rule inherent in the maxim "due process of law" which has always presumed the defendant to be innocent or in the right until the contrary is proved.

Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 445; State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 339; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 329, 18 L. ed. 364; Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283; King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334; Copp v. Heniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am. Rep. 194; Francis v. Baker, 11 R. I. 103, 23 Am. Rep. 424; State v. Beavick, 13 R. I. 211, 43 Am. Rep. 26; People v. Lyon, 27 Hun, 180; Hand v. Ballou, 12 N. Y. 543.

The presumption of innocence is one of those fundamental and unchangeable rules of the common law comprehended in the phrase "due process of law" and cannot, therefore, be changed by legislation.

Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 445; State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 339; Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283; King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334.

The statute was a delegation of legislative power, and it was unconstitutional for the legislature to provide it should go into effect by counties only after a favorable vote of the electors of each county.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. *191 (228); Opinions of the Justices, 160 Mass. 586, 23 L. R. A. 113; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793.

It is not a general, but a special, law.

People, Klokke, v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388; People, Miller, v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 594; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 598, 56 Am. Rep. 793.

All classification must be based upon substantial distinctions which make one class really different from another.

State, Richards, v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 436; Millet v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Fraser v. People, School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79.

Being a special law it is unconstitutional because upon subjects as to which special legislation is prohibited, and because in some particulars obnoxious to special grants of the Constitution.

People v. Loomis, 96 Ill. 377; Klokke v. Dodge, 103 Ill. 125.

If the purpose of a law "is to accomplish a single object only, and some of its provisions are void, the whole must fall unless sufficient remains to effect the object without the aid of the invalid portion.

People, Miller, v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 595; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 211, 212.

On petition for rehearing.

If we concede that the acts of the registrar under §§ 47, 68, and 69 are ministerial in their character, then they may be disputed and set aside in a proper judicial proceeding, and any statute which makes such acts conclusive is of itself unconstitutional.

United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 525, 17 L. ed. 765; Ballance v. McFaddon, 12 Ill. 317; Townsend v. Radcliffe, 63 Ill. 9; Andrews v. People, 75 Ill. 605; Larson v. Dickey, 39 Neb. 478; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1050, 1051.

The legislature cannot indirectly dispose of a man's title by prescribing conclusive rules of evidence.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1050, 1051; Curry v. Hinman, 11 Ill. 420; Andrews v. People, 75 Ill. 605; Larson v. Dickey, 39 Neb. 463; Wantlan v. White, 19 Ind. 470; Blackwell, Tax Titles, 100 et seq.; also 5th ed. §§ 847-1120; Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 37 L. ed. 410.

Any statute which undertakes to deprive the courts of judicial power in any particular case is so far unconstitutional, null, and void.

Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 154 Ill. 9; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 664-667; Leman v. Sherman, 117 Ill. 657.

Mr. Harvey B. Hurd, for appellee:

A part of a statute may be declared valid while another part of the same statute may be held to be void.

Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141; Hinze v. People, 92 Ill. 400; Meyers v. People, 67 Ill. 503.

There are many acts that are of a quasi judicial nature which may be done by other than the judiciary.

People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793; Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75; Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 81 Am. Dec. 680; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 498; Springer v. Walters, 37 Ill. App. 332; Wright v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 286; Crawford v. People, 82 Ill. 557; Lake v. Decatur, 91 Ill. 597; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610; Owen ers of Lands v. People, Stookey, 113 Ill. 296; People, Longenecker, v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 683; Reid v. Morton, 119 Ill. 118.

The trial of right of property before a sheriff with a jury is not a judicial proceeding.

Rowe v. Bowen, 28 Ill. 116.

The act is permissive and not compulsory, and does not deprive anyone of his property without "due process of law" against "the law of the land," nor is it class legislation. Burdick v. People, 149 Ill. 600, 24 L. R. A. 152.

The act is general and not "special" or "local."

People, Klokke, v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388; People, Miller, v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 585; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793; West Chicago Park Comrs. v. McMullen, 134 Ill. 176, 10 L. R. A. 215; Williams v. People, 121 Ill. 84; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610; People, Meyer, v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 319.

The contention that the legislature is under some necessity to except the rights of infants and others under disability from the operation of limitations or the binding effect of rules of evidence is without foundation.

Meeks v. Vassault, 3 Sawy. 206; Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 364; Rogers v. Brown, 61 Mo. 187; Swearingen v. Robertson, 30 Wis. 402.

A statute of limitations is at least good as a shield, and when possession has been taken by or under the person in whose favor it has run, it may be used as a sword even against the patent owner.

Newland v. Marsh, 19 Ill. 376; Hinchman v. Whetstone, 23 Ill. 185; Paullin v. Hale, 40 Ill. 274; Hale v. Gladfelder, 52 Ill. 91; Meacham v. Winstanly, 77 Ill. 269; McDuffee v. Sinnott, 119 Ill. 449; Gage v. Hampton, 127 Ill. 87, 2 L. R. A. 512; Gage v. Smith, 142 Ill. 191.

The question of what shall sustain the running of a statute of limitation is a question for the legislature and not for the courts, provided always the terms and conditions of the bar are reasonable.

Stearns v. Gittings, 23 Ill. 387.

While the time and opportunity for the assertion of the right must be reasonable, and while the act cannot transfer title, yet the Constitution has not prescribed, nor can the courts prescribe, the provisions which such an act must contain.

The burnt records act can only be sustained, as to many persons, upon the same theory.

Bertrand v. Taylor, 87 Ill. 235; Mulvey v. Gibbons, 87 Ill. 367; Heacock v. Lubuke, 107 Ill. 396; Bradish v. Grant, 119 Ill. 606; Heacock v. Hosmer, 109 Ill. 245; Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 447; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 338, 33 L. ed. 909.

Messrs. Oliver & Mecartney, also for appellee:

If there are vested interests in a class, there is a class in existence competent to 44 L. R. A.

maintain or defend an action and represent the class not ascertained.

A decree of court operating upon such class in existence will bind the class not ascertained, and if there is no class in being to represent such class not ascertained, it is because there are "no vested interests to be protected."

In such cases neither decrees of court nor acts of legislatures take away vested rights.

Miller v. Texas & P. R. Co. 132 U. S. 662, 33 L. ed. 487; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 28 L. ed. 1015.

There can be no valid objection to any act of the legislature that it deprives a person of what he does not possess.

Price v. Sessions, 3 How. 624, 11 L. ed. 755; Van Inwagen v. Chicago, 61 Ill. 31; Weidenger v. Spruance, 101 Ill. 278.

There is no rule inherent in the maxim "due process of law" that rules of evidence concerning burden of proof must remain unchanged.

Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 35 L. R. A. 176; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 683; Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 447.

The provision that the act should go into effect by counties only after a favorable vote of the electors of each county is not a delegation of legislative power.

Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483; Smith v. Janesville, 26 Wis. 291; State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357.

The law is general because it operates alike upon all brought within the relations provided for, and extends to all persons doing an act which brings them into that relation.

People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338; People, Klokke, v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388.

The act complained of is a general law, but it is sufficiently local in its operation and application to particular districts or localities to render it proper and constitutional to be submitted to the voters of any particular county for final adoption.

Opinions of the Justices, 160 Mass. 586, 23 L. R. A. 113; People v. Reynolds, 10 Ill. 1; Potvin v. Johnson, 108 Ill. 76; Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 653; People, Wilson, v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37; Erlinger v. Boneau, 51 Ill. 94; Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 472.

Laws which bear alike upon all members belonging to the same class are general laws, and are laws which are equal in effect and uniform in operation, according to the construction of the courts.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56; McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338.

Cities, towns, and villages may be classified according to population.

People, Klokke, v. Wright, 70 Ill. 388; Potvin v. Johnson, 108 Ill. 70; People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793.

The legislature could provide that our very circuits or the judges or one or more of them could perform the duties of registrar and hear evidence, etc., and follow the exact methods of ordinary cases at law, and all this would not be an exercise of judicial power.

United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40, 14 L. ed. 42; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94; Davidson v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Missouri P. E. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463.

Messrs. George W. Smith and Theodore Sheldon, with Mr. Robert S. Iles, also for appellee.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action originated in the court below upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto against appellee, requiring him to show by what authority of law he was exercising the powers and duties of the office of registrar of titles in and for the county of Cook. In answer to the information, the defendant set up the act of the legislature entitled "An Act Concerning Land Titles," approved and in force May 1, 1897, commonly known as the "Torrens Law." Laws 1897, p. 141. The relator filed a general demurrer to this answer, which was overruled, and the information dismissed. The ground of the demurrer was that the act under which the respondent sought to justify is unconstitutional and void, and that is the question now presented for our decision. The act is very voluminous, and some of its provisions are not skilfully drafted. Its validity is attacked on numerous grounds, and the briefs and arguments on either side are very extended. We will endeavor to consider the objections raised to the law, in the order in which they are discussed by counsel.

It is first insisted that the act confers judicial powers upon the registrar of titles, or upon him and the examiners of title, in violation of the Constitution of this state. A somewhat similar act, passed in 1895, was held invalid, on that ground, in People, Kern, v. Chase, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105. By the provisions of the law of 1895, the registrar was clothed with power to determine the ownership of land when application was made for the initial registration thereof, and to issue his certificate accordingly. The present act provides that the ownership shall be determined by a decree in equity entered in a court of competent jurisdiction, upon which decree the registrar shall issue the first certificate of registration. In this regard his duties under the present law are clearly ministerial only, and the fatal objection to the former act is therefore removed. But it is insisted that the law is still vulnerable, in that it vests judicial power in the registrar in the performance of his duties as to subsequent registrations. Waiving the question whether this would, if true, necessarily vitiate the whole act, is the position tenable? Like a mere recorder, the registrar is required to file all deeds, mortgages, leases, and other instruments affecting the title to land, and make proper notations upon the instruments and upon the record. He is to keep a record, to be known as the

"Register of Titles," in which must be entered the original and all subsequent certificates of title, and such notations as to liens, encumbrances, and the like as are requisite to show the true condition of the title. When any instrument is filed with him which is intended to create a charge, lien, or encumbrance upon land, it is made his duty, by § 60, to enter a memorial upon the register, and also upon the original certificate. Thus far his duties are clearly and simply ministerial. But it is contended this § 60 authorizes him to determine the validity of liens, encumbrances, or charges, and the argument is that this is an exercise of judicial power, which, under our Constitution, can be conferred upon no officer or tribunal save those which belong to the judicial department. The language of the section applicable to this question is as follows: "It appearing to the registrar that the person intending to create the charge has the title and right to create such charge, and that the person in whose favor the same is sought to be created is entitled by the terms of this act to have the same registered, he shall enter upon the proper folium of the register, and also upon the owner's certificate, a memorial of the purport thereof," etc. It will be noticed that the provisions in case of a transfer of the property are substantially the same. Section 47 says: "Upon its being made to appear to the registrar that the transferee [evidently intending transferrer] has the title or estate proposed to be transferred and is entitled to make the conveyance, and that the transferee has the right to have such estate or interest transferred to him, he shall make out and register as hereinbefore provided, a new certificate," etc. Article 3 of the Constitution of 1870 reads as follows: "The powers of the government of this state are divided into three distinct departments,—the legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person, or collection of persons, being one of these departments, shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except as hereinafter expressly directed or permitted." Rev. Stat. p. 60. The question therefore is, Can the legislature devolve the duties named upon an officer not a member of the judicial department?

That the duties mentioned are judicial in their nature may be admitted, but it does not necessarily follow that their exercise is prohibited by the constitutional provision to all but officers belonging to the judicial department. Numerous instances may be cited, as is done in Owners of Lands v. People, Stookey, 113 Ill. 298 (referred to in People, Kern, v. Chase, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105), where executive and legislative officers are authorized to exercise powers which in a sense are judicial, and the laws imposing such duties held not to be in violation of the constitutional provision quoted. These duties or powers are generally and properly termed "quasi judicial," to distinguish them from those which are "judicial," in the sense of belonging to the judicial department exclusively. In theory, all governmental power is divided into the three named divisions, and upon a casual consideration the division would seem to present no difficulty, but in the practical application of the principles involved courts have been compelled to observe that the line of the demarcation between the exclusive powers of the three departments is far from clear. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1007. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations on the Legislative Branch of the Government, has given a definition of "judicial power." It is this: "The power which adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end construes and applies the laws." As a general definition of the functions of the judicial department, it is sufficiently accurate, and we adopted it in the case of People, Kern, v. Chase, 165 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 105. We then thought, and are of the opinion still, that it was applicable to that case; the functions of the registrar, under the act of 1895, being not quasi judicial, merely, but strictly so, and such as are usually exercised by the courts alone, constituting the exercise of judicial power within the constitutional prohibition. Under the present act, his duties more nearly resemble those frequently exercised by members of the executive department. The definition given by Judge Cooley does not attempt to mark the line between those quasi judicial functions, which may be vested elsewhere, and those strictly judicial, which can be reposed nowhere save in the courts; and for that reason it cannot be properly adopted in this case. As we said in another case: "It may in many cases be a matter of difficulty to determine the precise line which divides the executive and judicial functions. It has been said that where the functionary hears, considers, and determines, then he performs judicial acts. This definition is not strictly accurate. . . . It embraces cases that are not judicial, and hence is too comprehensive." Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94, on page 108. And, appreciating the difficulty of defining the limits of the several departments of government, we also said, in an earlier case: "Nevertheless, when we come to apply them to actual controversies growing out of the varied relations which the citizens sustain to the state and to one another, we encounter doubts and difficulties of the gravest character. Just where the dividing line is to be drawn between judicial and legislative power, with respect to certain subjects, often presents questions about which enlightened courts and eminent jurists widely differ. So, while the powers of courts seem so very simple and clearly defined, yet, in the application of them to actual cases, their proper limits are often difficult to determine." Dodge v. Cole, 97 Ill. 338, on page 357. Also: "The 1st and 2d sections of the first article of the Constitution [of 1818] divide the powers of government into three departments,—the legislative, executive, and judicial,—and declare that neither of these departments shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except as expressly permitted. This is a declaration of a fundamental principle, and, although one of vital importance, it is to be understood in a limited and qualified sense. It does not mean that the legislative, executive, and judicial power should be kept so entirely separate and distinct as to have no connection or dependence the one upon the other; but its true meaning, both in theory and practice, is, that the whole power of two or more of these departments shall not be lodged in the same hands, whether of one or many." Field v. People, McClelland, 3 Ill. 79, on page 83. Judge Story, in his work on the Constitution, says: "But when we speak of a separation of the three great departments of government, and maintain that that separation is indispensable to public liberty, we are to understand this maxim in a limited sense. It is not meant to affirm that they must be kept wholly separate and distinct, and have no common link of connection or dependence, the one upon the other, in the slightest degree. The true meaning is that the whole power of one of these departments should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of either of the other departments, and that such exercise of the whole would subvert the principles of a free Constitution." 1 Story, Const. 5th ed. § 525. "Notwithstanding the memorable terms in which this maxim of a division of powers is incorporated into the bills of rights of many of our state Constitutions, the same mixture will be found provided for, and indeed required, in the same solemn instruments of government. . . . Indeed, there is not a single Constitution of any state in the Union which does not practically embrace some acknowledgment of the maxim, and at the same time some admixture of powers constituting an exception to it. Id. p. 395, § 527. In the case of Den, Murray, v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372, in discussing whether the issuing of a distress warrant by the solicitor of the treasury was the exercise of executive or of judicial power, the Supreme Court of the United States (page 280, 15 L. ed. 376) says: "It is not sufficient to bring such matters under the judicial power, that they involve the exercise of judgment upon law and fact. That the auditing of the accounts of a receiver of public moneys may be, in an enlarged sense, a judicial act, must be admitted. So are all those administrative duties the performance of which involves an inquiry into the existence of facts and the application to them of rules of law. . . . We do not doubt the power of Congress to provide by law that such a question shall form the subject-matter of a suit in which the judicial power can be exerted. The act of 1820 makes such a provision for reviewing the decision of the accounting officers of the treasury. But, until reviewed, it is final and binding, and the question is, Whether its subject-matter is necessarily, and without regard to the consent of Congress, a judicial controversy, and we are of opinion it is not."

From these authorities, it is apparent that the mere fact that the registrar is required by this act to inquire into the existence of certain facts, and to apply the law thereto, in order to determine what his official conduct shall be, and that his action may affect private rights, does not constitute the exercise of judicial power, strictly speaking. It is not the intention of these two sections (60 and 47) to provide a tribunal for the adjudication of disputes concerning land titles. The primary purpose is the issuing of the certificate, and the exercise of the judgment of the registrar is incidental. The prohibition in question "has never been applied to those cases where judgment is exercised as incident to the execution of a ministerial power." Owners of Lands v. People, Stookley, 113 Ill. 296. The powers exercised by the registrar under this law are analogous to those exercised by the commissioner of patents. A power of decision is given to that officer in many matters, not only between the government and the patentee, but also between different claimants, as to priority, patentability, and like matters, and in the performance of these duties it has never been considered that he was encroaching upon the judicial domain. They are also, in a measure, like the duties performed by officers of the land office. Duties of a similar nature, involving judgment or discretion, and the application of the law to the facts, are devolved both under the state and Federal laws upon many other executive officers, legally. In some instances, it is even held that in the exercise of such judgment the officer is free from judicial interference. But in the case of the registrar this act provides that any person feeling himself aggrieved by the act or neglect of this officer, in any matter pertaining to the duties required of him, may file a petition in equity in the proper court, making the registrar and other persons interested parties defendant, and that the court may proceed therein as in other cases in equity, and may make such order or decree as shall be according to equity in the premises and the purport of the act. This, with the well-known jurisdiction of the courts in mandamus, injunction, rescission, cancellation, bills of relief, and the like, will effectually protect the citizen against any arbitrary conduct on the part of the officer.

Recurring to the duties of the registrar, we find that in case of a tax sale or judgment, or levy under an attachment or execution, or in case of a mechanic's lien, the registrar, upon the filing of the proper certificate, enters a memorial thereof upon his record, and, in case the lien ripens into a title, the former certificate of title is canceled, and a new one issued to the proper party. These duties do not differ in character from those already mentioned, and what has been said is equally applicable thereto, also. Particular stress, however, is laid by counsel for appellant upon the contention that the duties of the registrar as to the subsequent registration of land held in trust upon conditions or limitations are the exercise of judicial power, in violation of the terms of the Constitution. The act requires, where the land is subject to a trust, condition, or limitation, that the original certificate issued shall contain the words "in trust," "upon conditions," or "with limitations," as the case may be. When such land is to be transferred, it is provided that the registrar shall not issue a new certificate, nor shall any transfer of or charge upon or dealing with the land be made, unless pursuant to the order of some court, or upon the written opinion of the two examiners that such transfer, charge, or dealing is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust, condition, or limitation, whereupon he shall proceed to register the title; and such registration is to be conclusive in favor of the grantee, and those claiming under him in good faith and for a valuable consideration, that such transfer, charge, or other dealing is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust, condition, or limitation. Sections 68, 69. If the registration be made pursuant to the order or finding of a court of competent jurisdiction, the acts of the registrar are purely ministerial; but, if made upon the opinion of the two examiners, he is required to exercise a judgment of his own. These duties do not differ materially from those already examined, except that here the decision is made conclusive, in favor of the person taking the transfer in good faith and for a valuable consideration, that the transfer or charge is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust, condition, or limitation. This does no more than abrogate the rule in equity which requires the purchaser of trust property to see to the application of the purchase money, and the inclination of courts now is to withdraw from that rule. We recently said, quoting from Judge Story: "These are some of the most important and nice distinctions which have been adopted by courts of equity upon this intricate topic, and they lead strongly to the conclusion, to which not only eminent jurists, but also eminent judges, have arrived, that it would have been far better to have held in all cases that the party having the right to sell had also the right to receive the purchase money, without any further responsibility on the part of the purchaser as to its application." Seaverns v. Presbyterian Hospital, 173 Ill. 414, on page 424. This statute also changes the rule of law as to notice. We know of no reason why the legislature might not change either or both of these rules without violating the Constitution. Certainly, as to the future, all trusts could be entirely abolished by the legislature, as was done in cases of uses by the statute of uses. As the law now stands, cases frequently arise in which bona fide purchasers take property free from existing trusts, and are not held bound to see to the application of the consideration.

The second point insisted upon in the argument is that the provisions of the act permit the taking of private property without "due process of law." In the initial registration the provisions are for an application to a court of chancery, and that the fee must be first registered. To this application the following persons are to be made defendants: The occupant, if the land is occupied by any other person than the applicant; the holder of any lien or encumbrance; other persons having any estate or claiming any interest in the land, in law or in equity, in possession, remainder, reversion, or expectancy. Section 11. All other persons are to be made parties defendant, by the name and designation of "all whom it may concern." Section 16. Summons is to issue against all persons mentioned as defendants, and is to be served as in other cases in chancery. Notice is also to be published and mailed to such defendants, substantially as in other chancery cases, and the court may direct further notice to be given. Sections 19-21. Upon a failure to answer, default may be entered, and, upon the hearing, a decree entered, finding in whom the title is vested, and declaring the same subject to such liens, encumbrances, trusts, or interests, if any, as are shown to exist, and directing the registration to be made. Sections 23, 25. The exception taken to these provisions is that they authorize judgment to be taken against a resident of the state upon mere constructive service. It is certainly fundamental that no man shall be condemned unheard or without notice. While a substituted service is permitted in some instances, particularly in case of nonresidents, this is because of the necessities of the case. The act does contemplate, in some contingencies, at least, actual personal service, and the general law provides for publication as to unknown owners and persons in interest, and nonresidents. An applicant may proceed in this way, and in strict accordance with the act obtain a decree or finding as to his title which will be binding beyond all question, so that, even if the proper construction of the provision were that it attempted to authorize judgment against a resident notified only by publication, yet the law can be given practical effect, in which event only the particular provision would fail, and not the whole law.

It is further insisted that, by proceedings subsequent to the initial registration, an owner may be deprived of his property without due process of law. In the consideration of this point it must be remembered that the right to alienate or inherit property is always dependent upon the law. So long as vested rights are not disturbed, the law may at any time change the tenure upon which land is held, and may alter the conditions under which it may be alienated, and modify the rules of evidence by which the title is to be determined. The true theory of this act, as we understand it, is that all holders of vested rights shall be subjected to an adjudication in a court of competent jurisdiction, upon due notice, in order that the true state of the title may be ascertained and declared, and that thereafter the tenure of the owner, the right of transfer and encumbrance, and all rights subsequently accruing shall be determined in accordance with the rules now prescribed. "A state may, by statute, prescribe the remedies to be pursued in her courts, and may regulate the disposition of the property of her citizens, by descent, devise, or alienation." 3 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. p. 187. "The right of ownership which an individual may acquire must therefore, in theory, at least, be held to be derived from the state, and the state has the right and power to stipulate the conditions and terms upon which the land may be held by individuals." Tiedeman, Real Prop. 2d ed. § 19. "The power of the state to regulate the tenure of real property within her limits, and the modes of its acquisition and transfer, and the rules of its descent, and the extent to which a testamentary disposition of it may be exercised by its owners, is undoubted." Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, on page 321, 134 U. S., and page 919, 33 L. ed. "The power of the legislature in this respect [as to changing the rules of evidence as to the burden of proof], whether affecting proof of existing rights, or as applicable to rights subsequently acquired, or to future litigation, so long as the rules of evidence sought to be established are impartial and uniform in their application, is practically unrestricted." Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 447, on page 455. It being true that the law may prescribe rules of property and rules of evidence by which the title is to be shown, we see no reason why the transfer of real estate may not be made in the way contemplated, and why it may not be made compulsory to make it in that way, if the legislature so determines. In our view of the case, the indemnity fund feature of the law need not be considered. The law can, as we think, stand and accomplish its purpose without it.

Objection is also made that by § 26 any person who has any interest in the land, whether personally served, notified by publication, or not served at all, must, within two years after the entry of the decree, appear and file an answer, and that, after the expiration of that term of two years, the decree shall (with certain exceptions) be "forever binding and conclusive upon all persons." This provision seems to attempt to make a decree binding upon persons not parties to the suit, and, if given effect literally, would deprive persons of vested rights without due process of law. A limitation may be placed upon the time within which a person who has a mere right of action shall bring it, but "limitation laws cannot compel a resort to legal proceedings by one who is already in the complete enjoyment of all he claims." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 366. To the extent that the act attempts to transfer property without due process of law, it cannot be upheld. On all parties to the suit properly before the court the decree may, after the lapse of two years, become conclusive and forever binding, and as to all who have merely a right of action the expiration of two years may complete the bar. Even though the language of this section may be broad enough to amount to an attempt to transfer an estate by the law or by decree, yet it is possible to carry out the purposes of the act without violating the Constitution in the respect complained of. Such objectionable features, or those calling for construction, must be left to future legislation, or determination by the courts in cases where the conflict is apparent and the question directly involved. We are also of the opinion that §§ 26 and 40 can be sustained by construing them as a limitation law.

"Whenever an act of the legislature can be so construed and applied as to avoid conflict with the Constitution, and give to it the force of law, such construction will be adopted by the courts. Therefore, acts of the legislature in terms retrospective, and which, literally interpreted, would invalidate and destroy vested rights, are upheld by giving them prospective operation only; for, applied to and operating upon future acts and transactions only, they are rules of property, under and subject to which the citizen acquires property rights, and are obnoxious to no constitutional limitation, but as retroactive laws they reach to and destroy existing rights, through force of the legislative will, without a hearing or judgment of law. So will acts of the legislature having elements of limitation, and capable of being so applied and administered, although the words are broad enough to and do, literally read, strike at the right itself, be construed to limit and control the remedy,—for as such they are valid, but as weapons destructive of vested rights they are void,—and such force only will be given the acts as the legislature could impart to them." Newland v. Marsh, 19 Ill. 376, 384.

The recent case of State, Atty. Gen., v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L. R. A. 519, is relied upon by counsel for appellant in support of the position taken by them on both of the above points. We have given that case careful consideration. With its conclusion, viz., that the Ohio statute was unconstitutional, we agree, but what is said in argument cannot be adopted as applicable to this case. The main ground upon which that decision rests is that the statute, in providing for the initial registration, attempts to give jurisdiction to the court without service of summons, and this, it is held, falls short of that due process of law guaranteed by the Constitution. The only notice which that act required was to be given by the applicant himself, and in the application it was unnecessary to name any person claiming an adverse interest as party defendant. On the other feature of the case, viz., as to what constitutes the exercise of judicial power, the opinion is not clear. In the reasoning on that point, Judge Cooley's definition of "judicial power" is adopted, which we have seen does not serve to distinguish between such quasi judicial powers as may be properly exercised by executive or ministerial officers and those powers which belong solely to the judicial department.

The third point made against the law is that the provision which says that the law shall take effect only after a favorable vote by counties is an attempt to delegate legislative power; and the fourth is that the law is not a general, but special, law. It is unnecessary to discuss these points. It is sufficient to say that both have been decided adversely to the contention of appellants in the case of People, Grinnell, v. Hoffman, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793. That decision has become the rule of law in this state, and we see no sufficient reason for overruling it.

We are not impressed with the soundness of the objections to those sections of the 44 L. R. A.

statute which relate to the descent of lands on the death of a registered owner, and to the sale and mortgage of real estate belonging to minors or others under disability. They are, however, objections which do not go to the validity of the entire law. They involve a construction of those sections, and can only be satisfactorily determined if cases shall arise involving their validity. It would be alike impracticable and unprofitable to attempt now to give a construction to every provision of this law. The question here is, Does the act violate the Constitution so far as to render it void, and therefore furnish no justification for the exercise of the acts of the respondent challenged? In the determination of that question every reasonable doubt must be resolved in favor of the validity of the law.

We have endeavored to give the case that deliberate consideration its importance demands, and have reached the conclusion that the judgment of the Criminal Court should be affirmed.

Boggs, J., dissents.

Rehearing denied December 19, 1898.

Daniel HOGAN, Appt.,
v.
Loren D. STOPHLET.

(179 Ill. 150.)

1. A request that the court hold that under the law of the case the plaintiff could not recover is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and preserves the question of law for review on appeal.
2. A sheriff cannot claim a reward for making an arrest within his county of a resident thereof for a felony committed therein which it was his official duty to make.
3. Extraordinary efforts and the incurring of expense not covered by legal fees will not entitle an officer to a reward for making an arrest which it was his legal duty to make.

(April 17, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Fourth District, reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Alexander County in plaintiff's favor in a suit brought to recover a reward offered for the apprehension and conviction of an alleged criminal. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is a suit originally brought by appellant against appellee before a justice of the peace of Pulaski county to recover a reward offered for the apprehension and conviction of a criminal. The justice of the peace rendered a judgment against appellee for $50

NOTE.—As to rewards to officers, see also Morris v. Kassill (Tex.) 11 L. R. A. 398, and note; also Lees v. Colgan (Cal.) 40 L. R. A. 355; and Smith v. Gentry (Ky.) 42 L. R. A. 302.

(the amount of the reward offered by him), and costs. Appellee appealed from this judgment to the circuit court of Pulaski county, and the venue was changed to the circuit court of Alexander county. In the latter court the case was tried before the court, by agreement, without a jury; resulting in judgment against appellee for $50 and costs. An appeal was taken from this judgment to the appellate court; and the latter court reversed the judgment of the circuit court, with a finding of facts, and refused to remand the case to the circuit court. The appellate court has granted a certificate of importance. The present appeal is from the judgment of the appellate court.

The facts are substantially as follows: On the night of January 6, 1896, the storehouse of appellee, in Mound City, was burned by an incendiary fire. On the next day appellee and several other citizens, including appellant, signed a paper publicly offering the amounts set opposite their respective names as a reward for the apprehension and conviction of the person who burned the building. In March or April, 1896, one Harry Howard, who then, and at the time of the burning, was, and ever since has been, a resident of Pulaski county, was arrested in said county by one Lafayette Collins, a deputy sheriff of said county, on a warrant issued by a justice of the peace of the county, sworn out by one Mrs. Newman, charging Howard with ourglary and larceny in breaking and entering her storehouse, in said county. At the time the reward was offered and the arrest was made, and at the time of the conviction hereinafter mentioned, appellant was the sheriff of said Pulaski county, and Collins was his deputy. While Howard was in jail under the charge of burglary and larceny, he was indicted by the grand jury of Pulaski county for burning appellee's storehouse, and at the April term, 1896, of the circuit court of said county he was convicted of the crime of arson, and sentenced to the penitentiary therefor. After Howard was arrested and imprisoned in jail on the warrant charging him with burglary and larceny, appellant claims to have expended certain moneys for traveling expenses, and fees paid to witnesses to procure their attendance from the state of Missouri, for the purpose of indicting and convicting Howard of burning appellee's building.

The following is the finding of facts made by the appellate court, as embodied in their judgment: "On the night of January 6, 1896, appellant's store building at Mound City, Pulaski county, in this state, was feloniously set on fire and burned. The day following the fire, appellant publicly, and in writing, offered a reward of $50 for the apprehension and conviction of the person or persons who committed the offense. About two months thereafter, appellee, who was the sheriff of Pulaski county, through one of his deputies, arrested Harry Howard, in said county (and who resided there), for the offense; and at the April term, A. D. 1896, of the circuit court of said county, Howard was indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced for the crime." In the statement of facts which precedes their opinion the appellate court say: "The arrest was made under and by virtue of a warrant issued by a justice of the peace of Pulaski county on the complaint of a Mrs. Newman, charging Howard with the crime of burglary and larceny, and Howard was committed to jail on this charge. The charge was mainly, if not entirely, for the purpose of holding Howard until the matter of the burning of appellant's store could be investigated." Upon the trial, appellant, when on the witness stand, was asked the following question, and made the following answer: "State whether or not you did anything towards the apprehension or the conviction of anyone in pursuance of the offering of this reward?" "Yes, sir; after considerable effort on my part, I caused the arrest of this Harry Howard."

On the trial, defendant requested the court to hold the following proposition as the law of the case: "The defendant requests the court to hold the law of this case to be, under the evidence in this case, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and the finding should be for the defendant." But the court refused to so hold, and the defendant took an exception.

Messrs. L. M. Bradley and Wall & Bristow for appellant.

Messrs. Lansden & Leek for appellee.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The submission by the defendant to the trial court, to be marked "Held" or "Refused," of the proposition that the finding in this case should be for the defendant, was in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and preserved for the court of review the question of law, whether the evidence tended to show a right to recover. First Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 152 Ill. 296. 26 L. R. A. 230; Smith v. Billings, 169 Ill. 294.

The appellate court has found in its finding of facts, as embodied in its judgment, that the Harry Howard who was arrested was so arrested for the offense of setting on fire and burning the store building of appellee, and for the apprehension and conviction of the party committing this offense the reward was offered. The finding of facts thus made by the appellate court is binding upon this court; and whether the appellate court found the facts correctly or not, cannot be considered on appeal in this court. Hauk v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 147 Ill. 399; Evarts v. Lauther, 165 Ill. 487. We deem it immaterial, however, whether Howard was originally arrested by the appellant and imprisoned upon a charge of burglary and larceny, or whether he was arrested for the burning of appellee's store building, so far as the determination of the questions involved in this case is concerned. The reward was offered for the apprehension and conviction of the person or persons who burned or caused the building to be burned. It thus appears that the reward was offered, not for the conviction alone, but for the apprehension and conviction of the guilty party. Appellant is entitled to recover for both, or he cannot recover at all. The reward cannot be apportioned; that is to say, there can be no apportionment of it between what is due for the apprehension and what is due for the conviction. The offer must be enforced as an entirety, or not at all. In Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219, it was said: "The principal object of the reward offered was to obtain the detection of the offender. The conviction was required, to ascertain who was the offender. But, to entitle the plaintiff to the reward, he must show that he is so entitled, as well for the detection as for the conviction of the offender. The reward cannot be apportioned." Jones v. Phoenix Bank, 8 N. Y. 228; Blain v. Pacific Esp. Co. 69 Tex. 74; Furman v. Parke, 21 N. J. L. 310. The word "arrest" has been defined as "the apprehension or detaining of the person in order to be forthcoming to answer to an alleged or suspected crime. The word 'arrest' is more properly used in civil cases, and 'apprehension' in criminal." Montgomery County v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 174. Black, in his Law Dictionary, defines the word "apprehension" as follows: "The seizure, taking, or arrest of a person on a criminal charge. The term 'apprehension' is applied exclusively to criminal cases and 'arrest' to both criminal and civil cases." If, therefore, the fact that Howard was arrested upon a charge of burglary and larceny should be held to negative the idea that he was arrested upon a charge of burning the building then appellant did not secure the apprehension of the guilty party; and in such case he would not be entitled to the reward, as the reward was offered both for the apprehension and the conviction. If, however, the appellant is to be regarded as having secured the apprehension of Howard for the offense of burning the building, in that case, also, he would not be entitled to the reward, for the reasons hereinafter stated.

The appellant was the sheriff of Pulaski county. The arrest of Howard was made in Pulaski county, and for a felony committed by Howard in that county; Howard also being a resident of that county. It was therefore appellant's duty to make the arrest. That such was his duty will appear by reference to §§ 1, 2, 3, and 4 of division 6, and §§ 3 and 6 of division 7, of the Criminal Code, and §§ 15, 16, 17, and 18 of chapter 125 of the Revised Statutes, in regard to sheriffs. 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 1374-1377; 3 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. p. 3769. In addition to this § 211 of division 1 of the Criminal Code provides that "if any judge, justice of the peace, sheriff, coroner, constable, police officer, clerk, or other officer, state, county, town, or municipal, executive, ministerial, or judicial, shall wilfully or corruptly receive or take any fee or reward to execute or do his duty as such officer, except such as is or shall be allowed by law, or if any such officer shall wilfully or corruptly ask or demand as a condition precedent to the performance of his duty as such officer any fee or reward, except such as shall be allowed by law, every such officer so offending shall be fined not exceeding $200, and may be removed from office." Section 213 of division 1 provides that "if any officer authorized 44 L. R. A.

by law to charge or receive fees, salary, or pay, shall charge, claim, demand, or take any greater fee, salary, or pay, than such as is by law allowed to him for the service performed, or shall charge, claim, demand, or take any fee, salary, or pay, or shall knowingly charge any fee, salary, or pay, when no fee, salary, or pay is allowed him by law, or when the services for which such fee, salary, or pay is charged, have not been performed by him, or by some other person for him, he shall, on conviction under this section for the first offense, be fined in any sum not less than twenty-five dollars ($25), nor more than two hundred dollars ($200), and upon conviction for a second or any subsequent offense under this section, he shall forfeit his office, and shall be confined in the county jail not less than thirty days, nor more than one year." 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 1329, 1330. The Constitution provides that the sheriff and other officers shall "receive, as their only compensation for their services, salaries to be fixed by law, which shall in no case be as much as the lawful compensation of a judge of the circuit court of said county, and shall be paid, respectively, only out of the fees of the office actually collected." Const. art. 10, § 9. The legislature has fixed a scale of fees which sheriffs are authorized to charge for services performed by them in the discharge of their official duty. 2 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 1911-1913. It being true that it was the official duty of the appellant, as sheriff, to make the arrest of the guilty party, and that the fees which he is entitled to charge for the performance of his official duties are fixed by law, it follows, upon well-established principles, that the appellant was not entitled to the reward sued for in this case. It is against public policy to allow a man to recover a reward for doing his duty as a public officer. It is also against public policy, and illegal, for a sheriff to receive, for services for which fixed compensation is prescribed by law, any other or further fees, although extraordinary diligence may have been exercised by him in the discharge of his duty. Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219; Murfree, Sheriffs, § 1070. A promise to pay an officer a reward for doing what it is his duty to do under the law is a promise without any consideration to support it.

In Re Russell, 51 Conn. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 55, the facts showed that an inhabitant of the city of Hartford, whose house was broken into in the night, offered a reward for the detection of the burglar; that certain policemen, during the hours allotted them for rest, discovered the burglar, and obtained information which led to his conviction; that policemen in that city were required by law to report all violations of law, and to arrest without warrant persons guilty of criminal offenses, where the offenders were taken in the act, or on the speedy information of others, to render all possible assistance to the ministers of the law, and to exert themselves to prevent the commission of crime, etc. And it was held by the court that to allow them to receive the reward would be both in violation of the city ordinances and against public policy. In that case the court said: "It has been held from a very early period that a promise to pay an officer a sum of money for doing a thing which the law will not suffer him to take anything for is merely void, however freely and voluntarily it may appear to have been made. . . . And it is now well settled that a public officer, whose compensation is fixed or whose fees are prescribed by law, cannot legally contract for or demand a larger compensation or higher fees in the form of a reward or in any other form, for services rendered in the line or scope of his official duties." In Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219, it was held that a watchman of the city of Boston, who, while in the discharge of his duty as such, discovered a person setting fire to a building, and prosecuted him to conviction, was not entitled to claim a reward offered by the city government for the detection and conviction of the incendiary. In Davies v. Burns, 5 Allen, 349, it was held that an officer of the customs of the United States, who found smuggled goods while assisting the inspectors in charge of a vessel, and examining the passengers and their luggage, although he was not in discharge of the specific duty assigned to him, could not maintain an action to recover a reward offered by the owners of the vessel to any person giving information to their agents or officers of any goods smuggled or concealed, or intended to be smuggled, therefrom. In the latter case the decision of the court was put upon the broad ground of public policy, which forbids an officer to receive extra compensation for doing what his official duty requires him to do. In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Grafton, 51 Ark. 504, where certain parties, who acted as the posse comitatus of a sheriff, to aid him in preventing interference with trains during a railroad strike, claimed a reward offered by the railroad company for the arrest and conviction of persons thus offending, it was held that such parties were not entitled to the reward, although they claimed to have acted as individuals, independently of the sheriff; and the court there says: "The policy of the law forbids a public officer, or those called to aid him in the discharge of a public duty, receiving any reward or compensation for his services, outside of that allowed by law. The plaintiffs were assisting the sheriff's deputies—and in fact some of the plaintiffs were his regular deputies—in making these arrests; and they were paid for their services as a sheriff's posse by Miller county. Public policy and the laws forbid that they receive other reward for the same. 'The rewards of officers are established by law, their services are to be performed for these legal rewards, and other private rewards for acts which are required from them, as public duties, by the laws of their country and the obligations of their stations, must be regarded as corrupt and illegal exactions.' . . . A promise of a reward for performing a duty is illegal and without consideration. . . . 'The statute makes it the duty of a sheriff to keep and preserve the peace of his county, for which purpose he is empowered to call to his aid such person or persons of his county as he deems necessary. . . . The conclusion is, if the arrest is made by the sheriff or his deputies, he or they were but doing their duty, and are not entitled to a reward.'" In Lee v. Colgan, 120 Cal. 262, 40 L. R. A. 355, where a captain of police of the city and county of San Francisco apprehended a murderer in such city and county for a murder committed in another county, it was held that the captain made the arrest of the murderer in the line of his official duty, and that it was against sound public policy to receive a reward offered by the government of the state for the arrest and conviction of the murderer; and in that case the court says: "The courts, both in this country and in England, are practically unanimous in declaring that a public officer, working for a fixed compensation, or whose fees are prescribed by law, cannot demand or contract for a reward for services rendered in the line or scope of his official duty." See also Marking v. Needy, 8 Bush, 22; Ex parte Gore, 57 Miss. 251; Monroe County v. Bell (Miss.) 18 So. 121; Thornton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 42 Mo. App. 58; Kick v. Merry, 23 Mo. 74, 66 Am. Dec. 658; Weaver v. Whitney, Hopk. Ch. 13; Hatch v. Mann, 15 Wend. 45.

The claim that extra services have been rendered furnishes no warrant in such cases for the charge of extra compensation. In Hatch v. Mann, 15 Wend. 45, it was said: "That a public officer, whose fees are prescribed by law, may maintain an action to recover an additional sum promised him by a party for doing his official duty, is a monstrous proposition, fraught with every kind of mischief. The pretense that it is for extra services would cover any conceivable corruption or extortion. . . . If a constable, for making 'extraordinary efforts' to perform an ordinary official act, may not only receive, but may also collect by law, a compensation beyond what the statute allows for the act, any other officer may do the same; and sheriffs, legislators, and judges might, and soon would, put their 'extraordinary efforts' in the market, to be had by the highest bidder. This is a sickening and revolting view of the subject."

There are some decisions which hold to the contrary of the views herein expressed, but these decisions will be found upon examination to be cases where the officer arrested the offender beyond his territorial jurisdiction, or cases arising under particular statutes which did not make it the duty of the officer to make the arrest. Many of these decisions are reviewed in the very able opinion delivered by the supreme court of Connecticut in Re Russell, 51 Conn. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 55, and are there distinguished from such cases as that which is presented by the present record.

The principles announced by the authorities above referred to have always been recognized as sound by this court. In Stacy v. State Bank, 5 Ill. 91, the bank offered a reward of $10,000 for the detection of the person who had robbed a branch of the bank; and a director of the branch bank, who detected the robber, sued to recover the reward. But this court held that he was not entitled to claim the reward, upon the ground that it was his duty in such a case, whether he was paid for his services or not, if he obtained any information which would in any manner lead to the recovery of the money taken, or the detection of the person taking it, to communicate it promptly to the bank without reward. We there say: "He has done nothing more in the present case than his duty as director imposed on him. The fact of his receiving no compensation for his services as director does not alter the case. He has voluntarily assumed the duties of the station, and he was bound as faithfully to discharge them as if he was to be liberally paid for his services." The principle here announced has been applied to promises made to persons not public officers. Thus, it was said by Chancellor Kent: "Every seaman is bound, from the nature and terms of his contract, to do his duty in the service to the utmost of his ability; and therefore a promise made by the master, when the ship is in distress, to pay extra wages, as an inducement to extraordinary exertion, is illegal and void." Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219.

The fact that the officer may have incurred expenses in the performance of an official duty which are not covered by the legal fees he is authorized to charge does not entitle him to extra compensation. In People v. Pearson, 4 Ill. 270, we held that a sheriff, who, in executing an attachment for contempt sued out of this court, went out of his own county, and expended ten days' time, and $66.75 in money, in arresting and returning the defendant, was only entitled to recover the regular fees for serving the process and for mileage. In Irvin v. Alexander County, 63 Ill. 528, where a statute provided that counties shall pay the expense of conveying insane paupers to the asylum for the insane, and fixed the compensation of the sheriff for such services, we held that the sheriff was not allowed to charge for his necessary expenses anything in addition to the mileage and per diem provided by the statute; and in that case we said: "The sheriff takes the office cum onere; and the general assembly, in fixing the various items of fees for his compensation, may and very probably have fixed some items too low, but others are very high, when time, labor, and skill are considered. . . . We have never known a claim made for additional compensation because the actual cost of serving a summons was more than the fees in a particular case, or in fact in any other specific service rendered by the sheriff. . . . If this were allowed, additional costs would have to be paid whenever the sheriff should lose money in the performance of any specific duty. . . . We are clearly of the opinion that the sheriff was not entitled to his traveling expenses in addition to his mileage and per diem." In Hall v. Hamilton, 74 Ill. 437, this court held that judges were authorized to hold branch courts for the superior court of Cook county, or the circuit court, for that or any other circuit, but that § 40 of the chapter entitled "Courts," of the Revised Statutes of 1874 (p. 331), which provided for compensation being paid to a judge holding a branch court out of his circuit, in addition to his salary, was unconstitutional and void. In Hall v. Hamilton, 74 Ill. 437, this court, speaking through the late Mr. Chief Justice Walker, said: "The 40th section of that chapter provides for compensating judges who shall hold court or a branch court for another judge out of his circuit or judicial district, by authorizing an appropriation of $10 per day to such judge out of the county treasury. The 16th section of the judiciary article of our Constitution is this: 'From and after the adoption of this Constitution, judges of the circuit courts shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, payable quarterly, until otherwise provided by law. And after their salaries shall be fixed by law, they shall not be increased or diminished during the terms for which said judges shall be respectively elected; and from and after the adoption of this Constitution no judge of the supreme or circuit courts shall receive any other compensation, perquisite, or benefit, in any form whatsoever, nor perform any other than judicial duties, to which may belong any emoluments.' This language is as full, clear, and comprehensive as could be well conceived, to prevent supreme and circuit judges from receiving any other compensation than their salaries, under any name or pretense whatever, for the discharge of any duty pertaining to their offices. And it is prohibitory on the judges from receiving the compensation for the performance of such duties except their salary. It also prohibits the general assembly from providing any other." Section 40, above referred to, is still retained, and appears as § 23 of the act in regard to courts. It is as follows: "Where a judge shall hold court, or a branch thereof, for another judge out of his circuit or judicial district, as provided in the preceding section (except in cases of interchange with each other), it shall be competent for the county board of the county, in which he shall so hold court, in their discretion to cause him to be paid out of the county treasury not exceeding $10 per day for the time he shall so hold the same." Although this section still appears in the statute, yet this court, in the discharge of a high and solemn duty imposed upon it by the Constitution, has decided such section to be unconstitutional; and therefore no board of county commissioners can lawfully pay, nor can any judge of a circuit court lawfully receive, the $10 per day authorized to be paid by that section for the performance of judicial duties.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Boggs took no part in this decision.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Philip C. SIZOR, Appt.,

v.

City of LOGANSFORT.

(151 Ind. 626.)

Mentioning a meander line on the bank of a river as a boundary will convey the property at least to the water line with riparian rights, if not to the thread of the stream, unless a contrary intent clearly appears from the deed itself.

(May 13, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cass County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Swigart, for appellant:

Where two adjoining landowners cause a line between them to be surveyed and established, such survey is conclusive between them and all parties who claim under them.

Main v. Killinger, 90 Ind. 165.

If surveyors surveyed the land deeded to the Cass County Agricultural, etc., Association, with the consent of both parties, before the deed was made, and the deed was made according to that survey, it was proper to show that fact by parol testimony, and the court, refusing to allow the appellant to give his testimony upon this point to the jury, erred.

In ascertaining boundaries, visible monuments control other designations not so obvious to the senses, such as admeasurements, course and distance, and quantity of land called for in the deeds.

Emmons v. Kiger, 23 Ind. 483; Simonton v. Thompson, 55 Ind. 87; Allen v. Kersey, 104 Ind. 1; Shepherd v. Nave, 125 Ind. 226.

In the trial of a cause before court and jury, if there is any evidence to support the plaintiff's cause of action, no matter how slight, the court cannot direct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

Crookshank v. Kellogg, 8 Blackf. 256; Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38; Adams v. Kennedy, 90 Ind. 318; Wolfe v. McMillan, 117 Ind. 587.

When a meander line is made by the parties to a deed one of the lines of the land therein conveyed, that fixes the limit of the land conveyed; and the fact that a meander line is named as one of the boundary lines by the parties gives the grantee no right beyond that line.

Silver Creek Cement Corp. v. Union Lime & Cement Co. 138 Ind. 297; Brophy v. Richeson, 137 Ind. 114; Tolleston Club v. State, 141 Ind. 197; Edwards v. Ogle, 76 Ind. 302.

Messrs. Quincy A. Myers, George C. Taber, and Frank M. Kistler for appellee.

NOTE.—As to meander lines, see also Northern Pine-Land Co. v. Rigelow (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 776; Noyes v. Collins (Iowa) 26 L. R. A. 609; Faller v. Shedd (Ill.) 33 L. R. A. 146; 44 L. R. A.

Monks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant brought this action to recover possession of certain real estate, and quiet his title thereto as against appellee. Appellee filed a general denial, and upon the issue so joined the cause was submitted to a jury, and after appellant had closed his evidence in chief the court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellee, and over a motion for a new trial judgment was rendered that appellant take nothing by his said action. The only error assigned which presents any question for our determination is that the court erred in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial. There are many other errors assigned, but they are all causes for a new trial, and therefore present no question. The evidence shows that in 1848 the trustees of the Wabash & Erie Canal executed a deed conveying to Mary Long the fractional N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, township 27 N., range 2 E., and that Eel river was the north boundary of the said real estate. On September 18, 1872, Mary Long, by deed, conveyed said real estate to appellant, and he, on June 13, 1873, conveyed a part thereof—about 35 acres—to the Cass County Agricultural, Horticultural, & Mechanical Association. The real estate conveyed to said association was described by metes and bounds, and the north line was described as follows: "Thence north parallel with the east line of said section fourteen (14) chains and 70 links to the meander line on the south bank of Eel river; thence westward along said meander line to the northwest corner of said fractional quarter section, being also the northeast corner of J. B. Richardsville reserve." Appellee derived its title through the conveyance last mentioned, and by the same description. When the real estate on Eel river was first surveyed by the government surveyors, they ran a meander line along the south side of said river, and it is contended by appellant that such meander line as so located is the north boundary of the real estate conveyed to appellee, and that said meander line is, as the river now runs, over 100 feet south of the south margin or water line of said river at the northeast corner of said tract and in the south edge of the water at the northwest corner of said tract. Appellee, on the other hand, contends that the description carries the title of appellee at least to the water line, on the south side of said river, if not to the thread of the stream. If appellee's contention is correct, the cause must be affirmed; if appellant is correct, the cause must be reversed. In St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. ed. 74, which was a case where the land was adjoining a navigable stream, the Supreme Court of the United States, at page 286, 19 L. ed. 78, said: "Meander lines are run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of the land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows to a demonstration that the watercourse, and not the meander line as actually run on the land, is the boundary. Proprietors, bordering on streams not navigable, unless restricted by the terms of their grant, hold to the centre of the stream." This case has been uniformly followed by the courts. Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428; Sphung v. Moore, 120 Ind. 352, 356; Knudsen v. Omanson, 10 Utah, 124; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 181, 18 L. R. A. 670; Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82 (Gil. 59) 88 Am. Dec. 59; Freeman v. Bellegarde, 108 Cal. 179, and cases cited. In Boorman v. Sunnucks, 42 Wis. 233, the court, on page 243, said: "Another rule applicable to this case is, that if the meandered line and the actual water line differ, the latter is the true line of a lot bounded in terms by the meandered line." It is therefore held in many cases that a meander line on a lake or watercourse extends to the line of the shore or bank although the courses and distances of the survey be not coincident with the water line. Everson v. Waseca, 44 Minn. 247; Ladd v. Osborne, 79 Iowa, 93; St. Paul, S. & T. F. R. Co. v. First Div. of St. Paul & P. R. Co. (Minn.) 49 N. W. 303. It was said by the supreme court of Minnesota, in Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 10 Minn. 82, 88 Am. Dec. 59: "There is no such thing as a meander line in such case, distinct and separate from the line of the river. It is merely an accurate survey of the river, and neither party in this case could be permitted to show that the river is in a different place from that designated by the field book and plat." In Knudsen v. Omanson, 10 Utah, 124, the court said: "In making the survey, the water line was approached as nearly as possible, and the west line of these lots is shown by the government surveyors to be waters of the lake, and is what is called 'a meander line.'" It is also held that, when a deed describes land as bounded by a bank, or as on the west side of a river not navigable, or by lines running to a stake or line on the bank, thence up or down the stream to another monument on the bank, the thread of the stream is the boundary. Kent v. Taylor, 64 N. H. 489; Runion v. Alley, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 268; St. Clair County v. Livingston, 23 Wall. 40, 23 L. ed. 59; Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 35 Am. Dec. 637; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 498, 500; Lunt v. Holland, 14 Mass. 150; Cold Springs Iron Works v. Tolland, 9 Cush. 492; Newton v. Eddy, 23 Vt. 319; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Stanford v. Mangin, 30 Ga. 355; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 2d ed. §§ 1028a, 1028b; 1 Jones, Real Prop. §§ 477, 485, 488, 490, 491, 493.

It is clear from the authorities that the meander line was run by the government surveyors as near the water line as possible, and was intended to mark the water line, 44 L. R. A.

See also 46 L. R. A. 748.

and the same is shown on the official plats prepared from the field notes to be the water or border line of the stream. We think, therefore, that in all conveyances where the meander line is mentioned it must be held to be the actual water line, unless the contrary clearly appears from the deed itself. The description in this case carried appellee's title at least to the water line, with riparian rights, if not to the thread of the stream.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

Rosena M. BARMAN, Appt.,

v.

Robert J. SPENCER.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A guest at a private residence is not guilty of negligence in attempting to go from the house to the privy after dark, without inquiring as to the safety of the way or requesting a light, where at the time of a previous visit the way was safe, and no knowledge on her part of a change in condition exists.
2. A lessor who removes the platform from a well in order to put it in proper condition as required by his lease, and leaves the well open and unguarded at a distance of about three feet from the kitchen door, near a path that leads to a privy, is liable to a guest of the tenant, who falls into the well in the night while attempting to go to the privy without knowing that the platform has been taken off from the well.

(January 8, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Grant County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. J. Paulus and Gordon & Marshall for appellant.

Messrs. R. T. St. John and W. H. Charles, for appellee:

The appellant was guilty of such contributory negligence as will preclude a recovery.

It was a duty plaintiff owed herself to have made inquiry as to the condition and safety of her procedure.

No inquiry was made, no right asked, but she went out into the dark night, careless and negligent of her own safety, and was injured.

McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 26; Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185; Neuchouse v. Miller, 35 Ind. 463; Hathaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25.

Mere negligence of the defendant cannot excuse the contributory negligence of the plaintiff.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a landlord for injuries to the guests or servants of a tenant, caused by defects in the premises, see note to McConnell v. Lemley (La.) 34 L. R. A. 609.

St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Mathias, 50 Ind. 65; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sinclair, 62 Ind. 301, 30 Am. Rep. 185; Cincinnati & M. R. Co. v. Eaton, 53 Ind. 307.

Where the negligence of two persons is contemporaneous, and the fault of each operates directly to cause the injury, the plaintiff cannot recover if by the exercise of ordinary care on his part he might have avoided the injurious results of the defendant's negligence.

Evans v. Adams Exp. Co. 122 Ind. 362, 7 L. R. A. 678; Mayhen v. Burns, 103 Ind. 323.

The appellee, although the owner of the premises when the injury complained of is alleged to have occurred, owed no duty to the appellant.

So far as the appellee is concerned she was but little better than a trespasser.

Barnes v. Shreveport City R. Co. 47 La. Ann. 1218; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365.

The owner of land or a building does not owe to persons coming there for their own convenience or as mere licensees the duty of keeping it in a safe condition.

Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426; Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co. 101 N. Y. 391, 54 Am. Rep. 718; Sterger v. Van Sioklen, 132 N. Y. 499, 16 L. R. A. 640; Roseman v. Townsend, 17 Wis. 98, 84 Am. Dec. 733; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621.

Actionable negligence grows only out of a want of ordinary care and skill in respect to a person to whom the defendant is under obligation or duty to exercise such care and skill.

Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588; Ray, Neg. 24, 25.

The well-considered cases in this court clearly support the appellee's contention.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 221, 50 Am. Rep. 783. See also Brucer v. Covington, 69 Ind. 33, 35 Am. Rep. 202; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Barnhart, 115 Ind. 399; Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269; Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 435; South Bend Iron Works v. Larger, 11 Ind. App. 367; Thiele v. McManus, 3 Ind. App. 132; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 436, § 7, p. 411, note 4, p. 412, note 3.

On rehearing.

Messrs. Byron K. Elliott and William F. Elliott, also for appellee on petition for rehearing:

An agreement on the part of the landlord to repair cannot inure to the benefit of a stranger. It creates no duty to him, and in no way affects the question of the liability of the landlord to him.

Feary v. Hamilton, 140 Ind. 45.

Under the modern authorities there are no different degrees of negligence; and there is no such thing as gross negligence in this state.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Meyers, 136 Ind. 242; Parker v. Pennsylvania Co. 134 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552; Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. McClaren, 62 Ind. 566; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sinclair, 62 Ind. 301, 30 Am. Rep. 185; Meredith v. Reed, 26 Ind. 334; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 491, 23 L. ed. 374. 44 L. R. A.

There can be no actionable negligence unless the injury complained of is proximately caused by the violation of a legal duty which the defendant owes to the person injured.

Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stephenson, 139 Ind. 641; Thiele v. McManus, 3 Ind. App. 132; Lary v. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. 78 Ind. 323, 41 Am. Rep. 572; Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 70, 12 L. R. A. 322; Losec v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 494, 10 Am. Rep. 638; Roberts & W. Liability of Employers for Injuries to Workmen, 22.

If the defendant owes a duty, but does not owe it to the plaintiff, the action will not lie.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 8; Milner v. Woodhead, 104 N. Y. 471; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621, 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 415; Gilson v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 65 Vt. 213, 36 Am. St. Rep. 802, note 813.

A landowner owes no duty to a licensee, except not willfully to injure him.

Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adair, 12 Ind. App. 569; Parker v. Pennsylvania Co. 134 Ind. 673, 23 L. R. A. 552; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stephenson, 139 Ind. 641; Schmidt v. Bauer, 5 L. R. A. 580, note, 80 Cal. 565; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Phillips, 24 U. S. App. 489; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt, 64 Fed. Rep. 825, 12 C. C. A. 618.

Even a fireman or policeman who comes upon the landowner's premises in the discharge of duty is a mere licensee.

Woodruff v. Bowen, 136 Ind. 431, 22 L. R. A. 198; Pennsylvania Co. v. Meyers, 136 Ind. 242; Boehler v. Daniels, 18 R. I. 563, 27 L. R. A. 512; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588.

One of two things is always essential to the implication of an invitation, and even then an invitation will not always be implied. There must at least be some enticement, allurement, or inducement by the party sought to be charged, or there must be mutuality of interest in the business or purpose for which the visitor comes.

3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1249.

The appellant did not come upon business with the appellee, nor even upon any business with anybody. Her visit did not benefit the appellee in any way, and the appellee did not even know of her presence.

Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426.

One who enters premises of another, to see or inquire about a servant who is supposed to be working there, is a mere licensee.

Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269; Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271; Galveston Oil Co. v. Morton, 70 Tex. 400; Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426; Lachat v. Lutz, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 75; Wright v. Rawson, 52 Iowa, 329, 35 Am. Rep. 275.

So, one who enters upon the premises of another in search of work is a mere licensee. Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co. 101 N. Y. 391, 54 Am. Rep. 718; Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L. R. A.

714; Heinlein v. Boston & P. R. Co. 147 Mass. 136.

The following authorities are directly in point:

Moore v. Logan Iron & S. Co. (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 505; McConnell v. Lemley, 48 La. Ann. 1433, 34 L. R. A. 609; Miller v. Woodhead, 104 N. Y. 471; Cahill v. Layton, 57 Wis. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 46; Ganley v. Hall, 168 Mass. 513; Burdick v. Cheadle, 26 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767; Mellen v. Morrill, 126 Mass. 545, 30 Am. Rep. 695.

McCabe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant sued the appellee to recover $10,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The superior court sustained a demurrer to the complaint for want of sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. The plaintiff declining to amend her complaint, and electing to stand upon the same, the court rendered judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by her said suit, and that the defendant recover his costs. That ruling is called in question by the assignment of errors, and is the only question presented by this appeal.

The substance of the complaint is as follows: That on the — day of September, 1895, the defendant was, and long before said time and ever since, has been, the owner in fee simple of a certain described lot in the city of Marion, in Grant county; that on said day the defendant entered into a contract with Frank Barman, by the terms of which the defendant rented or leased said real estate, including the buildings thereon, to the said Barman, by the month, for the rental of $15 per month, payable monthly in advance, to be used by the said Barman as a residence for himself and family; the said defendant agreeing in said contract to keep said premises in proper repair and fit for safe use from time to time and to furnish said Barman free gas, a cistern, and a good well of water, all of which were to be furnished on said real estate, said defendant reserving the right to enter upon said real estate at any time to make said necessary repairs; that in pursuance of said contract, on said day, plaintiff paid said defendant the sum of $15, and at the time of such payment took possession of said real estate, and ever since has had possession thereof, and used, and still uses, the same as a residence for himself and family under said contract; that on the — day of September, 1895, the defendant entered upon said real estate above described, for the purpose of repairing said well of water, pursuant to said contract; that, in order to make said improvement by furnishing said good well of water, the defendant took up the platform that covered said well, and at all times thereafter while said defendant was engaged in repairing said well,—to wit, until the 1st day of December, 1895,—said defendant at all times carelessly and negligently left said well open and exposed, uninclosed, unguarded, unprotected, and unsafe; that on November 17, 1895, this plaintiff, who was then and now is a sister-in-law of said Frank Barman, was visiting said Frank and family by the express invitation of said Frank, and in going from the dwelling to the privy on said real estate on said day, in the night-time, said night being dark, and no light near said open well, the same being about 3 feet from the kitchen door, and located on the path that leads to said privy from said dwelling house, and the plaintiff not knowing the dangerous condition of said well, while properly and necessarily going to said privy, and without any fault or negligence on her part, she accidentally fell into said well; that plaintiff had on two other occasions previous to said November 17, 1895, visited said Frank Barman and family on said real estate, and had gone to said privy on both of said occasions, and was acquainted with the location of said privy and well; that the said well was at both of said times in a safe and proper condition; that plaintiff was greatly injured by said fall; that two of her ribs were broken; that the joint of one of her limbs at the knee became fractured to such an extent as to make it stiff, so she has but little use thereof; that one of her shoulders was bruised and strained, and her spine strained and fractured, to such an extent that it made her almost helpless; that her entire nervous system is now shocked and greatly injured; that, by reason of the foregoing facts plaintiff was injured in her health and constitution, and suffered great pain of mind and body; that plaintiff has, ever since receiving said injuries and because of the same, been confined to her room, and entirely helpless. Plaintiff further avers that all the injuries, the disability, pain, and suffering aforesaid, were caused wholly by the aforesaid carelessness and negligence of the defendant, and without any fault on the part of the plaintiff; that, by reason of the aforesaid injuries, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10,000; wherefore, etc.

The first objection urged against the sufficiency of the complaint by appellee's learned counsel, and in support of the ruling of the trial court, is that it discloses that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. This negligence, it is claimed, consisted of her failure to make inquiry as to the condition and safety of the well, and ask for a light to enable her to see and avoid the same. But it is alleged that she had no knowledge that the platform had been removed from and left off of the well; that is, she was ignorant of the dangerous condition of the well, and that, when she visited there before, it was in a safe condition. The demurrer admits the truth of these allegations. Thus, it appears that she had no means of knowing anything about the dangerous condition of the well. It would be requiring extraordinary care to require persons to anticipate and guard against dangers of which they are ignorant. Ordinary care is all that the law requires at the hands of anyone to exempt him from the imputation of negligence. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 15-20, 7 L. R. A. 588. Besides, the complaint broadly alleges that the plaintiff's injuries were caused solely by the negligence of the defendant, and without any fault or negligence of the plaintiff. That is sufficient to admit any and all evidence tending to prove the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. As was said by this court in Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wright, 80 Ind. 182: "So long as the facts stated do not force the legal conclusion that there was contributory fault the averment that there was no such fault entitles the plaintiff to have it submitted to the jury as a question of fact, whether there was such negligence." To the same effect are Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Burton, 139 Ind. 357, 382, and cases there cited; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Krapf, 145 Ind. 647-651; Howe v. Ohmart, 7 Ind. App. 32. In our opinion, the complaint was amply sufficient to show the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence.

It is next contended that the facts alleged show that appellant was nothing more than a mere licensee, and that mere licensees and trespassers must take the premises as they find them, and cannot recover for injuries received by them through defects in the premises. Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, is a case where the injured party was a mere licensee, and it was there said: "The owner of premises is under no legal duty to keep them free from pitfalls or obstructions for the accommodation of persons who go upon or over them merely for their own convenience or pleasure, even where this is done with his permission. In such case the licensee goes there at his own risk, and, as has often before been said, enjoys the license with its concomitant perils." The rule is confessedly different where the person injured goes upon the defective premises on invitation, express or implied, from the owner or occupant, to transact business in which such owner or occupant is interested. But the present case falls within neither of the classes mentioned. It is a case where the complaining party went upon the premises by the express invitation of the occupant, for friendly and social purposes as his guest.

In support of appellee's contention, we are referred to Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 477, 16 L. R. A. 557, where it is said: "How far an implied invitation is held out under all conceivable circumstances, and whether an implied invitation to come as a guest for friendly intercourse can create a liability greater than that to an ordinary licensee, it is not easy to decide. No case in this country involving these questions has been brought to our attention. In Southcote v. Stanley, 1 Hurlst. & N. 247, it is said, in substance, that the liability of an owner of a dwelling house to a visitor who is there on his express invitation is no greater than that to a licensee. The ground taken by Chief Baron Pollock and his associates seems to be that a guest gratuitously enjoying hospitality by express invitation at the house of his friend must be presumed to have accepted the invitation with an understanding that he is to enjoy only such things as his host possesses, and that to such a guest the host owes no legal duty to furnish him with anything better than he has for himself. In the late case of Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 C. P. 274, Willes, 44 L. R. A.

J., treats a guest as a mere licensee, and says, on pages 287, 288, that the protection in ordinary cases depends 'upon the fact that the customer has come into the shop in pursuance of a tacit invitation given by the shopkeeper with a view to business which concerns himself. . . . The class to which the customer belongs includes persons who go, not as mere volunteers, or licensees, or guests, or servants, or persons whose employment is such that danger may be considered as bargained for, but who go upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation, express or implied.' In Pollock on Torts, at p. 147, the author says: 'With regard to the person, one acquires this right to safety by being upon the spot, or engaged in work on or about the property whose condition is in question, in the course of any business in which the occupier has an interest.' In Campbell on Negligence, at p. 64, 2d ed., is this statement: 'Invitation, therefore, in the technical sense of the word as employed in this class of cases, differs from invitation in the ordinary sense,—implying the relation between host and guest. In the case of host and guest, it would be thought hard that the hospitality of the former should expose him to the responsibilities implied by business relations. The guest must take the premises as he finds them, with any risk owing to their disrepair, although the host is bound to warn his guest of any concealed danger upon the premises known to himself.' This sweeping language would seem to support appellee's contention and the ruling of the superior court. Such language can be found in many of the American cases, but, like the case from which we have quoted, none of them that have fallen under our notice involved the question. The opinion from which the above quotation is taken proceeds to say: "It seems to be the rule in England that an ordinary guest in a dwelling house, although expressly invited, has no greater rights than a licensee. The case at bar does not require us to decide whether that rule should be applied in Massachusetts, for the plaintiff was not on the defendant's premises under an invitation, express or implied. . . . We do not doubt that such relations of friendship or social intimacy may exist between individuals as to warrant a finding of an implied invitation to come as a friend at any time, and that one in such relations visiting his friend would have the same rights as if expressly invited, whatever those rights may be." The court held, upon the facts in the case, that, the plaintiff not being a guest by invitation, express or implied, she was a mere licensee; and hence the general statement in the opinion as to the law in case of an invited guest is mere obiter dictum, and not authority in the court pronouncing the judgment, nor in any other court.

There was one question involved in that case, and decided, which is involved here. The defect in the premises in that case was the steps which were used as a means of access to the tenements, one of which was occupied by a tenant of the defendant; and plaintiff, who visited the tenant, received the injuries complained of through a defect in such steps. It was there said: "These steps were in the possession of the defendant, and it was her duty to keep them in a reasonably safe condition for the use of her tenants, and of other persons who were using them by her invitation, express or implied." In the case now before us the allegation is that, in the contract of renting, the defendant obligated himself to repair the well, and reserved the right to enter upon the premises for that purpose; and, while thus engaged and in possession of the well, it was negligently left open and unguarded. There would be no question that the owner would be free from liability for the defective premises while the same were occupied by a tenant unless the owner had obligated himself to repair. Taylor, Land. & T. § 175, and authorities there cited; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 3d ed. § 502. But if he has undertaken to repair he may be liable for injuries resulting from his failure to repair or negligence in making such repairs. See same authorities last cited.

But the question remains as to his liability to an invited guest. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 3d ed. § 499a says: "The precise ground and degree of liability of a landowner to an invited guest having no business relations with him are not yet thoroughly settled. Chief Baron Pollock, with whom it was a favorite notion that all members of a family were subject to the rule which restricts the right of a servant to recover from his master for injuries caused by negligence, held that a guest also fell within this rule, and could not recover from his host for an injury caused by a defect in the construction of the house, although owing to the negligence of the host. Baron Alderson concurred in this view. Baron Bramwell held that the host was liable for any misfeasance, but not for mere nonfeasance. But we are not satisfied with either theory. No attempt was made to sustain either by any process of reasoning, and we cannot see how any satisfactory reasons could be assigned. In our judgment the same rule should be applied in such a case that would be applied if the property were personal instead of real. The host should be held responsible to the guest for gross negligence,—that is, for such want of care as would justify the belief that he was indifferent to the safety of his guest." In Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 477, 16 L. R. A. 557, the court said: "The defendant is liable to a visitor of the tenant for the condition of the steps, if the tenant himself would have been liable had the steps been included in the tenement let, and not otherwise." Accordingly, this court, in Brunker v. Cummins, 133 Ind. 443, held that "a landlord who leases premises so far invites its use by all persons whose known relations to the tenant are such as to entitle them to enter and depart from the demised premises as to impose upon him the duty of refraining from any negligent act that makes the use of the premises unsafe." Therefore the decision of the question before us depends on the answer to the question whether the tenant would be liable in the absence of an agreement of the landlord to repair. This brings us back to the question of whether the owner or occupant is liable to an invited guest for an injury through a defect in the premises unknown to the guest. The principle stated by Shearman & Redfield seems a just and reasonable solution of the vexed question, and which at that writing was not settled by any adjudication that had fallen under the notice of the learned authors. We think it eminently just to hold the host responsible to the guest for gross negligence at least; that is, in the language quoted, such want of care as would justify the belief that he was indifferent to the safety of his guest; and in this case we have seen that the landlord, covenanting to repair, is liable as the host would be for like negligence. The act of removing the platform off of the well, and leaving it open and unguarded so long, was certainly the grossest negligence, evincing a total indifference as to the safety of the tenant, his family, and his guests.

Though the precise ground and degree of liability of a landowner to an invited guest for negligence was not at the time Shearman & Redfield wrote thoroughly settled, yet several adjudications have since taken place, holding the owner liable in cases in all material respects like the present. Monteith v. Finkbeiner, 50 N. Y. S. R. 453; Brady v. Valentine, 3 Misc. 19; Peil v. Reinhart, 127 N. Y. 381, 12 L. R. A. 843; Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295; Lindsey v. Leighton, 150 Mass. 285. Our appellate court, in an able opinion, held, in Howe v. Ohmart, 7 Ind. App. 32, that an invited guest may recover against the owner of defective premises through which such guest received a personal injury. The case of Hamilton v. Feary, 8 Ind. App. 615, is not inconsistent with the first case cited, because the latter case was a suit by the tenant, as the court construed the complaint (the same judge delivering the opinion in both cases), to recover against her landlord for a breach of a covenant to repair. The court in the latter case, speaking of the other view of the case, said: "Still another instance of liability on the part of the owner is where he, though not bound to do so, undertakes to make repairs, and makes them in so negligent or unskilful a manner as to produce injury to the tenant."

But our attention has been directed to the case in this court of Feary v. Hamilton, 140 Ind. 45, as probably announcing a contrary doctrine. In that case it was difficult to determine whether the complaint was one against the landlord for a breach of a covenant to repair, or for negligence in failing to repair, by which the plaintiff (the tenant) suffered a personal injury; and that question was left undecided, and the complaint was held bad on the sole ground that, by the death of one of the parties to the transaction (the defendant), the cause of action died with the death of such party, under the statute. And, after so holding, it was there said: "Neither do we wish to be understood as holding the complaint otherwise sufficient. There are a number of authorities which declare that the covenant to repair does not include any liability for personal injury or death from nonrepair." Then a list of cases is cited. But we need not pursue these authorities, even if they do bold, as is stated, that the covenant to repair does not include any liability for personal injury or death for breach of the covenant for failure to repair. The cases there cited were actions for breach of the covenant to repair in failing to repair. Such failure was mere nonfeasance, for which Shearman & Redfield say the landlord is not liable for a resulting personal injury. The case before us was not one for the breach of the covenant to repair,—a mere nonfeasance; but it was for a misfeasance,—misconduct, an affirmative act of negligence in discharging the duty assumed to repair. The obligation assumed by the landlord to repair gave him no right to leave the platform off of the well at night, unguarded, where he knew persons ignorant of the situation were liable to fall into it, any more than it would a person employed by the tenant to make said repairs and do said work. Had he gone there, in the absence of a contract, to repair, and removed the platform off of the well, and left it so, it could hardly be said with any show of reason that he would not be legally liable to any one rightfully on the premises, who, without negligence, fell into the well in the dark. His agreement to repair did not protect him against his misconduct, any more than if he had done the wrongful act in the absence of such a contract. Feary v. Hamilton, 140 Ind. 45, is in no way inconsistent with the defendant's liability on the facts stated in the complaint and admitted by the demurrer in the case at bar.

Our attention has also been invited to the case of Purcell v. English, 86 Ind. 34, 44 Am. Rep. 255. Neither is that case at all inconsistent with the conclusion we reach in the present case. The whole ground of the decision against the plaintiff in that case is there stated thus: "We are satisfied that the authorities warrant us in adjudging that, where a stairway connected with apartments hired in a tenement house occupied by several tenants is rendered unsafe by temporary causes, such as the accumulation of snow and ice, the landlord is not liable to the tenant who uses such a stairway with full knowledge of its dangerous condition, unless there is a contract on the part of the landlord to keep the premises in repair and fit for safe use." We need scarcely say that to hold the defendant liable in the case now before us in no way infringes upon the rule laid down in the case from which we have just quoted. The rule laid down in the case just quoted is in harmony with the law as laid down by an eminent author on Negligence, as follows: "Defects Ordinarily Incident to Houses. Defects in a house, such as are incident to the ordinary wear of housekeeping, but which are the cause of injury to a lawful visitor, attach no liability to the owner or occupier of the house." Wharton, Neg. § 825. And the same author in § 817, says: "An owner being out of possession and not bound to repair is not liable in this action for injuries received in consequence of his neglect to repair. But where the nuisance existed when the property was leased to the tenant the landlord may be held liable. So, the tenant is liable for the nuisance thus retained by him, even though the nuisance was on the premises when leased to him. And both landlord and tenant under the circumstances are jointly and severally liable for the continuation of the nuisance, supposing the nuisance to be on the property when leased, or to be put there with the landlord's connivance." And in § 826 the same author says: "Gross Defects Known to Owner, the Natural Consequence of Which is Injury to Visitors. If a man has such defects in his house, it is negligence for him to invite or even permit visitors who are not warned of such defects, to enter it. 'If a person allows a dangerous place to exist in premises occupied by him, he will be responsible for injury caused thereby to any other person entering upon the premises by his invitation or procurement, express or implied, and not notified of the danger, if the person injured is in the use of due care.'"

It is on this principle, assuming in each case that the defect is one of which the occupier of the house ought to be cognizant, and the natural consequence of which is to produce injury to visitors, that the following cases can be sustained." Accordingly, it was said by the supreme court of New York, in Monteith v. Finkbeiner, 50 N. Y. S. R. 453: "Upon this evidence we think the court was right in refusing to dismiss the complaint. As was said by Mr. Justice Barrett in Alperin v. Earle, 55 Hun, 212: 'The landlord is responsible for injuries to tenants resulting from the dangerous condition of those parts of the building which he reserves for the common use, and over which he retains control, but only when he has been guilty of actual negligence with regard thereto. To bring him within this rule, "it must appear," as was said in Henkel v. Murr, 31 Hun, 30, "that with some notice of the condition of things, or under some circumstances equivalent to notice, such as an unreasonable omission to ascertain the condition, he had failed to make the necessary repairs or changes called for by the condition or exigency.'" This case cited of Henkel v. Murr, is also authority for the proposition that the same measure of liability for injuries sustained by negligence of the landlord extends to one socially visiting or calling upon a tenant as protects the tenant himself, because the use of the hall and staircase for the purpose of enjoying such visits and calls is by necessary implication, where not expressly provided for, within the reasonable intent of the demise of the rooms. The plaintiff's intestate here was visiting one of the tenants, and was injured by reason of the defective condition of a portion of the premises with respect to which the obligation of keeping it in a safe condition was imposed upon the landlord."

Our holding that liability exists is not on the ground that the landlord contracted to repair since that contract but excused the landlord for going upon the premises. His liability is for an affirmative wrong in creating a dangerous condition. The same liability would have arisen if he had been a stranger to the parties and to the premises.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Appeal dismissed after order for rehearing granted.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Earl WHEELER, by Next Friend,

City of BOONE, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A tricycle is not within the scope of an ordinance prohibiting the use of "all varieties of vehicles known by the general name 'bicycles.'" on sidewalks.
2. A tricycle in which a person unable to walk is traveling on a sidewalk is not within the scope of an ordinance against leading, riding, or placing "any beast of burden or vehicle on any sidewalk," or an ordinance prohibiting riding or driving other than between curb lines of the street.
3. The duty of a city to keep a sidewalk in suitable condition to walk over extends to a person rightfully riding on the walk in a tricycle; and the test of the city's liability to him is the same as if he had been walking.
4. An instruction as to the recovery of damages for future pain and suffering is improper in the absence of any evidence to warrant it.

(April 8, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Boone County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Whitaker & Dale, for appellant:

The defect in the sidewalk was not apparent to the ordinary observer, but it required a close investigation to discover that the plank was loose. Its existence was not known to the inhabitants of the city generally.

It cannot be said, in view of these facts, that the city was negligent in failing to ascertain the existence of the defect before the injury occurred.

Cook v. Anamosa, 66 Iowa, 427.

In legal contemplation the bicycle is to be regarded as a carriage or a vehicle.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 16.

Sidewalks are intended for the use of pedestrians, and not for use by persons in vehicles.

Mercer v. Corbin, 117 Ind. 450; Reg. v. Plummer, 30 U. C. Q. B. 41; O'Laughlin v. Dubuque, 42 Iowa, 539; Alline v. Le Mars, 71 Iowa, 654; Ely v. Des Moines, 86 Iowa, 55, 17 L. R. A. 124; 1 Addison, Torts, 28.

NOTE.—As to bicycles on sidewalks or bridges, see also Twilley v. Perkins (Md.) 19 L. R. A. 632, and note; and Com. v. Forrest (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 365.
44 L. R. A.

Whenever an action is brought for a breach of duty imposed by statute, the party bringing it must show that he had an interest in the performance of the duty, and that the duty was imposed for his benefit.

1 Sutherland, Damages, 55; McDonald v. Snelling, 14 Allen, 292, 92 Am. Dec. 768.

Mr. R. F. Jordan, for appellee:

The verdict necessarily amounted to a finding that the walk was unsafe, and that such a condition existed for a length of time which by ordinary diligence would have enabled the defendant appellant to discover it and remedy it. It is the duty of the jury, when there is no actual notice, to determine whether the defect existed for a sufficient length of time to have placed the city upon notice by construction.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 406.

It cannot be said, where the element of pain and suffering is involved, and where the boy has been by this injury a helpless invalid for a period of two months or more, and where he has been the source of a great deal of worry and anxiety to his parents, that the amount allowed by the jury is excessive, or is the result of either passion or prejudice.

Allen v. Ames & C. R. Co. 106 Iowa, 602.

The answer in this case does not plead the ordinances referred to, or any one of them. Where a corporation desires to avail itself of a defense because of a violation of some of its rules and regulations, such a rule or regulation must be specially pleaded.

Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. 94 Iowa, 380; Nicholaus v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 90 Iowa, 85; Independent Dist. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 68 Iowa, 343; Mayes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 562.

While sidewalks are primarily designed for the use of pedestrians, yet the lame and the blind have a right to use the highways, including sidewalks.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 470.

In a case where the defendant was prosecuted for violating a town ordinance against bicycles on sidewalks, where it appeared from the evidence that at the point where defendant rode on the sidewalk the street was impassable owing to a large mud hole therein, the wheelman was justified in taking to the sidewalk.

Law Notes, p. 31, May, 1898.

The use of a velocipede on the public streets is not necessarily unlawful.

Purple v. Greenfield, 138 Mass. 1.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Earl Wheeler, is a boy fourteen years of age, and is afflicted by a stiffening of the muscles and joints through what is called "callositation." Because of this he is moved about in a tricycle. About April 8, 1897, he was going to school with his brother, a boy two years his junior, to draw or push the tricycle and on one of the walks of defendant city, because of a defect in the walk, he was thrown from the tricycle and injured; and this action is for the damage suffered. The walk on which the accident occurred was 4 feet in width, made of boards placed on three stringers. The defect, as shown, was in one of the boards, about 8 inches wide, being broken so that on one side of the walk it was from 1½ to 2 inches below the surface; and when stepped upon it would go down, and then spring back, so as to be as we have described. This was at a place where the walk descended in the direction the boys were going; and it appears from their testimony that they were going quite fast down the hill; and the younger brother, who had been pulling the vehicle with a rope, because of its speed, left the front, and went behind it to hold it back; and just as he reached there the front wheel went into the hole in the walk, and Earl fell out and was injured. It is urged to us that the evidence does not justify a finding of negligence on the part of the city, nor that the boy was injured because of the defect in the walk. We cannot agree with appellant as to either. We would be better satisfied with a finding for the city on both questions, but it is not to be well said that there is not a substantial conflict, as to both propositions, in the evidence. As to the condition of the walk, and how long it had been out of repair, there was affirmative proof that the walk had been for some time—two months or less—in the condition we have described, so that the city, in exercise of ordinary care, would have known it. There is a strong showing from those who used the walk and ought to have known of the defect if it was there, that they did not know of it; but, with the affirmative proof of the fact, this want of knowledge does not destroy the conflict. As to how the injury occurred, the boys both say the wheel of the tricycle went into the hole, and Earl was thrown out. It is true, they do not agree as to some particulars that might be considered in weighing the evidence, but nothing so overcomes their statements as to nullify the finding of the jury.

2. The city has an ordinance prohibiting the use of its sidewalks of "all varieties of vehicles known by the general term 'bicycles.'" Defendant offered the ordinance in evidence, and it was rejected, and rightly so, for it was immaterial: a tricycle not being a bicycle. Nor are they known by the general term "bicycle." It is probably true that both are vehicles, but the ordinance is not against the use of vehicles, unless they come under the general term "bicycle."

3. The court also rejected as evidence an ordinance as follows: "Whoever shall lead, ride, or place any beast of burden or vehicle on any sidewalk or footway, otherwise than going in or out of premises owned or occupied by himself or his employer, or shall allow the same to stand or remain upon any street crossing, to the inconvenience of persons, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." The ruling was right. There is no more reason to think the ordinance was intended to prohibit the use of a tricycle, as this was made, than the use of a baby cab or invalid chair on wheels. It is very clear that it has no reference to vehicles used and propelled by individuals, like bicycles or tricycles. The court also excluded an ordinance prohibiting riding or driving other than between the curb lines of the street, but the ordinance was manifestly intended to prohibit riding or driving beasts other than between the curb lines. This conclusion arises from construing the several provisions together. The ordinance as to bicycles was evidently intended to cover the subject of vehicles of that general nature. Whatever may be said as to general rules of law prohibiting vehicles, including bicycles, on sidewalks, we have yet to learn of any general or local law prohibiting the use of carriages operated by hand on sidewalks for the convenience of those unable to walk; and no law should be given such effect by construction.

4. The court instructed that, while the city was required to keep its walks in reasonably safe condition for pedestrians exercising reasonable care, it was not required to keep them in safe condition for people riding thereon in tricycles, and, as the accident in this case occurred while plaintiff was on a tricycle, the liability of the city must be tested by the same rule that would obtain had plaintiff been walking, and then been injured; that is, if the city was negligent in failing to keep the walk in suitable condition for people to walk over, and plaintiff while riding on the tricycle, in the exercise of due care, was injured because of such neglect, he could recover. We think the rule a correct one. It differs from the oft-expressed rule only in this, that persons who have a right to ride on the sidewalks in such vehicles may rely, the same as footmen may, on the walks being in a suitable condition for people to walk over, and have the same rights in case of injuries resulting from neglect. Such a rule places no additional burden on the public, and seems to be just as to the individual.

5. A complaint as to the fourteenth instruction given by the court is without merit. There is also a complaint as to the fifteenth instruction given. After verdict the court permitted plaintiff to so amend the petition as to claim damages for further pain and suffering. The court had by its instructions already permitted such a recovery, if the jury found for plaintiff, and error is now assigned on the giving of the instruction; and it is said the evidence was not such as to warrant the amendment, or a recovery for mental and physical pain in the future, unless the allegation of permanent injury would, by implication, include that of future pain. The petition contains no such averment, and in argument appellee attempts to sustain the instruction as given on that theory. The petition contains an express allegation of physical and mental pain which plaintiff has suffered, but no averment that he will so suffer in the future. The case seems to have been tried on that theory, except as to the instruction given by the court; and it does not appear that the parties had in view such an issue until the question arose after verdict, when, to meet the conditions, the amendment was filed. The case is to be reversed, and what we have said will be sufficient to avoid any difficulty on another trial on this branch of the case. It is explicitly charged in argument that there is no evidence as a basis for a recovery for future pain, and appellant sets out the evidence to show that there could be no such a recovery. Appellee in no way attempts to meet this, and we find no evidence on which damages of this character could rest. So far as we find evidence bearing on that question, it is against even a probability of such suffering. It is true that he will suffer pain because of his former ailment, and would but for his injuries complained of. If there is any evidence from which it could be found that the injuries would increase his suffering after the trial, we do not discover it; and we think, if there was such, it would have been, in view of appellant's claim, pointed out. The injury was early in April, and the trial was the first days of October following, when he seemed to be well of his injuries, in so far as they would cause him pain. It is true that there remained a permanent enlargement of the bone of the leg, but it does not appear that it would be painful. For the error in submitting the question of future pain and suffering, the judgment must stand reversed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

James REED, Appt.,
v.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A railroad company is under obligation to stop a train and rescue a passenger who has been thrown or pushed therefrom without any fault on its part, where he is liable to perish or suffer great injury unless rescued, only when it can stop the train long enough to rescue him without endangering the safety of other passengers by collisions.
2. A petition against a railroad company for failure to rescue a passenger who fell or was thrown from a train is not sufficient when it does not allege that the train could have been stopped to rescue him without risk of collision with other trains, or that there were any means by which the trainmen could have procured others to rescue him.

(October 28, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clark County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for defendant's negligence in leaving plaintiff to suffer unaided after having fallen from defendant's train. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Benton & Bush, S. A. Jeffries, and Beckner & Jonett, for appellant:

The relation is not terminated by the passenger falling or being thrown from the train.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 745.

The rule certainly cannot be that while a passenger is on the train a carrier must afford him ample protection from all injury, and yet if he is thrown, or accidentally falls, from the train, and is rendered helpless, the carrier can leave him to suffer and to die, without being held to any responsibility.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 596; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 81 Ky. 624, 50 Am. Rep. 186; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78.

If a passenger falls from a train, with the knowledge of persons in charge of the train, and is left in a position of peril, where he is likely to be killed or injured by another train, it is the duty of those in charge of the train from which he fell to notify the crew of the other trains so they can avoid injuring him.

Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen, 49 Ohio St. 230, 16 L. R. A. 674.

Messrs. Breckinridge & Shelby, for appellee:

After a person has been received as a passenger if the performance of the contract for transportation in the usual and proper way involves his leaving the vehicle of the company for any purpose and returning again, he is entitled to protection while leaving and when returning. But during the interval of his absence after his departure and before his return he is not regarded as a passenger.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 561a; State v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 58 Me. 176, 4 Am. Rep. 258; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen, 49 Ohio St. 230, 16 L. R. A. 674; Henderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 430.

NOTE.—As to duty of railroad company to disabled passenger left on railroad track, see also Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 241, and note; also Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen (Ohio) 16 L. R. A. 674. 44 L. R. A.

Burnam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts upon which appellant seeks to recover damages from appellee in this action, as stated in his original and amended petitions, are that he was a passenger on one of appellee's trains from Winchester to Elkin, and that at a point between those places, while the train was moving rapidly and passing over a high trestle, he was thrown or pushed from the train, so that he fell a distance of from 40 to 50 feet; that he received the fall after dark, and that the defendant, through its employees in charge of the train, knew he had received the fall, and that he was either killed or had received such serious personal injuries as to render him helpless, but negligently failed to stop the train, and care for him, or procure others to do so; that, by reason of such negligence, he was compelled to, and did, lie where he had fallen until 7 o'clock the next day; that the place was about a mile from any dwelling house or habitation or highway, and not in sight of any highway or dwelling house or habitation; that these facts were known to defendant's agents in charge of the train; and that, as a result of the fall, he suffered serious injuries, and that a cold rain fell upon him where he lay exposed. Defendant filed a general demurrer to the petition as amended, which was sustained, and the petition was dismissed; and this appeal is taken from that judgment.

Two legal questions are presented: First, Is a railroad company under legal obligation to stop its train, and rescue a passenger who has been thrown or pushed therefrom without any fault on its part, under circumstances where, unless rescued, he is liable to perish or suffer great injury? and, second, Does the petition in this case allege such a state of fact as made it the legal duty of defendant to have done so in this instance? The precise question presented here is a novel one, and our attention has not been directed to a case in which it has been considered or passed upon. From the time the relation of carrier and passenger commences, the passenger is necessarily, in a large degree, under the protection of the carrier, and it is bound to exercise the strictest vigilance in seeing after his safety. It has been held that if a passenger falls from a train, with the knowledge of the persons in charge thereof, and is left in a position of peril, where he is liable to be killed or injured by another train, it is the duty of those in charge of the train from which he fell to notify the crews of other trains, so that they can avoid injuring him; and if they fail to give such notice, and the person is injured by another train, the employer of the crew of the train from which he fell is responsible. And it seems to us that it is not asking too much of a railroad company to require that it shall render such assistance to a passenger who has been rendered helpless by a fall from one of its trains as it can give without endangering the safety of other passengers or property committed to its care. But, on the other hand, it is the settled rule that, when a railroad company undertakes to transport persons by the powerful and dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety alike require that it shall be held to the exercise of the highest possible degree of care, diligence, vigilance, and skill in the conduct and management of its trains in every particular, with a view to the safety of its passengers; and for the slightest negligence or carelessness in these respects the carrier is liable. See Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 144. Its trains necessarily run on fixed schedules of time, and, as a general rule, it is necessary, for the safety of railroad travel, that these schedules should be scrupulously adhered to; and unless appellee could have stopped its train in this instance long enough to have rescued appellant without endangering the safety of its other passengers by collisions arising from such stoppage, or otherwise, it was under no legal obligation to do so. The petition in this case does not allege that the train could have been stopped, and the time taken to rescue appellant, without running the risk of collision with other trains, nor is it alleged that there were any means by which the men in charge of the train could have procured others to go to the assistance of appellant; and, as the burden is upon appellant to allege and prove these necessary facts, the demurrer was properly sustained. Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Burnam, J., on December 15, 1898, handed down the following response:

The rule that a plaintiff is not required to allege matters which are peculiarly within the knowledge of a defendant has no application "where the matter is such that its affirmation is essential to the apparent or prima facie right of recovery of the party pleading. There it ought to be affirmed or denied by him in the first instance, though it may be such as would otherwise properly form the subject of objection on the other side." See Steph. Pl. p. 252. The defendant's paramount duty was to transport its passengers safely, and to avoid the possibility of accidents from collisions with other trains. The obligation on it to stop its train to rescue a passenger who, without fault on its part, had fallen from the train, was wholly subordinate to its obligation to others: and, before appellant could rightfully complain that appellee's failure to assist him was negligence, he must allege facts which made it the legal duty of appellee to have rendered such assistance; and, without allegations showing that under the conditions which obtained appellee could have safely rendered such assistance, no prima facie case is made out. The court cannot assume that a train can be stopped at any but regular stations without incurring danger to the passengers thereon, which it is the supreme duty of those in charge thereof to avoid. The burden of alleging and proving that such conditions existed is essential to the right of recovery in an action of this character.

DEPOSIT BANK OF OWENSBORO, Appt.,
v.
DAVIESS COUNTY.

FARMERS' & TRADERS' BANK, Appt.,
v.
City of OWENSBORO.

OWENSBORO SAVINGS BANK, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

CITIZENS' SAVINGS BANK, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

DEPOSIT BANK OF OWENSBORO, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

City of CARLISLE, Appt.,
v.
DEPOSIT BANK OF CARLISLE.

NICHOLAS COUNTY, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

City of CARLISLE, Appt.,
v.
FARMERS' BANK OF CARLISLE.
SIMPSON COUNTY BANK, Appt.,
v.

City of FRANKLIN.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Charters granting exemption from taxation, passed after the enactment of a general law which provides that all charters subsequently enacted shall be subject to amendment or repeal, may, unless a contrary intent was plainly expressed therein, be amended or repealed at the pleasure of the legislature so as to deprive the corporation of the exemption.
2. National banks doing business in a state are subject to have the same tax imposed upon their shares of stock as are imposed upon the shares of stock in state banks whose charters were passed after the adoption of a statute making the charters subject to amendment although they are in the state banks not subject to such taxation because of irrevocable exemptions in their charters.
3. Consent in writing by banks to be governed by the provisions of a statute fixing the rate of taxation which the state agrees shall be in lieu of all other taxation upon the banks does not effect an irrevocable contract where the statute expressly provides that it shall be subject to the provisions of another law making all grants to corporations subject to amendment at the pleasure of the legislature.
4. The acceptance by a bank of the provisions of a statute fixing its taxes at a certain amount which shall be in lieu of all other taxes, which statute is made subject to amendment at the pleasure of the legislature, is a waiver of tax exemptions in its charter, and it will thereafter be subject to such taxation as the legislature sees fit to impose upon it and a repeal of the new statute will not restore the provisions of the old one.

5. A proviso to a statute making privileges and franchises granted to corporations subject to amendment, that no amendment shall impair other rights previously vested, does not include an exemption from taxation, since that is a franchise and as such subject to amendment, and not a vested right.
6. The enjoyment of a special rate of taxation given to a bank by a statute cannot continue after the repeal of the statute.
7. Statutes granting extension to corporate charters passed after the adoption of an act making all grants to corporations subject to amendment will be subject to that act, although the original charters contained exemptions which were irrevocable.

(March 24, 1897.)

A PPEALS by Deposit Bank of Owensboro, Farmers' & Traders' Bank, Owensboro Savings Bank, and Citizens' Savings Bank from decrees of the Circuit Court for Daviess County in favor of defendants in suits brought to enjoin the collection of taxes. Affirmed.

A PPEALS by the City of Carlisle from decrees of the Circuit Court for Nicholas County in favor of plaintiffs in suits brought to recover back taxes alleged to have been paid to the city by mistake and without consideration. Reversed.

A PPEAL by Nicholas County from a decree of the Circuit Court for Nicholas County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin collection of taxes alleged to be due the county. Reversed.

A PPEAL by Simpson County Bank from a decree of the Circuit Court for Simpson County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to compel payment of taxes. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Wilfred Carlee, for appellant, Owensboro National Bank:

The act of 1892 is in violation of contract rights.

Com. v. Farmers' Bank, 97 Ky. 590.

The statutes of 1892 are in conflict with the state Constitution.

Ky. Const. § 181.

The state cannot tax franchises of national banks.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431, 4 L. ed. 607; Rosenblatt v. Johnston, 104 U. S. 462, 26 L. ed. 832; Bank of Bethel v. Pahquioque Bank, 14 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 840; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Kennedy, 17 Wall. 19, 21 L. ed. 554; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143; Crutcher v. Ken-

NOTE.—The above decision was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in 173 U. S. 636, 43 L. ed. 840.

For contracts of exemption from taxation, see also State, Singer Mfg. Co., v. Heppenhelmer (N. J.) 32 L. R. A. 643.
44 L. R. A.

For other cases of interference with charter privileges, see also Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton (Ky.) 33 L. R. A. 177, and note; and Jacobson v. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. (Minn.) 40 L. R. A. 389.

tucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649; California v. Central P. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 150, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 153.

Messrs. Weir & Weir, Sweeney, Ellis, & Sweeney, and Reuben A. Miller for the Owensboro Banks.

Messrs. Goodnight & Roark for Simpson County Bank.

Messrs. Little & Little, for appellee city of Owensboro:

While these appeals have been pending some of the questions involved have been considered and determined in—

Com. v. Farmers' Bank, 97 Ky. 590.

The cases before the court do not involve a rule of property. It is not a question of right between two citizens but between the citizen on one hand and the state on the other, or the local government.

Even as to a rule of property, however, there may be departures from former decisions in cases where there is necessity of preventing continued injustice or of vindicating clear and obvious principles of law.

Wells, Res Adjudicata and Stare Decisis, § 598.

When the question decided is a doubtful one, and when the decision is made by a divided court, and when there has been no long period of acquiescence, the doctrine of stare decisis grows less inflexible.

When a decision has been rendered that plainly defeats an important legislative policy, where it perpetuates unjust inequalities in the burdens of government, and it is reached by only too faithfully following precedent of the Federal judiciary whose artificial reasoning has long been questioned by learned lawyers and judges everywhere, the doctrine of stare decisis should not prevent the court from again considering the question involved.

Bowers v. Green, 2 Ill. 43; Shields v. Perkins, 2 Ribb, 230; Caldwell v. Price, Hardin, 69; Frank v. Darst, 14 Ill. 304, 58 Am. Dec. 575.

Mr. J. D. Atchison, also for appellee city of Owensboro:

Every bank that accepted a charter after the passage of the act of 1856 did it with full knowledge of the fact that the state had adopted a policy of no longer entering into irrevocable contracts with corporations, except it plainly expressed its purpose to do so in making the grant, and that whatever rights were acquired under charters could only be enjoyed during such time as the legislature might see fit to continue the immunity.

There has always been a strong protest against the doctrine that such pledges could constitutionally be made.

Cooley, Taxn. 66; Bailey v. Maguire, 22 Wall. 215, 22 L. ed. 850.

The charters of incorporation are to be construed strictly against the incorporators.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 488, 489; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 7 L. ed. 939; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773; Perrine v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. 9 How. 172, 13 L. ed. 92; 44 L. R. A.

Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Louisa R. Co. 13 How. 71, 14 L. ed. 55.

Except as the banks have an absolute contract plainly expressed in the Hewitt bill they have no standing in court.

Exemptions from taxation are always subject to recall when they have been granted merely as a privilege, and not for a consideration.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 473; Griffin v. Kentucky Ins. Co. 3 Bush, 592, 96 Am. Dec. 239; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 10, 36 L. ed. 57; South Carolina v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 425, 21 L. ed. 650; Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, 27 L. ed. 1030; Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 454, 21 L. ed. 204; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. ed. 185; Hoge v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 99 U. S. 348, 25 L. ed. 303; Sinking-Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961; Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 466, 27 L. ed. 408; Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co. 115 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 510; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 396, 32 L. ed. 979; Sioux City Street R. Co. v. Sioux City, 138 U. S. 98, 34 L. ed. 898; Miller v. New York, 15 Wall. 488, 21 L. ed. 101.

There is nothing in the language used, nor in the character of the privileges and franchise granted and conferred, indicating that the intent to relinquish its power of taxation is plainly expressed.

Cumberland & O. R. Co. v. Barren County Ct. 10 Bush, 608; Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 323, 24 L. ed. 358; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 10, 36 L. ed. 57.

The taxing power of the state is never presumed to be relinquished unless the intent to relinquish is expressed in clear and unambiguous terms.

Bradley v. McAtee, 7 Bush, 667, 3 Am. Rep. 309; Dazey v. Killam, 1 Duv. 407; Nunes v. Wellisch, 12 Bush, 365.

It is perfectly well settled in Kentucky that the charters of corporations can be altered or amended by General Statutes.

Chattaroi R. Co. v. Kinner, 81 Ky. 221.

The acceptance of the amendment by the bank after its acceptance of the provisions of the Hewitt bill was a modification of the contract which took away the irrevocable qualities inherent therein, and placed this bank upon exactly the same footing as though incorporated under a charter granted after the expiration of the time fixed by the Hewitt bill for its acceptance.

Bath County v. Farmers' Bank, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 245; Citizens' Bank v. Shelbyville, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 247.

National banks can have no pretense that they have a contract with the state on the subject of taxation.

City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 221; Covington City Nat. Bank v. Covington, 21 Fed. Rep. 484; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 190; Lionberger v. Rouse, 9 Wall. 468, 19 L. ed. 721.

The shares in national banks are subject to taxation, although the entire capital of the bank be invested in the bonds of the United States which cannot be taxed by state authority.

Lionberger v. Rouse, 9 Wall. 473, 19 L. ed. 724; Van Allen v. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. ed. 229.

The right of the state to tax national banks is inherent within the state.

First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 358, 19 L. ed. 702.

The tax sought to be imposed is a tax on the shares of stock owned by the stockholders in the national and state banks of the state coupled with the requirement that the banks shall pay the tax for and on behalf of the stockholder.

First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; Lionberger v. Rouse, 9 Wall. 468, 19 L. ed. 721.

The state is not confined to the par value of shares in such institutions, but may tax them upon their market value.

Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall. 480, 23 L. ed. 112; New York v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 94 U. S. 415, 24 L. ed. 164.

Section 5219 of the United States Revised Statutes simply prohibits taxation at a greater rate than like property similarly situated.

Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895; Davenport Bank v. Davenport Bd. of Equalization, 123 U. S. 83, 31 L. ed. 94; Bank of Redemption v. Boston, 125 U. S. 60, National Bank of Redemption v. Boston, 31 L. ed. 689; Palmerv. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772; Talbot v. Silver Bow County Comrs. 139 U. S. 438, 35 L. ed. 210; Covington City Nat. Bank v. Covington, 21 Fed. Rep. 491.

The act of the Kentucky legislature known as "The Hewitt Bill" is itself repugnant, not only to the Constitution of Kentucky, but to the Constitution of the United States, in that it intentionally and purposely discriminates against other property in favor of banks with reference to the question of taxation.

Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep. 774; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 606, 33 L. ed. 1031; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892; Proprietors of Bridge v. Hoboken Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571.

Messrs. W. G. Dearing and G. A. Cassidy for city of Owensboro and Daviess County.

Mr. Robert S. Todd for Daviess County.

Mr. Thomas Owens for city of Carlisle.

Mr. Benjamin H. Robinson for Nicholas County.

Mr. G. T. Finn for city of Franklin.

Messrs. Hanson Kennedy, W. P. Ross & Son, and Harry Kennedy for Carlisle Banks.

Faynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases were pending either in this or the lower courts when the cases known as the "Bank Tax Cases" were decided. 97 Ky. 44 L. R. A.

590. From that opinion the writer of this one dissented, in which Judges Lewis and Guffy concurred. The questions of law involved in these cases are similar to those in the cases mentioned. We therefore re-examine and reconsider the question as to whether the opinion of the majority shall stand as the law regulating the taxation of the banks of the state.

The conclusion which we have reached is that the shares of stock, etc., in the banks are subject to county and municipal taxation, hence the opinion referred to should be and is overruled. So is the case of Franklin County Ct. v. Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370, overruled, for the reasons which will herein-after appear.

This conclusion of the court renders it necessary to discuss the questions of law in the other "Bank Tax Cases," and we will consequently use parts of the dissenting opinion without quotation marks. There were four banks in the state, commonly designated as the "old banks," and they were the Bank of Kentucky, chartered in 1834; the Northern Bank, in 1835; the Bank of Louisville, in 18—; the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, in 1850. The charters of the first three banks named were extended by the same act of the general assembly in 1858, and each of the charters was extended by subsequent legislative acts. In neither of the acts of extension is reference made to the act of 1856, nor does either contain express limitation upon the taxing power of the state. The charter and amendments of the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky were extended by an act of the general assembly in 1876, but the right to repeal the charter and its amendments "either by general or special act" was reserved in the act. The charters of all banks operating under charters were granted after the act of 1856. This was the situation when the revenue bill of 1886, generally called the "Hewitt Bill," became a law. The provision of it relating to the taxation of banks is art. 2, chap. 92, Gen. Stat., and reads as follows:

Sec. 1: "That shares of stock in state and national banks, and other institutions of loan or discount, and in all corporations required by law to be taxed on their capital stock, shall be taxed seventy-five cents on each share thereof equal to $100, or on each share of stock therein owned by individuals, corporations, or societies, and said banks, institutions, and corporations shall, in addition, pay upon each $100 of so much of their surplus, undivided surplus, undivided profits, or undivided accumulations as exceeds an amount equal to 10 per cent of their capital stock, the same rate of taxation that is assessed upon real estate, which shall be in full of all tax, state, county, and municipal."

Sec. 4: "That each of said banks, institutions, and corporations, by its proper corporate authority, with the consent of a majority in interest of a quorum of its stockholders, at a regular or called meeting thereof, may give its consent to the levying of said tax, and agree to pay the same as herein provided, and to waive and release all right under the acts of Congress or under the charters of the state banks to a different mode or smaller rate of taxation, which consent or agreement to and with the state of Kentucky shall be evidenced by writing under the seal of such bank and delivered to the governor of this commonwealth; and upon such agreement and consent being delivered, and in consideration thereof, such bank and its shares of stock shall be exempt from all other taxation whatsoever so long as said tax shall be paid during the corporate existence of such bank."

Sec. 5: "The said banks may take the proceeding authorized by § 4 of this act at any time until the meeting of the next general assembly; provided, they pay the tax provided in § 1, from the passage of this act."

Sec. 7: "If any bank, state or national, shall refuse or fail to pay the tax imposed by this act, or shall fail or refuse to make the consent and agreement as prescribed in § 4, the shares of stock of such bank, institution, or corporation, and its surplus, undivided accumulations, and undivided profits, shall be assessed as directed by § 2 of this act, and the same taxes, state, county, and municipal, shall be imposed, levied, and collected upon the assessed shares, surplus, undivided profits, undivided accumulations, as is imposed on the assessed taxable property in the hands of individuals; provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed as exempting from taxation for county or municipal purposes any real estate or building owned and used by said banks or corporations for conducting their business, but the same may be taxed for county and municipal purposes as other real estate is taxed."

Sec. 6: "This act shall be subject to the provisions of § eight (8), chapter sixty-eight (68) of the General Statutes."

Section 8 of chapter 68, referred to in § 6 above, is as follows: "All charters and grants of or to corporations, or amendments thereof, enacted or granted since the 14th of February, 1856, and all other statutes, shall be subject to amendment or repeal at the will of the legislature, unless a contrary intent be therein plainly expressed; provided, that whilst privileges and franchises so granted may be changed or repealed, no amendment or repeal shall impair other rights previously vested."

These statutes were in force when the constitutional convention met to frame the present Constitution. This instrument was adopted on the 28th day of September, 1891.

Section 174 is as follows: "All property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, unless exempted by this Constitution; and all corporate property shall pay the same rate of taxation paid by individual property. Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prevent the general assembly from providing for taxation based on income, licenses, or franchises."

Section 175 provides: "The power to tax property shall not be surrendered or suspended by any contract or grant to which the commonwealth shall be a party."

44 L. R. A.

In pursuance of these provisions of the Constitution the general assembly enacted laws under which the taxes were levied on the shares of the capital stock, etc., for county and municipal purposes about the imposition of which these controversies arose. The general assembly by the laws imposing the taxes for county and municipal purposes reduced the amount which the banks had been paying the state so as to only collect 42½ cents on each $100 of the value of the property interest in the bank assessed. This is the rate of taxation paid by individual property. The rate under the Hewitt bill was 75 cents on each share of the capital stock equal to $100, or on each $100 of stock therein, and, in addition thereto, pay upon each $100 of so much of their surplus, undivided surplus, undivided profits, or undivided accumulations as exceeded an amount equal to 10 per cent of their capital stock which was in full of all tax, state, county, and municipal. We assume the banks filed their written consent as provided for in § 4, art. 2, chap. 92, Gen. Stat. It is claimed that the banks have irrevocable contracts with the state from which it cannot recede without their consent; that the constitutional convention and the state had no power to change the mode or fix a higher rate of taxation than was imposed in the act of 1886. It is gravely asserted that when those who gave the state its organic law and statutory law seek to impose the burden of taxation equally on those who should bear it, a contract is attempted to be violated, and the state is acting in bad faith. We fully realize the wisdom of that provision of the Federal Constitution which declares that no state shall pass any law "impairing the obligation of contracts." The state should deal honestly with its citizens, thus setting an example worthy of the imitation of those who constitute the state. It has been well said: "A compact lies at the foundation of all national life. Contracts mark the progress of communities in civilization and prosperity. They guard, as far as is possible, against the fluctuations in human affairs. They seek to give stability to the present and certainty to the future. They gauge the confidence of man in the truthfulness and integrity of his fellow man. They are the springs of business, trade, and commerce. Without them, society could not go on. Spotless faith in their fulfilment honors alike communities and individuals." While this is true, we feel that the fervid eloquence of an orator could not in too earnest terms plead the justness of this demand of the citizen that each integral part of the state shall bear its fair proportion of the burdens of the state. The one who seeks to show that it is just to grant the privilege of exemption from taxation except in consideration of a public service has assumed a vast undertaking. That state which refuses to surrender one of its attributes of sovereignty—the power to impose taxes on corporations or individuals—demonstrates its regardful care of the rights of its citizens, and manifests its purpose to preserve its existence. When the state has, in express terms, declined to surrender any part of its sovereignty, and seeks to exercise its prerogative, we are unable to see the slightest foundation for the imputation of bad faith. From the Dartmouth College Case to the present time the Supreme Court of the United States has uniformly held that whenever the legislature granting the charter reserved the right to amend or repeal it, either by so providing in the charter or by a general law, the right to amend or repeal such charter exists, and to do so is not to impair the obligation of a contract; the charter being accepted with the full understanding that the right of repeal is part of the contract, and to the exercise of which right the grantee has consented. Many of the states, after the Dartmouth College Case, began to realize the importance of reserving the right to control corporate organizations which from time to time were being created; and, to make sure such power was being reserved, they passed general laws expressly reserving such powers, which statutes became a part of every act of incorporation as fully as if written therein, unless a different purpose was therein plainly expressed. The legislature of this state, being fully aware of the importance of such action as would reserve the right to amend or repeal acts of incorporation, passed what is known as the "Statute of 1856," which is § 8, chap. 68, Gen. Stat. It seems so plain that charters and grants, since the 14th of February, 1856, are subject to amendment or repeal, at the will of the legislature, unless a contrary intent is plainly expressed therein, that it is needless to discuss it. The Supreme Court of the United States has not only so held, but this court has done likewise in every case that has been before it. Acts of the character of the act of 1856 have uniformly been adjudged to be a condition upon which every charter of a corporation subsequently granted was held, and upon which every amendment or modification was made, and to be as much a part of the charters as if incorporated into them. Any other interpretation would render the statute inoperative, and wholly deprive it of its power to accomplish the purpose of its enactment.

In 1841, South Carolina passed a statute substantially the same as the statute of 1856. The Northeastern Railroad Company was incorporated in 1851. In 1855 an act was passed to amend its charter, the amendment exempting the railroad company from taxation. In 1868 the state adopted a new Constitution, in which it was declared that the property of the corporations then existing or thereafter created should be taxed. The legislature of the state passed an act to enforce that provision of the Constitution. The question involved in Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 454, 21 L. ed. 204, was as to the enforcement of such legislation. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case, said: "It is true that the charter of the company, when accepted by the corporators constituted a contract between them and the state, and that the amendment, when accepted, formed a part of the contract from that date, and was of the same obligatory character. And it may be equally true, as stated by counsel, that the exemption from taxation added greatly to the value of the stock of the company, and induced the plaintiff to purchase the shares held by him. But these considerations cannot be allowed any weight in determining the validity of the subsequent taxation. The power reserved to the state by the law of 1841 authorized any change in the contract as it originally existed, or as subsequently modified, or its entire revocation. The original corporators, or subsequent stockholders, took their interests with knowledge of the existence of this power, and of the possibility of its exercise at any time in the discretion of the legislature. The object of the reservation, and of similar reservations in other charters, is to prevent a grant of corporate rights and privileges in a form which will preclude legislative interference with their exercise if the public interest should at any time require such interference. It is a provision intended to preserve to the state control over its contract with the corporators, which, without that provision, would be irrepealable and protected from any measures affecting its obligation. There is no subject over which it is of greater moment for the state to preserve its power than that of taxation.

Immunity from taxation, constituting in these cases a part of the contract with the government, is, by the reservation of power such as is contained in the law of 1841, subject to be revoked equally with any other provision of the charter whenever the legislature may deem it expedient for the public interests that the revocation shall be made. The reservation affects the entire relation between the state and the corporation, and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the state." The same doctrine is enunciated in Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 836; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. ed. 185; Hoge v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 99 U. S. 348, 25 L. ed. 303; Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961; Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173; Close v. Glenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 466, 27 L. ed. 108; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co. 115 U. S. 683, 29 L. ed. 510; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 393, 32 L. ed. 979; Sioux City Street R. Co. v. Sioux City, 138 U. S. 98, 34 L. ed. 898.

It was said in Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Hamilton City, 146 U. S. 271, 36 L. ed. 969: "This reservation of power to alter or revoke a grant of special privileges necessarily became a part of the charter of every corporation formed under the general statute providing for the formation of corporations. A legislative grant to a corporation of special privileges, if not forbidden by the Constitution, may be a contract; but where one of the conditions of the grant is that the legislature may alter or revoke it, a law altering or revoking, or which has the effect to alter or revoke, the exclusive character of such privileges, cannot be regarded as one impairing the obligation of the contract, whatever may be the motive of the legislature, or however harshly such legislation may operate, in the particular case, upon the corporation or parties affected by it. The corporation, by accepting the grant subject to the legislative power so reserved by the Constitution, must be held to have assented to such reservation. . . . In Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961, the question was as to the scope and effect of a clause in a general statute of Massachusetts, providing that every act of incorporation passed after a named day 'shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal at the pleasure of the legislature.' This court, referring to that clause, said: 'Such an act may be amended; that is, it may be changed by additions to its terms or by qualifications of the same. It may be altered by the same power, and it may be repealed. What is it may be repealed? It is the act of incorporation. It is this organic law on which the corporate existence of the company depends which may be repealed, so that it shall cease to be a law or the legislature may adopt the milder course of amending the law in matters which need amendment, or altering it when it needs substantial change. All this may be done at the pleasure of the legislature. That body need give no reason for its action in the matter. The validity of such action does not depend on the necessity for it, or on the soundness of the reasons which prompted it.' The words, 'at the pleasure of the legislature,' are not in the clauses of the Constitution of Ohio, or in the statutes to which we have referred. But the general reservation of the power to alter, revoke, or repeal a grant of special privileges necessarily implies that the power may be exerted at the pleasure of the legislature."

It must be conceded, from the authorities cited, the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that the legislatures of the states have the power, when reserved in the charter or by general law, to change or repeal acts granting corporate privileges or franchises. The decisions of this court are in accord with these opinions. The case of Griffin v. Kentucky Ins. Co. 3 Bush, 592, 96 Am. Dec. 259, has been quoted with approval in the case of Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 14, 36 L. ed. 59, and in that case the court held that in all cases of charters or grants of corporate franchises, where the intention of the legislature was not "plainly expressed" not to exercise the power reserved by the statute of 1856 to amend or repeal, at the will of the legislature, such charters or grants must be read as if all the provisions of the act of 1856 were incorporated in them. Judge Robertson, in delivering the opinion in Griffin v. Kentucky Ins. Co. 3 Bush, 595, 96 Am. Dec. 259, said: "Then, was this general reservation of power, like a special reservation in the charter itself, a part of the contract; or was the contract made subject to it, and the obligation defined or modified by it? We think so. And, whatever might be thought of the policy of such legislation, or of the policy or justice of the repealing statute 44 L. R. A.

ute, over which the judiciary has no jurisdiction, our conclusion, as to the mere power of repeal, is, as we think, sustained by reason and abundant authority. All contracts, except such as are municipal, are made subject to the law, and their obligation is defined by the lex loci contractus. Why should the contract in this case be excepted? Such exception would be unreasonable, and the authorities fortify the reason." In the case of Cumberland & O. R. Co. v. Barren County Ct. 10 Bush, 604, in reference to the act of 1856, the court said: "The act was intended to preserve to the state control over all acts of incorporation thereafter passed. Experience had demonstrated the propriety of, if not the absolute necessity for, such a reservation of power, and it would be a manifest disregard of the clearly-expressed will of the legislature for the courts to resort to technical rules of construction or finely-drawn legal implications to escape the effect of the plain declaration that all charters of and grants to corporations shall be subject to amendment and repeal 'unless a contrary intent be plainly expressed.'"

We conclude that the legislature, in 1886, when it passed the revenue bill, had the right to amend or repeal at will all charters and grants of or to corporations or amendments thereof enacted or granted since the 14th of February, 1856, "unless a contrary intent was plainly expressed."

The national banks were subject to have the same tax imposed on their shares of stock as are imposed on state banks doing business under charters granted since the 14th of February, 1856. Their real estate is subject to taxation. Their shares of stock may be taxed at their actual value, but no greater rate of taxation shall be collected on them than is assessed upon the moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state. In the case of Covington City Nat. Bank v. Covington, 21 Fed. Rep. 491, Justice Matthews, discussing this subject, said: "When, therefore, a state statute taxes the shares of a stockholder at their actual or market or full value, that necessarily includes such value beyond its par or nominal value as is imparted to the stock by the fact that the bank has a surplus fund or undivided profits." The interest which Congress has left subject to taxation by the states under the limitations prescribed, and which is a distinct, independent interest in property held by the shareholder, like any other property that may belong to him, is that interest, as defined in Van Allen v. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. ed. 229, which "entitles him to participate in the net profits earned by the bank in the employment of its capital, during the existence of its charter, in proportion to the number of his shares, and upon its dissolution or termination, to his proportion of the property that may remain of the corporation after the payment of its debts;" and (p. 587, 18 L. ed. 235), it includes for taxation the whole interest of the shareholder, such as would pass to the purchaser of the share on a transfer of his certificate. So, when a state law taxes shares of national bank stock, it taxes the same interest of the shareholder that he would transfer on a sale. The state may tax them at their actual or at their market value, or at any other rate of appraisement which does not violate the act of Congress. To the same effect are the cases of New York v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 94 U. S. 415, 24 L. ed. 164; Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895. In the latter case the court said (p. 155, 121 U. S. 30 L. ed. 901): "The main purpose, therefore, of Congress, in fixing limits to state taxation on investments in the shares of national banks, was to render it impossible for the state, in levying such a tax, to create and foster an unequal and unfriendly competition, by favoring institutions or individuals carrying on a similar business and operations and investments of a like character. The language of the act of Congress is to be read in the light of this policy." The legislature of Pennsylvania passed a statute taxing the shares in national banks on an assessed value thereof for county, school, municipal, and local purposes. The Supreme Court in Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall. 480, 23 L. ed. 112, held the statute valid. It has been decided that it is competent for the states to tax the shares of national bank stock, notwithstanding the capital of the bank was invested in bonds of the United States which were not subject to taxation. First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701. The national banking law does not prevent the state from taxing stock in national banks at a higher rate than that imposed on the most favored banks operating under the laws of the state. This question was fully determined in Lionberger v. Rouse, 9 Wall. 468, 19 L. ed. 721. The court said: "It is very clear that Congress, in conceding to the states the right to tax, adopted a measure which, it was supposed, would operate to restrain them from legislating adversely to the interests of the national banks. The measure itself had reference to prospective legislation by the states, and its object was accomplished when the states conformed, as far as practicable, their revenue systems to it. Exact conformity was required, if attainable; but the law-making power did not intend such an absurd thing, as that the power of the state to tax should depend on its doing an act which it had obliged itself not to do. It was well known at the time, and Congress must be supposed to have legislated on this subject with reference to it, that states, by contract with individuals or corporations, could grant away the right of taxation, and that this power had been frequently exercised. It was equally within the knowledge of Congress that the policy on this subject varied in different states; while some of them retained in their own hands the power of taxation over all species of property, except such as were devoted to religious or charitable purposes, others had parted with it to interests of a purely business character, like banks and railroads. Can it be supposed that Congress, in this condition of things in the country, meant to confer a privilege by one section of a law which by 44 L. R. A.

another it made practically unavailable? If the construction contended for by the plaintiff in error be allowed, then a state so unfortunate as to have a single bank, whose shareholders are exempt by contract from taxation in the manner provided by Congress, can derive no benefit from the power given to tax the shares of national banks. And this further consequence would follow, that the shareholders of national banks located in one state would escape all taxation, while those whose property was invested in banks in a different locality would have to contribute their full share of the public burdens. This court will not impute to Congress a purpose that would lead to such manifest injustice, in the absence of an express declaration to that effect. Without pursuing the subject further, it is enough to say, in our opinion, Congress meant no more by the second limitation in the proviso to the 41st section of the national banking act, than to require of each state, as a condition to the exercise of the power to tax the shares in national banks, that it should, as far as it had the capacity, tax in like manner the shares of banks of issue of its own creation."

The court should endeavor to ascertain the legislative intent in the act of 1866 with reference to the taxation of banks, as all depends in this controversy upon what was that intent. To aid in reaching a conclusion as to what the intent was, it is well to recall some official facts within the knowledge of the members of the legislature. The 1st of July, 1866, was the date of the last report of the capital stocks of the banks in the state before the enactment of the revenue law of 1866. From that it is learned that the capital stock of the fifty-nine national banks amounted to $9,708,900. The capital stock of sixty-five state banks, doing business under charters granted subsequent to 1856, amounted to $6,224,891. The capital stock of the four state banks—Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, Bank of Kentucky, Northern Bank, and the Bank of Louisville—incorporated prior to 1856, was $5,144,500. It will be seen from this statement that the capital stock of the national banks and of the state banks chartered since 1856 amounted in round numbers to $16,000,000, while the capital stock of banks whose charters antedate 1856 amounted to about $5,000,000, being less than one third of that of the other banks named. It must be presumed that the legislature knew that the banks claiming irrevocable contracts to pay only 50 cents on each share of their capital stock equal to $100 paid less than one third of the revenue coming from the banks under the then existing law. It can hardly be said that the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky was in a condition to claim an irrevocable contract, because the act extending its charter, which became a law on March 10, 1876, expressly reserved the right to amend or repeal its charter and amendments thereto. It reads as follows: "That the charter of the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, as amended, be extended for a period of twenty-five years from the termination of its charter as therein fixed: provided, that said charter and amendments shall be subject to amendments or repeal by the general assembly either by general or special act; and provided further, that whilst the privileges and franchises so granted may be changed or repealed, no amendment or repeal shall impair other rights previously vested." To simply quote the act extending the charter is a sufficient denial of and answer to the claim of an irrevocable contract. This left but three banks in the state which could claim an irrevocable contract, and one hundred and twenty-five without any claim whatever to immunity against increased taxation. The revenue act repealed several acts by particularly naming them, and excluded certain other acts from the repealing clause, and declared all other acts, general and special, and parts of acts inconsistent or not in conformity therewith, were thereby repealed. Chapter 92, Gen. Stat., contained the revenue law. The only part of the act relating to the taxation of banks and other institutions of loan or discount is art. 2, chap. 92, Gen. Stat. Section 1 of the article relates to the amount of tax which the banks shall pay, and designating the method of levying the tax. Section 2 imposes certain duties on the cashier of the bank with reference to making a report to the auditor of public accounts. Section 3 exempts banks having certain money invested in bonds or funds of the United States from taxation named in the section. By the terms of § 7, if the banks failed or refused to make the consent and agreement as provided in § 4, then they are to be assessed, and the same tax, state, county, and municipal, shall be imposed, levied, and collected, etc., as is imposed on the assessed taxable property in the hands of individuals. Without § 4, the remaining sections of the article would have been a complete system for levying and collecting taxes on the banks chartered after 1856. The article treats of nothing except the taxation of banks. Under § 4 the banks were asked to waive and release all right under the acts of Congress or under the charters of the state banks to a different mode or smaller rate of taxation. The national banks were subject to the payment of taxes for state, county, and municipal purposes, and it was not necessary to obtain their consent that they might be taxed for that purpose. It was needless to ask this class of banks to enter into the agreement. The legislature may have entertained some doubt, not as to the right to tax banks for state, county, and municipal purposes, but as to the method prescribed, and desired to remove all doubt by obtaining the consent of such banks to that method. It was greatly to the interest of the national banks and the state banks chartered subsequent to 1856 to enter into the agreement, because they were thus released from the payment of county and municipal taxes. In agreeing to pay the amount provided in the article for state purposes they were released from local burdens, which in some instances are two or three times as great as that which they agree to pay the state. It was greatly to their interest to accept the proposition of the state. As a matter of fact, these banks were relinquishing no rights. They were apparently yielding a right which the state, in its sovereignty, already possessed. The right had never been relinquished, but had been expressly reserved. So vigilant had been the state to retain the control of the corporations, and retain its power to tax them, that its purpose to do so was declared in the form of a legislative enactment, which was understood to be written in every act of incorporation. It may be a more difficult task to show why the three old banks entered into the agreement. Their right to the immunity from increased taxation was questioned, as shown by the revenue act, as their charters were declared repealed so far as they were inconsistent therewith. It was the evident purpose of the legislature to induce these banks to recede from their claim to an irrevocable contract. It was desired that all banks should be placed upon the same footing in the matter of taxation with the other banks of the state. The legislature had been renewing their charters, and, if they were again renewed, an appeal must be made to the same power. These banks may have realized that the act of 1856 should have, by a proper interpretation, been made applicable to the acts renewing their charters. However, it is needless to speculate further as to the reason which induced them to enter into the contract with the state by which they released any irrevocable contract which they had under their charter against increased taxation. These banks had the right to give their consent to the increased taxation.

The courts have always recognized the right of a corporation to consent to legislation, or accept its provisions, and be bound thereby, though it may have the effect of depriving such corporation of a vested right. This brings us to the question as to what were the terms and conditions of the contract into which all these banks entered. The banks must be presumed to know the law, and the effect of the contract to which they agreed. Those who represent banks are among the brightest and most sagacious business men of the country. The law is brief, simple, and without ambiguity. In short the state agreed to accept, and the banks agreed to pay, 75 cents annually on each share of their stock equal to $100, and, in consideration thereof, be exempt from all taxation whatsoever, so long as this tax shall be paid during the corporate existence of such bank. If these were all its terms then it might be contended with some reason that it was irrevocable during their corporate existence. Being mindful of the policy which had been pursued for thirty years, it said, in effect, to the banks: "It is desired that the statute shall be accepted in the formal way prescribed, but it must be understood that the right to alter or change it is reserved to the state." That its purpose might be fully understood, the legislature placed in the article § 6, which in turn makes the statute of 1856 a part of the contract. It is expressly provided that the article shall be subject to the provisions of § 8, chap. 68, Gen. Stat. The legislature was determined that the provisions of the act of 1856 should not depend on rules of construction to be read into the contract by implication, but in terms said that it should be part thereof. It is admitted that when the word "act" appears in art. 2 it has reference to the article (2). Article 2 was an independent measure, offered as a substitute to article 2 of the original bill. The substitute was adopted, and became a part of the revenue bill. It now appears as part of the bill in the exact language as offered. This § 6 has no reference to any part of the revenue bill except the article of which it is a part. It has been suggested that it had reference to new banks that might be organized. This could not be so, because article 2 is dealing with banks in existence, and asks them to give their consent, etc., thereto, and says, if at all, they must do so before the meeting of the next general assembly. When it was admitted that the word "act" as used, is synonymous with "article," then it must be admitted that the provisions of § 6 of art. 2 are applicable alone to the article (2) of which it is a part. If there could be any doubt from the language used as to the meaning of the legislature then that must be removed by an examination of the house and senate journals. An amendment (page 1241, House Journal 1886) was offered to art. 2 of the original revenue bill, and § 7 of that amendment reads as follows: "This act shall not be subject to the provisions of § 8, chap. 68, of the General Statutes." The amendment (page 1243, House Journal 1886) was defeated. While the revenue bill was pending in the senate, it was proposed to amend § 6 of art. 2 by inserting after the word "shall," in the first line, the words "not for ten years" (p. 1315, Senate Journal 1886). This amendment was defeated. Had it been adopted, then the section would have read: "This act shall not for ten years be subject to the provisions of § 8, chap. 68, of the General Statutes." The proceedings of the house and senate show the legislature fully understood the purpose for which this section was made part of article 2. It was the purpose of the legislature not to be restricted for any period of time in its right to repeal the article, and withdraw from the contract. In view of the plain provision of the statute, about the meaning of which there should be no doubt, and the intent of the legislature being fully explained by its record, it seems to us there should be no hesitation in concluding the act of 1856 should be read as part of the statute; hence an irrevocable contract did not exist. The fact that a written consent was asked and secured does not alter the application of the act of 1856. The act of 1856 should be read as part of the act of 1886, even if it had not been referred to as part of it.

In Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 10, 36 L. ed. 57, this rule of construction was recognized. The court said: "But, in respect to all the acts passed after 1850, amending the charter of, or relating to, the water company, including that of 1882, each must be read as if all the provisions of the act of 1856 were incorporated in it, because in no one of them is plainly expressed an intent to waive the right of amendment or repeal at the will of the legislature." Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 20, 26 L. ed. 964, is to the same effect. New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 352, is cited by counsel for appellees and also by counsel for appellants. The facts of that case were as follows: The Morris & Essex Railroad Company was created a corporation by an act of the legislature of New Jersey passed January 29, 1835. The act provided that, as soon as the net proceeds of the railroad amounted to 7 per cent on its cost, it should pay a state tax of one half of 1 per cent on the costs of the road, and no other tax should be levied upon it. The 20th section reserved to the legislature the right to amend or repeal the act whenever it should think proper. A supplemental act was passed on March 2, 1836, in which the right to repeal or amend was reserved. On the 14th of February, 1846, the legislature of New Jersey passed an act in effect the same as the Kentucky act of 1856. Another supplemental act to the charter of the railroad was approved March 23, 1865, authorizing a branch road to be built, and by which the company was vested with all the powers and franchises given by the original and supplemental act, etc. The 3d section of the last-named act reads as follows: "Be it enacted that the tax of one half of 1 per cent provided by this said original act of incorporation to be paid by the said company to the state whenever the net earnings of the said company amount to 7 per cent upon the cost of the road shall be paid at the expiration of one year from the time when the road of the said company shall be open and in use to Phillipsburg, and annually thereafter, which tax shall be in lieu and satisfaction of all other taxation or imposition whatever, by or under the authority of this state or any law thereof: provided, that this section shall not go into effect or be binding upon the said company, until the said company, by an instrument duly executed under its corporate seal and filed in the office of the secretary of state, shall have signified its assent thereto, and which assent shall be signified within sixty days after the passage of the act, or this act is void." The instrument required by the section was duly executed by the company. In the act of 1865 there was no reservation of the right to repeal or amend it. Acts of the legislature imposed a more burdensome tax on the railroad company than that provided for in § 3, supra. The sole question in New Jersey v. Yard was whether the act of 1865, and its acceptance by the railroad company, constituted a contract which could not be impaired by any subsequent legislature of the state. The court held that it was an irrevocable contract because the legislature had not reserved the right to amend or change it. It is plain from the opinion that, had the legislature reserved the right to alter or change the contract or act by which it was made, the court would have held the act of the legislature doing so did not impair the obligation of the contract. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion, said: "But as we have already said, since the legislature which passed the act of 1865 had the power to make a contract which should not be subject to repeal or modification by one of the parties to it without the consent of the other, the main question here is, Did they intend to make such a contract? . . . In the case now under consideration, it is conceded on all hands that the act of 1865 was a contract for a tax of one half of 1 per cent per annum on the cost of the Morris & Essex Railroad, and no more. But counsel for defendant says the contract was repealable; that the legislature of its own volition could impose other and more burdensome taxes at its discretion; that it was a contract so long as the legislature of New Jersey was satisfied with it, and no longer. It is conceded, also, that this construction of it cannot be sustained unless we are bound to import into it either the reservation clause of the act of 1836, or what is called the interpretation act of 1846. We have already shown how little reason there is for doing this on general principles of construction. We think it still clearer that it cannot be done, because it is inconsistent with the legislative intent in passing the act of 1865. . . . The implication is of a right to revoke it, and comes from the other quarter, and is one which we do not think exists by fair construction, and which we do not feel at liberty to import into the contract to defeat its manifest purpose." From the language of this opinion, and the long line of decisions of the same court, it is manifest that the decision was made to turn on the question of the reservation of the right to amend or repeal, etc.

In New Jersey v. Yard the court held the act was invalid, because the right to repeal or modify had not been reserved. In this case we are asked to hold the organic or statutory laws invalid because the right to repeal or modify was reserved in express terms. By the very terms of the act of 1856, a rule of interpretation is given that "all charters and grants of or to corporations or amendments thereof and all other statutes" shall be subject to amendment or repeal at the will of the legislature, unless a contrary intent be therein "plainly expressed." It is proposed now by those representing the banks to disregard this statutory rule of construction. It is now, in effect, insisted that, in order to reserve the right claimed, it must be "plainly expressed" in the act that it is reserved. This being done, it is still disregarded. The legislature, doubtless anticipating such contention and versatility, "plainly expressed" in the article that whatever was done thereunder or in pursuance thereof could only continue during its will. If § 6 was not for this purpose, we would like to have had someone suggest some reason as to why it was placed in the article. The doctrine is that, when it is asserted that a state has bargained away her right of taxation in a given case, the contract must be clear, and cannot be made out by dubious implication. New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 352. Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the court in 44 L. R. A.

Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 425, 14 L. ed. 1000, gave a rule of construction as follows: "The rule of construction, in cases of this kind, has been well settled by this court. The grant of privileges and exemptions to a corporation are strictly construed against the corporation, and in favor of the public. Nothing passes but what is granted in clear and explicit terms. And neither the right of taxation nor any other power of sovereignty which the community have an interest in preserving, undiminished, will be held by the court to be surrendered, unless the intention to surrender is manifested by words too plain to be mistaken. This is the rule laid down in the case of Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 7 L. ed. 939, and reaffirmed in the case of the Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773." The supreme court has enunciated substantially the same rule in numerous cases. The taxing power of the state is never presumed to be relinquished unless the intention to relinquish is expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. Bradley v. McAtee, 7 Bush, 667, 3 Am. Rep. 309. It is a familiar rule of construction of statutes that effect must be given to every provision except in cases of absolute and irreconcilable incongruity. Dazey v. Killam, 1 Duv. 407. If one statute refers to another for the power given by the former, the statute referred to is to be considered incorporated in the one making the reference. Nunes v. Wellisch, 12 Bush, 365. Mr. Cooley, in his work on Taxation (p. 204), says: "As taxation is the rule, and exemption the exception, the intention to make an exemption ought to be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms; and it cannot be taken to have been intended when the language of the statute on which it depends is doubtful or uncertain." For the interpretation of statutes, this court, in Nichols v. Wells, Sneed (Ky.), 69, said that "the most natural and genuine way of construing a statute is to construe one part by another part of the same statute; that the words and meaning of one part of a statute do frequently lead to the sense of another; and if it can be prevented no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant." As there is a clear expression of the legislative intent in the statute, no rules are really necessary to aid in its interpretation.

It can hardly be said it was unwise on the part of one hundred and twenty-five of the one hundred and twenty-eight banks in the state, as by the very terms of the act under which the contract was entered into they were required to pay state, county, and municipal taxes, with the power in the legislature to increase it at will. It certainly was a very advantageous contract for them to enter into when these banks paid more than two thirds of the taxes paid by all the banks, with the power in the legislature to increase the amount if they should so desire. What reason can be suggested as to why the legislature would desire to reverse the policy which had been steadfastly adhered to for so long, and enter into an irrevocable contract with such banks? Why should it want to surrender a power which it had been so zealous to preserve? The contract was made subject to the right of the legislature to withdraw from it whenever it regarded the public interest demanded it should do so. Whenever the banks accepted the provisions of the act of 1836, they surrendered any rights to immunity from increased taxation which their charters gave them. The acceptance of the act of 1836 was a consent to the repeal of so much of their charters as was inconsistent therewith. Hence they stood in such relation to the state, as to future taxation, as the legislature saw proper to impose. If the provisions of their charters relating to taxation were repealed,—as it must be admitted they were by the act of 1836,—then such provisions were no longer in force. It is unreasonable to say that the provisions of the charters fixing the rate of taxation on the banks at 50 cents on each share of the capital stock of the banks equal to $100 can be in force if the act of 1836 fixing such tax at 75 cents, instead of 50, on shares, is in force. In doing this it must be admitted the charter privilege has been repealed. If repealed, then, by the act of 1836, surely the only way in which the provisions of their charters could be restored would be by the legislature so providing in some act. There is no pretense this has been done. The fact that the law of 1836 has been repealed does not restore the former provisions of their charters.

Section 464, Ky. Stat., provides: "When a law which may have repealed another shall be repealed, the previous law shall not be revived, unless the law repealing it be passed during the same session of the general assembly." It is a most groundless contention to say that, if the present law is sustained, the old banks will be restored to the former privileges under their charters. It has been suggested that the provisions of their charters with reference to taxation were vested rights, and, although they consented to the legislation of 1836, and became subject to the provisions of the act of 1836, still, as the charter privilege as to taxation was a vested right, therefore it was saved to them by the provision which preserves "other rights previously vested." The proviso of the act of 1836 is, "that whilst privileges and franchises" so granted may be changed or repealed, no amendment or repeal shall impair "other rights previously vested." If a corporation by its charter or a general law, is exempted from the payment of taxes, it is released of a duty or burden. It enjoys an immunity of exemption from a general law which imposes the burden of the government on others. It may be said it enjoys a privilege. "Franchise . . . [is] a branch of the King's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject." 2 Sharswood's Bl. Com. 37. The legislature has reserved the right to amend or repeal the privileges and franchises, thus reserving the power to destroy or qualify the privileges and franchises which have been granted. The "other rights" which have become vested while operating under the charter cannot be impaired by an amendment or repeal. These "other rights" do not embrace "privileges and franchises." The "privileges and franchises" are the rights bestowed by the state, to be withdrawn or destroyed at the pleasure of the legislature. In the exercise of its pleasure the legislature may fix a higher rate of taxation, or it may declare to those enjoying the franchise that they shall no longer have it. Privileges and franchises are not "vested rights" either in the letter or spirit of the act of 1836. "Other rights" referred to in that act are such as the beneficiaries under the charter or general laws may have in property, contracts, choses in action, real and personal property, in fact every interest which they could acquire in operating under the charter or law, and also such rights or interests as other persons may have previously acquired by contract, mortgage, judgment, or otherwise in property belonging to the corporation. The purpose of the act of 1836 was to reserve in the legislature the power to destroy the privileges and franchises granted in the charters. If it does not have this effect, it would be entirely inoperative, and the effort to retain control of corporations would be abortive. The claim that the privileges granted by article 2 can be repealed, but without the right to terminate their enjoyment, is not founded on reason. The only privilege which the banks enjoyed was to pay the 75 cents on each share of stock in lieu of all taxes. To say that the law granting the privilege can be repealed because the right to do so was reserved, as is admitted, and still leave the banks in its enjoyment (as the effect of the opinion of the court in the Bank Tax Cases), is to disobey a plain statute, to ignore the authority of the opinions of the supreme court, and is a failure to follow sound reasoning in the settlement of a question of vast importance to the state and the people. The former opinion on this question gave the banks the substance and the state the shadow. Had § 6 of art. 2 provided that the act of 1836 should not be considered part of it, we do not doubt the representatives of the banks would have easily seen the meaning of the provision. As it is plainly written that the act of 1836 is to be considered a part of the article, they have the very greatest difficulty in seeing the purpose of the provision. It was said in Griffin v. Kentucky Ins. Co. 3 Bush, 594, 96 Am. Dec. 259: "The proviso was intended to secure the right of beneficiaries and others vested under the charter before its amendment or repeal, and does not affect the mere power to repeal the franchise." To the same effect is Cumberland & O. R. Co. v. Barren County Ct. 10 Bush, 604. Section 174 of the Constitution recognized a just principle when it declared that all property, whether owned by persons or corporations, should be taxed in proportion to its value, unless exempted thereby, and that all corporate property should pay the same rate of taxation paid by individual property. The legislature, in obedience to that provision of the Constitution, enacted the law for levying and collecting taxes from the banks of the state, the validity of which is in question in these cases.

For the reasons already given, we conclude that the obligations of no contracts were impaired by the action of the constitutional convention or the succeeding legislature. Some of the best lawyers in the state were members of the convention which framed our Constitution, who gave an earnest consideration to the questions involved in these cases; and the conclusions which they reached were crystallized into § 174 of the Constitution. We believe that their conclusions are correct.

The former opinion of the court denies the power is in the legislature to say what taxes the banks of the state shall pay for state purposes during the existence of their several charters. It denies the right of the legislature to compel them to bear any of the burdens of county and municipal government. We cannot believe the legislature did or intended by art. 2 of the act of 1886 to reverse its policy so earnestly pursued for a generation, and surrender to sixty-odd banks of the state its right, previously reserved, to control them in the matter of taxation, and to give up its power to increase or diminish the taxes imposed on one hundred and twenty-five banks, this including the national banks. Exigencies may arise requiring the levying and collecting of vast sums to meet the public demand, yet however great the emergency may be, or imperative the demand for money to meet such wants, the legislature is powerless to compel the banks to contribute more than they are now paying at any time during their corporate existence. The counties and municipalities are annually compelled to raise large sums of money by taxation. The counties of the state are compelled to incur large expense to support the county governments, and to pay for bridges and public highways, and support their unfortunate citizens. The municipalities must incur great expense in making all necessary improvements for the comfort, safety, and health of their citizens, to supply water and lights and to give police protection to their citizens and to the banks. The organic and statutory laws of the state, in our opinion, require that the banks should contribute their proper share of such expense to the local governments. In Franklin County Ct. v. Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370, the court adjudged that there was a broad distinction between the extension of a charter and the grant of a new one. This is true in a certain sense. To extend a charter requires a statute to be enacted which grants certain rights to the corporation. Under the act of 1856, all statutes, and also grants to corporations, are subject to amendment or repeal. All acts granting extensions to the charter of corporations since the 14th of February, 1856, are as much subject to amendment or repeal as are acts of incorporation passed since that date. In so far as the case of Franklin County Ct. v. Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370, is in conflict with this opinion, it is overruled. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 323. 24 L. ed. 358; Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. 44 L. R. A.

S. 503, 24 L. ed. 836; Com. v. Masonic Temple Co. 87 Ky. 349.

There are many national and state banks organized since the passage of the Hewitt bill. They certainly cannot claim with any degree of reason that they have any, much less an irrevocable, contract with the state. If there could have been any doubt on the question, it is removed by the case of Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 163 U. S. 416, 41 L. ed. 211. If the banks which accepted the Hewitt law are to be exonerated from the payment of county and municipal tax, then during the existence of their respective charters the burden placed upon the banks is not equal and just. In the same city or town we will have part of the banks paying county and municipal tax, while others have immunity from such burdens. It will greatly increase the value of the stock of the banks enjoying special privileges, while it will necessarily render less valuable stock in the banks which have the burden of a share of county and municipal taxes. It will be a check on the organization of new banks. It will give the favored banks a monopoly of the business in their respective communities. The effect would be an unjust and unwarranted discrimination.

It was seriously argued in the former opinion of this court that the enforcement of the Constitution and laws will diminish the revenues of the state government. With this we have nothing to do. It is our business to obey the Constitution, and respect the statutes enacted in accordance therewith. Were this a question of policy involved, it is not considered a great task to vindicate its wisdom. While more of the citizen's tax will go to support the state government, yet he is trebly compensated by the banks' contributing their fair share of county and municipal taxation, and thus reducing the amount which each citizen will be required to pay to sustain the local governments.

The cases of Deposit Bank of Owensboro, Farmers' & Traders' Bank, Owensboro Savings Bank, and Citizens' Saving Bank v. City of Owensboro, etc., Deposit Bank of Owensboro v. Daviess County, Simpson County Bank v. City of Franklin are affirmed, and the cases of City of Carlisle v. Deposit Bank of Carlisle, Nicholas County v. Deposit Bank of Carlisle, and City of Carlisle v. Farmers' Bank are reversed with directions that further proceedings conform to this opinion.

Hazelrigg, Du Relle, and Burnam, JJ., dissent.

Du Relle, J., dissenting:

Assuming that I should differ from the former opinion of the court if the construction sought upon these appeals were an original question now for the first time presented for decision, and that the meaning of the constitutional and statutory provisions under consideration is so plain that I should do so without regard to argument drawn from real or supposed inconvenience which might result from my construction, I am nevertheless constrained to dissent from the present opinion. The case is not, in my judgment, one in which a former erroneous decision upon a question of taxation is sought to be overruled by the court as to taxes assessed for subsequent years; nor do I intend here to express an opinion upon that class of cases. The original opinion now overruled by the opinion of the court was not a mere question of liability to tax under statute or Constitution. It was a question of contract proprietary right, and was so decided. Having been so decided after elaborate discussion and full consideration, it having been established by that decision that a contract right existed, and property of enormous value having doubtless changed hands upon the strength of the property right so adjudged to exist, this court should be slow to overturn a decision which has stood for more than a year and a half the law of the commonwealth. It has been said, and, in general, it is true, that "the certainty of a rule is of more importance than the reason on which it is founded." The rule having been settled (though in my judgment, not correctly), having been acted upon for a considerable time, I think it should be adhered to until the question is again presented to the court by legislative action or constitutional amendment. Instability in the decisions of a court of last resort with respect to property rights not only leads to an increase of speculative litigation, instituted for the purpose of testing the sentiment of the court as constituted at the time, but directly invites persons and corporations interested in the determination of such questions to undue and improper interference in the selection of judges. In my judgment, the evils to result from the continuance of the incorrect rule are less than those which will result inevitably from the alteration of the rule by a divided court. These views, which I have stated without elaboration or argument, are sustained by the reasoning of the supreme court in Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 213, 216, 17 L. ed. 528, 529; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 299, 300, 8 L. ed. 406; Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 432, 14 L. ed. 1003. For these reasons, to the extent that the opinion disturbs rights adjudged by the former opinion to exist, I do not concur in the opinion of the court.

Extension of opinion (Filed March 25, 1897):

The banks are not required to pay tax on the money deposited with them by their customers, or on amounts which represent it. Owing to the particular character of the business which they conduct they are quasi trustees of their depositors, and under the law the depositors are required to pay the tax on the money so deposited. The banks should be required to pay tax on the shares of capital stock, on their surplus funds, undivided profits, franchises, and their real estate.

Petition for rehearing overruled June 19, 1897.

The decision in these cases was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States April 3, 1899.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Louisiana

v.

Solini HAINES, Appt.

(51 La. Ann. 731.)

*1. The husband of a woman cannot himself be guilty of an actual rape upon his wife, on account of the matrimonial consent, which she has given, and which she cannot retract.

2. To hold a husband charged with rape upon a woman who is his wife, or to convict him, it must appear that the carnal knowledge of the woman constituting the rape was accomplished through a man other than the husband, and that the husband procured it to be done, or assisted the other in the execution of their common purpose.

3. But where the "other man" in the case, demanding a severance, is tried first, and acquitted, the prosecution against the husband fails, since he cannot be guilty of raping his own wife.

*Headnotes by BLANCHARD, J.

NOTE.—As to the legal rule respecting the capacity of a boy to commit crimes of this character, see note to State v. Yeagan (N. C.) 36 L. R. A. 106; and Foster v. Com. (Va.) 42 L. R. A. 589.
44 L. R. A.

4. The "face of the record" in matters pertaining to motions in arrest of judgment does not mean merely the face of the indictment. It embraces the record of the case as made up to that point.

5. To have a mere note entered on the record, "Bill of exceptions reserved," is, in a criminal case, no bill whatever. And it is not good practice, and not warranted by law, for the clerk only to sign papers drawn as bills of exception. Act No. 113 of 1806 does not authorize it. Bills of exception in criminal trials should be signed by the trial judge.

(March 20, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the 19th Judicial District Court, Parish of St. Martin, convicting him of rape. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. E. Mouton and Martin & Voorhies, for appellant:

The husband cannot commit the crime of rape on the person of his wife.

2 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. fol. 158.

The trial and acquittal of the principal necessitates the release of the accessory before the fact.

Bowen v. State, 25 Fla. 645; Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214.

A party cannot be held for procuring an act to be done, unless it were in fact done. 1 Bishop, § 671.

A person indicted alone for the commission of a crime cannot be convicted as an aider and abettor.

Mulligan v. Com. 84 Ky. 229.

Messrs. M. J. Cunningham, Attorney General, and James Simon, for appellee:

No evidence can be introduced to prove facts alleged in a motion in arrest of judgment.

State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. Ann. 523; State v. Harris, 3 La. Ann. 91; State v. Nolan, 8 Rob. (La.) 513; State v. Arthur, 10 La. Ann. 265.

Such motions can be based only on errors patent upon the face of the record.

State v. Hardin, 25 La. Ann. 370; State v. Washington, 28 La. Ann. 129; State v. Addison, 15 La. Ann. 185.

Where two parties are charged as principals in the same indictment, the acquittal of one tried separately on his own motion for severance, granted by the court, does not acquit the other, or furnish any reason why he may not be subsequently tried and convicted of the same offense.

One not technically capable of rape may become guilty by aiding and abetting another who is.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 948, par. III.; People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280.

In such a case the husband is guilty of the offense, and if he is guilty he should be punished, even if the party acting with him in the perpetration of the offense should escape.

Blanchard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This man was indicted for rape. The woman was his wife. That he is guilty of a heinous offense against her a jury of his countrymen have so said. They called it rape, qualifying their verdict, however, so as to "save his neck." From a sentence by the court to imprisonment for life he appeals. The question presented is unique and novel. Can a husband commit rape upon a woman who is his wife? That he can procure the commission of the crime upon her, or aid and abet its being done, and thus, under our law and criminal practice, make himself liable as principal along with the actual perpetrator, is clear. But in this case the actual perpetrator—the one who in and by his own person had carnal knowledge of the woman, who performed the act of sexual intercourse, and who was named and identified by the prosecutrix as having performed it—was acquitted. Solini Haines, present accused, and Desire O. Thibodeaux, were jointly indicted for rape upon the person of Rose Moreaux. They were properly charged as principals. State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. Ann. 522. Thibodeaux demanded a severance, which was granted, and being tried first, was found not guilty. The indictment did not aver the woman to be the wife of Haines, but proof of this fact abundantly appeared in the preliminary proceedings leading up to the trial, and at the trial itself. The acquittal of Thibodeaux left 44 L. R. A.

Haines, the husband, alone charged with the crime of rape, and he was convicted. After acquittal of the man who actually violated the person of the woman, the husband being present, aiding and abetting, is there any longer a basis, a predicate, a foundation, upon which to rest the prosecution of the husband? This is the question in the case.

While the husband is indicted as a principal, he could be guilty of the crime of rape, in so far as his wife is concerned, only on the supposition and proof that he procured the offense to be committed upon her by another, or aided or abetted that other in so doing; for, if he were the one who forcibly and against her consent performed the sexual act upon her, there was, and could be, no rape. This is so because the husband of a woman cannot himself be guilty of an actual rape upon his wife, on account of the matrimonial consent which she has given, and which she cannot retract. 2 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. 158. Therefore, while this husband is charged with rape on a woman who is his wife, to hold him, or convict him, it must appear that the carnal knowledge of the woman, or act of intercourse with her, was accomplished through a man other than the husband, and that the husband procured it to be done, or assisted the other in the execution of their common purpose. Thibodeaux was "the other man" in this case. There is no pretense that any other than he and Haines are implicated. The woman charges no one else. The act was done at Thibodeaux's house. She was well acquainted with Thibodeaux. She was kept, against her will, at his house all the day following the night on which the deed was committed, and then driven by him in a buggy to her father's house, where she made her home. There is thus no question of his identification as the man who was with her husband when the rape was accomplished. The woman's testimony was that the husband held her down by the throat while Thibodeaux performed the sexual act. The husband, then, to be guilty of this charge of rape must necessarily have been the aider and abettor of another. The real principal in a case of this sort is the man who actually performed the act constituting rape, who had carnal knowledge by and through his person with the person of the woman. The husband could not be this actor, for sexual intercourse by him with his wife, even effected by violence and against her consent, would not, in law, be rape. Not being the principal in this sense, but being present, aiding and abetting, he must be viewed as an accomplice in the crime of another man.

Our law declares that all parties present aiding and abetting in the commission of a felony may be indicted, convicted, and punished as principals. But, while this is so, the common-law distinction is not to be lost sight of. This distinction at common law found expression in degrees of guilt. "A principal in the first degree," says Blackstone (Com. bk. 4, p. 34), "is the actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime; and, in the second degree, is he who is present, aiding and abetting the fact to be done." Our law has done away with this distinction so far as charging the crime and punishing it, but the reason upon which it rests remains and must be applied in a case like the instant one. To make a man a principal in the second degree, there must be a principal in the first degree; that is to say, there must be one who does the act or thing without which there is no crime, and with respect to the doing of which the other, or principal in the second degree, was present, aiding and abetting. If there be no principal in the first degree, no one who does the act or thing constituting the crime, there can, of course, be no principal in the second degree. The principal in the first degree is the one who actually commits the criminal act. By his act he is guilty, without reference to the act of the other, or principal in the second degree; but the latter cannot be guilty of crime unless the former actually perpetrates the act. One cannot be guilty of aiding and abetting the perpetrator of a crime without its first being shown that the crime has been actually committed by another. Mulligan v. Com. 84 Ky. 232; Bowen v. State, 25 Fla. 645; State v. Antoine, 42 La. Ann. 945. If Thibodeaux performed the act which constituted rape upon the person of the wife of Haines, and the latter was present, aiding and abetting, both are guilty as principals of the crime. But if Thibodeaux, on that occasion, which is the only one charged, did not do the act, then it was not done, and Haines cannot be convicted. It is true it is for the jury alone to determine whether or not the act was done, and by their verdict on the trial of Haines they said it had been done. By whom? Not by Thibodeaux, for, on the previous trial, the jury said he did not do it; that Rose Moreaux was not raped at the time laid in the indictment by him. If Thibodeaux did not do it, and the husband did, the conviction of the latter is faulty, for the husband cannot, per se, be guilty of raping his wife.

The case stands thus: (1) Thibodeaux exonerated from the charge by the verdict of not guilty as to him; (2) Haines declared, by the verdict of guilty as to him, to have committed the crime of rape upon Rose Moreaux; (3) Rose Moreaux was, at the time of the act, the wife of Haines. We are constrained to hold that this conviction cannot stand. The case as to Haines fell with the acquittal of Thibodeaux. It would be different if Haines had forced Thibodeaux by threats and violence, against his will and consent, to have sexual intercourse with the wife, who, herself, through menace and coercion exerted on the part of the husband, had been forced to yield. In such case the husband alone might well be found guilty of the crime, and his unwilling instrument of its accomplishment acquitted. But the case at bar is altogether different. Everything negatives any suggestion that the jury acquitted Thibodeaux on such ground. It is not pretended that they did.

44 L. R. A.

The motion in arrest of judgment should have been sustained. By the bill of exceptions taken to the contrary ruling, the question herein discussed was properly brought before us. From the record of the case as then made up, from the proceedings of the trial up to that point, appeared the defect, the error, the inherent weakness, the intrinsic cause which vitiated the verdict and arrested judgment upon the same. The point made by the state, that the ruling of the trial judge on the motion in arrest of judgment cannot be reversed, because such motion was not based upon errors patent upon the face of the record, is not considered well taken. The "face of the record" does not mean merely the face of the indictment. It embraces the record of the case as made up to that point. "A motion in arrest of judgment is not limited to the indictment, but may be made where there is error in any other part of the record." Knobloch, Crim. Dig. pp. 42, 43, citing 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1285, and Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 759.

We find in this transcript what purport to be bills of exception reserved by defendant to other rulings of the court. One of them is a mere note, made by the clerk, as follows: "Bill of exception reserved," and found at the close of the judge's ruling denying a motion to quash. Two others are drawn in the proper form of bills of exception, but signed only by the clerk. We take this occasion to say that this is not good practice, and not warranted by the law. There is no sanction for it in act No. 113 of the Acts of 1896. Bills of exception taken on the trial of criminal causes should be regularly drawn, and either state the facts, or have annexed to them the statement of facts taken down by the clerk pursuant to act No. 113 of 1896, and should in all cases be signed by the judge, and filed by the clerk. The bill taken to the ruling of the judge denying the motion in arrest of judgment is the only one in this record that comes up in proper shape. It was signed by the judge.

For the reasons assigned, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the verdict of the jury herein be set aside, the judgment and sentence based thereon annulled and avoided, and that the accused be discharged from custody.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

George B. VAN NORMAN, Appt.,
v.

Gustavus E. GORDON.

(172 Mass. 576.)

1. It will be presumed that a court of record in another state which entered judgment upon a warrant of attorney had jurisdiction to do so, and that its proceedings were regular.
2. A judgment by confession entered in another state in conformity to the terms of a warrant of attorney executed in that state by a person who was at the time a resident thereof must be given full faith and credit as a judgment rendered by consent, although it was rendered without any personal service on the defendant.

(March 2, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce a judgment entered in another state under a warrant of attorney. Reversed.

Defendant while a resident of the state of Wisconsin made a promissory note payable to plaintiff in that state and executed a power of attorney to confess judgment on said note as follows: "Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, I do hereby make, constitute, and appoint E. H. Bottum, Esq., or any attorney of any court of record, to be my true and lawful attorney irrevocably, for me and in my name, place, and stead to enter my appearance before any court of record, in term time or in vacation, in any of the states or territories of the United States, or any time after said note becomes due to waive the service of process and confess a judgment in favor of said George B. Van Norman or his assigns, upon said note, for the above sum, or for as much as shall appear due, according to the tenor and effect of said note, and interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum to the day of the entry of said judgment, together with costs, and also to file a cognovit for the amount that may be so due, and to release all errors that may intervene in entering up said judgment, or in issuing the execution thereon, hereby ratifying and confirming all which my said attorney may do by virtue hereof."

Plaintiff brought suit on said note in a court of record in Wisconsin, and by virtue of said power of attorney, Ogden & Hunter, attorneys of the court, entered appearance for the defendant, and confessed judgment according to the term of the power of attorney. The present suit is founded on said judgment. From an agreed statement of facts it appeared that no personal service was made on defendant in the suit in which the judgment was entered. That he never directly authorized the attorneys to appear for him any further than they may have been authorized to do by the warrant of attorney. Upon these facts the court found for the defendant.

The case further appears in the opinion.

Mr. Charles H. Sprague, for appellant:

In the case at bar the judgment was confessed in a court of the state in which the power of attorney was executed. Such a judgment is valid and binding and will support an action in any other state.

First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich.

515, 33 L. R. A. 83; Teel v. Yost, 128 N. Y.

387, 13 L. R. A. 796.

Mr. George B. Upham for appellee.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is whether the judgment which the plaintiff seeks to enforce is entitled to full faith and credit. The answer depends on whether the court which rendered it had jurisdiction to render such a judgment. Virginia Bd. of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 521, 21 L. ed. 687. If it had, then the fact that it is a judgment by confession under a warrant of attorney is immaterial. Such judgments, when rendered by courts having jurisdiction of the cause and the parties, have all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of other judgments. Teel v. Yost, 128 N. Y. 387, 13 L. R. A. 796. See Henry v. Estes, 127 Mass. 474.

It does not appear from the facts that are agreed whether the laws of Wisconsin in force at the time authorized the entry of judgments pursuant to powers of attorney to confess judgment, or, if so, under what circumstances, or whether the court which rendered the judgment was a court of record or of general jurisdiction, or, if that is material, whether the defendant was a resident of Wisconsin when the judgment was rendered and the proceedings were instituted. No objection has been made, however, in respect to these matters, and the copy of the record which has been submitted to us shows that the court was a county court, with a clerk and seal, and was therefore a court of record, and may be presumed to have been a court of general jurisdiction. Knapp v. Abell, 10 Allen, 485, 487; Pringle v. Woolworth, 90 N. Y. 502. And in view of the further considerations that every presumption is to be made in favor of the regularity of the proceedings, that it is not now contended that the court had not jurisdiction to enter judgment pursuant to a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and that such proceedings are well known at common law and in many states, we think that it may also be presumed that the court had jurisdiction to enter judgment upon a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and that the proceedings were regular and according to the laws of Wisconsin. McMahon v. Eagle Life Asso. 169 Mass. 539, and cases cited; Wright v. Andrews, 130 Mass. 149; Stock-

NOTE.—For judgments confessed on warrants of attorney, see also Teel v. Yost (N. Y.) 128 L. R. A. 796, and note; also First Nat. Bank v. Garland (Mich.) 33 L. R. A. 83.
44 L. R. A.

well v. McCracken, 109 Mass. 84; Bissell v. Wheelock, 11 Cush. 277; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350, 21 L. ed. 959.

The attorneys who appeared and acted for the defendant never were authorized to appear for him, and confess judgment, except as they were authorized to do so by the warrant of attorney. It is agreed that they were attorneys of a court of record; in Wisconsin we assume. We assume also that they were requested to appear by the attorney named in the warrant or his firm, and that their appearance was really in the plaintiff's interest. That naturally would be so, and must have been expected when the power of attorney was given. There is no charge of fraud, or that judgment was entered for more than was due, or before the note was due, which would have been contrary to the power of attorney. The record shows that judgment was not entered till seventeen or eighteen months after the note was due. The note and warrant of attorney were both signed in Wisconsin, where the defendant, and, as we infer, the plaintiff, resided at the time; and the note was payable in Wisconsin, where the plaintiff has his place of business, if not his home.

What was done in confessing judgment came within the terms of the warrant of attorney. Unless, therefore, the warrant of attorney purported to give an authority which it did not, or was for some reason invalid, we see no ground on which the judgment can be called in question. Assuming that we could refuse full faith to the judgment if we thought that there was an error of law in it (see contra, Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. ed. 525; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 35 L. ed. 640; Richards v. Barlow, 140 Mass. 218), we find nothing which would justify such a conclusion. The warrant well might be held valid in Wisconsin, though adjudged invalid in another state. According to Mr. Dicey and Mr. Freeman, however, a warrant of attorney may be so drawn as to authorize a confession of judgment in a foreign state. Dicey, Confl. Laws, 377; Freeman, Judgm. § 545. Lord Blackburn went so far in one case as to suggest that "if at the time when the obligation was contracted the defendants were within the foreign country, but left it before the suit was instituted, we should be inclined to think the laws of that country bound them." Schibbsby v. Westenholz, L. R. 6 Q. B. 155, 161. He was overruled, however, in Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote [1894]; A. C. 670, 685, 686. In Richards v. Barlow, 140 Mass. 218, no objection seems to have been taken because the warrant authorized an appearance "by any attorney of any court of record." See also First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515, 33 L. R. A. 83; Teel v. Yost, 128 N. Y. 387, 13 L. R. A. 796. And in Pirie v. H. Stern, Jr., & Bro. Co. 97 Wis. 150, it was held that a power authorizing a confession of judgment "in any court of record" could be executed in any state in the Union; disapproving, as does also the court in Michigan in First Nat. Bank v. Garland, 109 Mich. 515, 33 L. R. A. 83, of the cases in Ohio and Tennessee on which the defendant relies. In Blanck v. Medley, 63 Ill. App. 211, it was held that a warrant of attorney authorizing "any attorney of any court of record" to confess judgment could be executed by an attorney in partnership with the attorney who signed the declaration for the holder of the note. See also Mikeska v. Blum, 63 Tex. 44.

We think, therefore, that the judgment must be regarded as rendered by consent of the defendant; that it was such a judgment as the court which rendered it had jurisdiction to render; and that it is entitled to full faith and credit.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

LAMB KNIT-GOODS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
LAMB GLOVE AND MITTEN COMPANY et al.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A man who, as agent for a corporation using his name, has negotiated a sale of the property, business, and goodwill of the company, is estopped from asserting that the name is not rightfully used by the purchaser.
2. The name "Lamb Glove & Mitten Company," or any name in which the word "Lamb" occurs, when used in connection with the business of manufacturing gloves and mittens by what is known as the Lamb stitch, cannot lawfully be used, even by the man named Lamb who invented the stitch, when he has transferred his right in a similar business previously carried on to a corporation named "Lamb Knitting Goods Company," which conducts such business in another town in the same state.

(May 9, 1899.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court of Shiawassee County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to enjoin defendants from using the word "Lamb" in their corporate name. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh P. Stewart, with Mr. Fred L. Chappell, for appellant:

The defendant company should be restrained from further use of the name as a corporate name, by the injunction of this court.

NOTE.—As to the right to use one's own name when claimed by another person as a tradename, see also Gato v. El Modelo Cigar Mfg. Co. (Fla.) 6 L. R. A. 823; Vonderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462, and note; Fish 44 L. R. A.

Bron. Wagon Co. v. Fish (Wis.) 16 L. R. A. 453; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 42; and Bingham School v. Gray (N. C.) 41 L. R. A. 248.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 699; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42; Morse Twist Drill & Mach. Co. v. Morse, 103 Mass. 73, 4 Am. Rep. 513; Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co. 54 Mich. 215, 52 Am. Rep. 811.

The defendants should be restrained from using the name or word "Lamb" in advertising knit goods, in marking the same, or in referring to the same.

Le Page Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 3 U. S. App. 112, 51 Fed. Rep. 941, 2 C. C. A. 555, 17 L. R. A. 354; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42; Morse Twist Drill & Mach. Co. v. Morse, 103 Mass. 73, 4 Am. Rep. 513; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490; Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co. 54 Mich. 215, 52 Am. Rep. 811; Clark Thread Co. v. Armitage, 67 Fed. Rep. 896; Thorley Cattle Food Co. v. Masson, Cox, Manual Trademark Cases, No. 668; Reddaway v. Banham [1896] A. C. 214; Raymond v. Royal Baking Powder Co. 35 U. S. App. 575, 85 Fed. Rep. 231, 29 C. C. A. 245; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. 163 U. S. 169, 41 L. ed. 118.

A corporation choosing a name has an infinite variety of names and combinations of names from which to choose, and there is not the slightest excuse for one corporation adopting a name that has for its prominent feature the same name which is prominent in the name of another company.

Clark Thread Co. v. Armitage, 67 Fed. Rep. 896.

Defendants should adopt a name wherein they would not be required to take pains to distinguish it from the complainant company; and the fact that they have adopted a name requiring explanations is one of the things the complainant complains of.

Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. 24 U. S. App. 395, 64 Fed. Rep. 841, 12 C. C. A. 432.

Numerous cases are on record in which parties have been restrained in the use of their own name even, where they used it fraudulently.

William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & S. Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495; Morgan v. Rogers, 19 Fed. Rep. 596; Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. 24 U. S. App. 395, 64 Fed. Rep. 841, 12 C. C. A. 432; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. R. W. Rogers Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 56; Walter Baker & Co. v. Baker, 77 Fed. Rep. 181; Walter Baker & Co. v. Baker, 87 Fed. Rep. 209; Allegretti Chocolate Cream Co. v. Keller, 85 Fed. Rep. 643; Landreth v. Landreth, 22 Fed. Rep. 41.

The use of any other name with fraudulent intent should be restrained.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. 163 U. S. 169, 41 L. ed. 118.

The mere shape of the package, other things being similar, should be restrained.

Cook & B. Co. v. Ross, 73 Fed. Rep. 203;

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 699, p. 1013; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 44 L. R. A.

37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 260.

Messrs. Oakill & Lauch, for appellees:

While it is true that a man may part with the right to use his own name in connection with a business, such right can only be parted with by express agreement; nor does a man part with his right to engage in business under his own name by the sale of a former business, together with the goodwill of the business.

Churton v. Douglas, Johns. V. C. (Eng.) 174; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 492, 14 L. R. A. 161; Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490; Grow v. Seligman, 47 Mich. 607, 41 Am. Rep. 737; Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co. 54 Mich. 215, 52 Am. Rep. 811.

The transfer of a business, including its goodwill, from one concern to another, where it does not expressly include a sale of the name and contain a covenant against going into the same business elsewhere, will not of itself be construed to prevent the seller from engaging in a similar business elsewhere, if he does so without attempting to mislead and deceive the public.

Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 14 L. R. A. 161, and cases cited at pp. 490-493; Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Improved Order K. of P. 113 Mich. 133, 38 L. R. A. 658; Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Hazelton Tripod Boiler Co. 142 Ill. 494; Duryea v. National Starch Mfg. Co. 45 U. S. App. 649, 79 Fed. Rep. 661, 25 C. C. A. 139; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. LaBelle Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 16 L. R. A. 453; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. 163 U. S. 169, 41 L. ed. 118.

Defendants are not responsible for blunders made by the business community in not distinguishing between the two concerns.

Turton v. Turton, L. R. 42 Ch. Div. 128; Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Improved Order K. of P. 113 Mich. 133, 38 L. R. A. 658.

The term "Lamb Knit" is descriptive and generic, and is not capable of being appropriated as property.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 289, 295; Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535; Corbin v. Gould, 133 U. S. 308, 33 L. ed. 611; Ball v. Siegel, 116 Ill. 137.

A trademark is the name, symbol, figure, letter, form, or device adopted and used by manufacturer or merchant to designate the goods that he manufactures or sells, and to distinguish them from those manufactured or sold by another, to the end that they may be known in the market as his, and must be purely arbitrary.

6 Wait, Act. & Def. 21 et seq.; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 60, 25 L. ed. 996; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 254, 24 L. ed. 832; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 241.

The purpose of a trademark is (1) to protect the party using it from competition;

(2) to protect the public from imposition. 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 241, note 1, and p. 340.

The right to the trademark is, in the bill, based upon the alleged fact that it uses a peculiar stitch in the manufacture of its goods, which it says have come to be known as "Lamb Knit" because of such stitch. The words, then, are not arbitrary, but descriptive, and relate to the method of manufacture, and no trademark can be secured in such words.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 295.

A trademark must be adopted and applied by the manufacturer or merchant to his goods, with his name and address, and the goods sold in the open market.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 348 et seq.; Candee v. Deere, 54 Ill. 439, 5 Am. Rep. 125; Kohler Mfg. Co. v. Beshore, 53 Fed. Rep. 262.

The trademark must be affixed to the goods themselves. The use of the mark on advertising matter alone does not create a right.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 358, and cases cited; Browne, Trademarks, §§ 91, 305.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant avers by its bill of complaint that it is a corporation, with its home offices at Colon, Michigan; that, prior to its organization, the defendant Isaac W. Lamb had organized a company at Concord, Michigan, known as the "Lamb Knitting Company," and that at the time of complainant's organization it acquired all of the property, business, and goodwill of the Lamb Knitting Company from Isaac W. Lamb, and paid a valuable consideration therefor; that, at the time of the organization of the complainant, Isaac W. Lamb was interested in the organization of the company and raised a large amount of the capital stock; that the complainant assumed the name of the "Lamb Knitting-Goods Company," with the knowledge and consent and at the desire of Isaac W. Lamb; that the complainant was organized to conduct a business similar to that which had been previously conducted by the Lamb Knitting Company, which was the manufacture and sale of knitted goods, principally gloves and mittens; that these gloves and mittens had in the main been knitted with a peculiar stitch, and that from the connection of complainant's name with said goods the peculiar stitch had become known as the "Lamb Stitch;" that gloves and mittens may be manufactured by the same machine with a different stitch, which will be equal to the complainant's in durability; that the stitch used by the complainant is for the purpose of distinguishing complainant's goods; that, after the organization of complainant, Isaac W. Lamb was in its employ for a number of years as superintendent, but that he had become dissatisfied, and left complainant's employ on the 8th of April, 1892; that thereafter he, with the assistance of others, organized a company known as the "Lamb Glove & Mitten Company," at Perry, Michigan, and commenced to manufacture gloves and mittens knitted with the same peculiar stitch as that employed by the complainant; that the name adopted by the defendant company is similar to that adopted by the complainant, and that purchasers and dealers are deceived thereby, and buy the goods of the defendant believing them to be the goods of the complainant; that the business of the complainant has been damaged thereby. Complainant avers that it is entitled to the exclusive use of the word "Lamb" in connection with knit goods of any description, and to the word "Lamb" in its corporate name; that it has the exclusive right to use the peculiar stitch; and that for this reason the words "Lamb Knit" have become and are a valid trademark at common law. The bill prays an accounting and an injunction.

The answer admits that the complainant assumed the name of the "Lamb Knit-Goods Company," with the knowledge and consent of Isaac W. Lamb, but denies that the complainant is entitled to the exclusive use of the words "Lamb Knit" goods, or the use of the word "Lamb" in connection with other words indicating knitted goods. The answer also admits that the complainant acquired all the property, business, and goodwill of the Lamb Knitting Company, but avers that Lamb acted in the transaction, not for himself, but as agent for the Lamb Knitting Company. The answer also admits that the defendant corporation organized with, and is conducting a business under, the name of the "Lamb Glove & Mitten Company," but denies the allegation that this name is so similar to complainant's as to mislead purchasers and dealers. The answer further avers that the peculiar stitch adopted by complainant has been in common use for many years; that the defendant Lamb was the inventor of a knitting machine upon which this stitch was made, and that he sold the rights, under patents granted to him, to the Lamb Knitting-Machine Company of Rochester, New York, and the Lamb Knitting Machine Company of Springfield, Massachusetts, which companies consolidated under the name of the "Lamb Knitting-Machine Company of Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts," and that this last-named corporation is still doing business under the name of the "Lamb Manufacturing Company," and is manufacturing Lambknitting machines; that in 1868 defendant Lamb invented a machine for knitting many kinds of knit goods, and procured a patent thereon, and afterwards procured patents on various improvements; that in 1885 he issued printed directions for using the "New Lamb Knitter," manufactured by the New Lamb Knitting Company of Jackson, Michigan; that a large number of persons purchased these machines; that a large number of the persons and corporations which use these machines advertise such goods as made by the Lambknitters, and that the name of "Lamb" as applied to knitting machines, and the terms "Lamb Knit" and "Lamb Goods," have been in common use in this country, by a large number of different persons, firms, and corporations, for more than twenty years. The case was heard on pleadings and proofs, and the bill dismissed. Complainant appeals.

We are well satisfied that the complainant has not established its right to the exclusive use of the term "Lamb Knit." The testimony shows that goods manufactured on the Lamb machine were in common use many years before the organization of complainant company, and that to distinguish such goods from goods knitted on other machines they were designated as "Lamb Goods," "Lamb Machine Goods," or "Lamb Knit Goods." It also appears that the peculiar stitch which complainant claims the exclusive right to was in common use before complainant adopted it.

The case narrows down to the single question whether the defendant infringed the rights of complainant by the use of a corporate name so similar to that of complainant as to mislead the public, and, if so, what remedy ought to be applied. There can be no doubt that by the transfer to the complainant of the goodwill of the Lamb Knitting Company it was the intention of the defendant Lamb to grant the right to use his name in connection with the complainant's business. In fact, he assisted in organizing the corporation, and became a stockholder in the complainant company. The statute (How. Anno. Stat. § 4161) authorizes the formation of a corporation, and provides that no two companies shall use the same name or a name so similar as to be liable to mislead. It is contended that the defendant Lamb has entered into no express agreement not to use his own name, and that Mr. Lamb, in making a sale of the Lamb Knitting Company to the complainant, was acting on behalf of the Concord company, and that the Concord company could not, and Mr. Lamb did not, sell the exclusive right to use Mr. Lamb's name, nor undertake that he would not engage in any similar business elsewhere. It appears, however, that the proposition to the promoters of complainant came from Mr. Lamb, and, as before stated, he is estopped from asserting that the company did not take its name rightfully. Reference is made to the case of Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 14 L. R. A. 161. That case, however, recognizes a distinction between a corporate name and that of a partnership. In the majority opinion it is said: "A corporate name is regarded in the nature of a trademark, even though composed of individual names, and its simulation may be restrained. After adoption it follows the corporation." Reference is also made to Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Improved Order K. of P. 113 Mich. 133, 38 L. R. A. 658. In the latter case there was no evidence that any person had been misled, and, while the case is near the line, the court held that the rights of complainant had not been infringed. In the present case the testimony shows that dealers have been misled, and in view of the fact that the complainant's business is largely the manufacture of gloves and mittens, and that the name "Lamb" is prominent in the corporate name, we think it is likely to mislead. The case is very similar to Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42. In that case the plaintiff's name did not describe its business. The business was, in fact, the manufacture and sale of soap. The court restrained the defendant from carrying on the business in the name of the Higgins Soap Company. The court held that, even if the name was assumed in good faith, without design to mislead the public and acquire the plaintiff's trade, the defendant, knowing of 44 L. R. A.

the fact, must be held to the same responsibility. See also Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Myers v. Kalamazoo Buggy Co. 54 Mich. 215, 52 Am. Rep. 811; Frazer v. Frazer Lubricator Co. 121 Ill. 147; Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. 24 U. S. App. 395, 64 Fed. Rep. 841, 2 C. C. A. 432; Walter Baker & Co. v. Baker, 57 Fed. Rep. 209. It is true that the business office of defendant is not located in the same village as that of complainant, but it appears that the business has been conducted through agents largely, and that the public have in numerous instances been deceived. We think the case falls within the class in which protection should be afforded.

The decree will be reversed, and a decree entered restraining the defendant from continuing the use of the corporate name "Lamb Glove & Mitten Company," or any name in which the word "Lamb" appears, in connection with other words indicating a business similar to that of complainant. Subject to this restriction, defendant is at liberty to advertise its goods as made on the Lamb knitting machine.

The other Justices concur.

Clarence CONELY et al.
v.

Charles P. COLLINS et al., Pliffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. An agent to whom are intrusted the entire management and control of a corporation whose stockholders hold no meetings has power to make an assignment of its property for its creditors.
2. A conveyance of property of a corporation in trust to be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of indebtedness, also authorizing the trustees to collect accounts and use the proceeds in payment of debts, but providing that any surplus should be returned to the corporation or its assigns, is an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and not a mere mortgage.

(March 14, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to obtain possession of certain lumber which had been taken by defendants under a writ of attachment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Keena & Lightner, for plaintiffs in error:

There is no implied authority in the superintendent of a corporation to make an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

Kalamazoo Novelty Mfg. Co. v. McAlister, 36 Mich. 327; New York Iron Mine v. First Nat. Bank, 39 Mich. 644; McCullough v. Moss, 5 Denio, 567; Murray v. East India

NOTE.—On the question whether a preference by mortgage or sale is an assignment for creditors, see note to Tittle v. Vanleer (Tex.) 37 L. R. A. 337.

Co. 5 Barn. & Ald. 204; Benedict v. Lansing, 5 Denio, 283; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 666, 19 L. ed. 169; Doyle v. Misner, 42 Mich. 341; Delta Lumber Co. v. Williams, 73 Mich. 86; Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Cambria Mfg. Co. 80 Mich. 495; Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 293; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 23; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott Co. 96 Ala. 440.

Even if Hathaway did have authority to execute the paper, it is void as violating How. Stat. § 8184, as to trusts, and § 8739 as to voluntary assignments.

The deed is a trust deed.

An assignment which conveys practically all of the property of a debtor for the benefit of creditors is a general assignment within the meaning of How. Stat. § 8739.

Pettibone v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 85; Du Bose v. Carlisle, 51 Ala. 592; Bishop v. Catlin, 23 Vt. 71; Krug v. McOilliard, 76 Ind. 28.

The preference of the Bay City Manufacturing Company would be enough to vitiate the entire assignment, but the additional direction that the accounts attached are to be paid in the order named makes it still further illegal.

Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; Pettibone v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 85; Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329; Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387; Burnham v. Haskins, 79 Mich. 35.

The trust bill of sale is void under How. Stat. § 6203, as being made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, and on this the jury should have been allowed to pass.

Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553; Whitaker Iron Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 101 Mich. 146.

Plaintiffs cannot recover because the deed from Lynch to Conely & Co. was void as to creditors, since Conely & Co. were aware that the value of the lumber they took was largely in excess of the amount of the indebtedness of the company to them.

Gumberg v. Treusch, 110 Mich. 451; Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89; Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 428.

Mr. John D. Conely, with Messrs. Haug, Yerkes, & Duffie, for defendants in error:

The difference between a chattel mortgage and a common-law assignment is that one is a conditional transfer of property and the other is an absolute transfer.

Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 340.

The absolute title to the property did not pass to Lynch.

An assignment by a debtor to his creditor of personal property upon trust to sell and pay his debt with reservation to himself of the surplus if any there be, is held to be in effect a mortgage.

Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 338; Jones, Chatt. Mortg. § 352.

The fact that a chattel mortgage is made to a trustee makes no difference.

Bagg v. Jerome, 7 Mich. 145; Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 136; Walker v. White, 60 Mich. 429; Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97; 44 L. R. A.

Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329; Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193.

The instrument must be read as a whole, and the intent gathered from its entire contents.

Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 335; Morran v. Moore, 113 Mich. 101; Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 613.

The deed was to hinder and delay creditors; this alone would not make it void.

Olmstead v. Mattison, 45 Mich. 617; Jordan v. White, 38 Mich. 253.

Whenever a corporation permits the superintendent to have such powers as the one in this case exercised a mortgage given by him on the assets of the corporation to secure creditors, and other contracts, are valid.

Preston Nat. Bank v. George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co. 84 Mich. 364; Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co. 101 Mich. 27; Sarmiento v. Davis Boat & Oar Co. 105 Mich. 302; Poole v. West Point Butter & Cheese Asso. 30 Fed. Rep. 513.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action of replevin was brought in the Wayne circuit court, and about $300 worth of lumber was taken under the writ. Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment by direction of the court. Defendants bring error.

It appears that in 1894, one Gilbert Hathaway executed in behalf of the Mascotte Lumber Company a conveyance of that company's stock in trade, consisting mostly of lumber, to Thomas H. Lynch, upon certain conditions, therein named, which will be spoken of more at large, and which conveyance empowered Lynch to sell the property and pay certain debts, according to a schedule attached. After Lynch had paid part of these debts, he sold the entire remaining stock, except a portion that was claimed by Salliot & Ferguson, to the plaintiffs. Under this sale an indebtedness due to the plaintiffs was canceled, and their note given for the balance. Very shortly after, the defendants in this suit attached the stock thus transferred to the plaintiffs, and took it into possession. Thereupon this suit in replevin was brought, and the property taken by plaintiffs.

1. It was contended by the defendants below, and is contended here, that the conveyance executed by Hathaway was illegal, and transferred nothing, for the reason that Hathaway, as shown by the evidence in the case, had no authority to execute it. The court below, in passing upon this question, said: "To determine what Hathaway's authority was, you should look rather at what he did by the assent of the stockholders, than by what he called himself." It appears that the stockholders of the Mascotte Lumber Company were Sarah V. Bishop, Susan Sage, Carrie F. Schnoor, and John C. Hartz. Sarah V. Bishop was Hathaway's aunt, Susan Sage his grandmother, and Carrie F. Schnoor became his wife. John C. Hartz was second cousin to Carrie F. Schnoor. No meetings of the stockholders of the company were held, and apparently the business was left with Hathaway to manage and control. None of the stockholders did anything concerning the management of the business. Hathaway employed Lynch to assist him, and exercised all the power of management of the business in every particular, and presumably so by the consent of the stockholders. He continued to exercise such authority up to the time the transfer was made, June 24, 1894. He had as much power in the management of the affairs of the company as had George T. Smith in the case of Preston Nat. Bank v. George T. Smith Middlings Purifier Co. 84 Mich. 364; and in that case it was held that Smith had the power to execute the mortgage on the assets of the company. This case was followed and approved in Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. B. R. Co. 101 Mich. 14. The court below was not in error in holding that Hathaway had power to execute the conveyance.

2. It is claimed that the conveyance was void under the provisions of §§ 6184 and 8739, How. Anno. Stat., or at least that the question should have been left to the jury to determine whether it was made for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, and therefore void under the terms of § 6203, How. Anno. Stat. The claim is that the conveyance was a voluntary assignment, and that, as it prefers certain of the creditors it is therefore void as to creditors. We think this contention is correct, and that the court was in error in holding it to be a mere chattel mortgage. The conveyance transfers all the property of the Mascotte Lumber Company to Lynch in trust; he to sell the same, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the indebtedness. He is given power to collect accounts due the company, and use the same in the payment of the debts, the West Bay City Manufacturing Company to be paid first. The trustee is to pay himself $50 per month after the unsecured debts are paid; surplus money or property in his hands to be turned back to the Mascotte Lumber Company or its assigns. In all essential particulars, the conveyance is in the exact form of an assignment for the benefit of creditors. It is therefore void, as it makes preferences. The case falls within Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; Burnham v. Haskins, 79 Mich. 35; Pettibone v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 85; Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387. The learned court below was of the opinion that the case is ruled by the case of Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 612. There the conveyances were worded as mortgages, and authorized the mortgagee to take possession upon default. They were held not to make an absolute title in the mortgagee. Here Lynch was authorized to take possession and sell the property. The assignment conveyed an absolute title in the property to Lynch.

We need not consider the other assignments of error, as the court should have directed a verdict in favor of the defendants.

Judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

44 L. R. A.

JOHN HANCOCK MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Elizabeth DICK.

(.....Mich.....)

A beneficiary in a life-insurance policy is not estopped by statements in the proofs of loss as to the cause of death which were made in good faith upon information received from the attending physician, from showing that the death resulted from another cause.

(July 12, 1898.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to cancel the renewal of a life-insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alfred Russell, for appellant:

The defendant is bound by the statement

NOTE.—Conclusiveness of proof of loss as against insured or his beneficiaries.

I. General rule.

II. In life insurance.

a. In general.

b. Misstatements as to dates, etc.

c. As to condition of mind of insured.

d. As to cause of death.

1. In general.

2. Coroner's inquests, suicide

3. Doctor's certificates, etc.

III. In fire insurance.

a. In general.

b. Misstatements as to cause of fire.

c. Amount of loss.

d. Misstatements as to occupancy and use of premises.

e. Misstatements as to ownership, etc.

f. Discrepancy as to building.

g. Other insurance.

h. Magistrate's certificate.

This note is confined exclusively to the consideration of the question of the conclusiveness of the proofs of loss as evidence against the insured or his beneficiaries, and the question as to how far they are evidence in his favor is not, therefore, considered, neither is the question of fraud dealt with herein.

I. General rule.

As a general rule a person is estopped to show the existence of a fact, when by his own act, declarations, or conduct it is against conscience that he should be permitted to show the truth. In order, however, to preclude the party, the opposite party must have done some act or changed his situation in reliance upon the statement or conduct of the party to be estopped. Schmidt v. Mutual City & Village F. Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 432.

The doctrine of estoppel has not, however, been generally applied in this class of cases for the reason that an estoppel in pais arises where an act or declaration of the person is intended or calculated to mislead another who has relied upon it, and has so acted, or refrained from action, as that injury will befall him if the truth of the act or declaration be denied; but the exhibition of truth, though at enmity with the declaration, does not create or increase or change the liability. McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 229, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Smiley v. Citizens' Fire Marine & L. Ins. Co. 14 W. Va. 33, 40.

in the proof of claim which she presented, and on which she asked payment, which proofs were signed and sworn to by the physician.

The statement in the health certificate, which was the basis of the contract of reinsurance, was a warranty; the health certificate being expressly conditioned upon the truth of the statement therein contained.

Cobb v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Asso. 153 Mass. 176, 10 L. R. A. 666.

The statements of the insured are bound to be made in good faith, and nothing should be kept back, because the insured and his family should know of his condition, and the agent of the company cannot, in the nature of things, know about the condition of the insured except as statements are made to him upon the subject.

Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. McElroy, 49 U. S. App. 548, 83 Fed. Rep. 631, 28 C. C. A. 365.

All the elements of an estoppel in pais are lacking in the proofs of loss as they do not create the liability to pay the loss, and do no more in that respect than to set running the time at the end of which the sum contracted for shall become payable, and at which action may be brought to enforce the liability. Smiley v. Citizens' Fire, Marine, & L. Ins. Co. 14 W. Va. 33, 40; Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 3 Misc. 458, 460; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 24 L. ed. 499; Phillips v. New York L. Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. S. R. 639; Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317; Smith v. Ferris, 1 Daly, 18; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 229, 14 Am. Rep. 239.

Since, in order to preclude a party from showing the truth, the opposite party must have done some act or changed his situation in reliance upon the statement or conduct of the party to be estopped, if an insurance company has done nothing upon the proof of loss by which it would be prejudiced if some articles were proved on the trial to have been lost which were not enumerated in the proofs of loss made out and furnished to the company, the doctrine of estoppel does not apply to prevent the claimant from showing the loss entailed. Schmidt v. Mutual City & Village F. Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 432, 436.

Even the sworn statement of the assured himself in his proofs of loss will not estop him, but in a suit upon the policy he may give evidence of the actual amount of his loss and recover accordingly. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 128 Ill. 329, 335. To the same effect, Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. 28; Miaghan v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 24 Hun, 58, 61; Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 193; Hoffman v. Etna F. Ins. Co. 1 Robt. 501, 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Huckberger, 52 Ill. 464.

But the proofs presented to the company by the claimant are admissible as representations on his part as to the death and manner of death of the insured, and are presented to the company in compliance with the conditions of the policy requiring notice and proof of death as preliminary to the payment of the insurance money, and are intended for the action of the company, and upon their truth the company has a right to rely, and therefore, unless cor-
44 L. R. A.

A warranty is a condition precedent, and its terms must be strictly complied with.

Barteau v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 595; O'Neil v. Buffalo F. Ins. Co. 3 N. Y. 122; Hartwell v. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 1353; Day v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 1 MacArth. 41, 29 Am. Rep. 565; Cobb v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Asso. 153 Mass. 176, 10 L. R. A. 666.

The nature of this contract imposes upon the insured the duty of disclosing to the company every fact material to the risk which comes to his knowledge at any time before the contract is finally closed.

Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. McElroy, 49 U. S. App. 548, 83 Fed. Rep. 636, 28 C. C. A. 365; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610.

A claimant against a life-insurance company must proceed upon one uniform theory. The beneficiary in the policy must decide upon the facts which entitle him, or her, to recovery, and cannot put forward one disease rected for mistake, the claimant is bound by them. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 35, 22 L. ed. 793, 795.

In Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 389, 24 L. ed. 499, 503, the court refers to the above statements as to the effect of facts set forth in the preliminary proofs as admissions, and holds that the whole of the preliminary proofs of death must be taken together, and are evidence of facts therein stated, in favor of as well as against the company.

The rule as established in the above cases is followed in United States L. Ins. Co. v. Kiekgast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572, wherein it was sought to bind the claimant by the proofs delivered by him to the company.

In this case the court stated that the rule was well settled that where, in a suit upon a policy of insurance, the proofs of death are offered in evidence by the claimant, they are admissible only for the purpose of showing performance by the assured of the conditions of the policy in relation to preliminary proofs. But where the proofs are offered in evidence by the company, a somewhat different rule applies, and in that case they are admissible as declarations by the claimant, and are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein against the claimant and on behalf of the company.

So, in Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 3 Misc. 458, 460, in deciding that the proofs of loss were not conclusive against the claimant's right to recover, and holding that nothing but a technical estoppel would shut out the truth, the court stated that the preponderance of authority showed that the preliminary proofs might be used: First, for the purpose of showing that the requirements of the policy in that regard had been complied with, and second, as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein against the assured and on behalf of the company; but that they were not conclusive against the claimant.

This is also asserted to be the rule in the case of Phillips v. New York L. Ins. Co. 31 N. Y. S. R. 636, 637, in which the court relied upon the Newton and Higginbotham cases, supra.

And in Cushman v. United States L. Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 72, 79, the same rule is upheld. There the claimant sought to prove at the trial who the usual medical attendant of the assured was, against the company's contention that the statement contained in the assured's application for insurance and in the doctor's statement and one state of facts under oath and demand payment upon it and then change her ground of recovery.

New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486; Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317 [10 Allen, 213]; Irring v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507.

Mr. Philip T. Van Zile, for appellee:

For a mere mistake in diagnosis of the disease, or a wilful false statement, or misjudgment, courts of justice will not say the company is to be relieved of its contract of insurance.

Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 414.

An honest intentional mistake with proof of loss under a fire policy will not necessarily prevent a recovery even if notice thereof is not given insurers until the trial.

Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 363; Waldeck v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 129; Beckett v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Asso. 67 Minn. 298; Bachmeyer v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 82 Wis. 255, 87 Wis. 325; Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Ro- del, 95 U. S. 232, 24 L. ed. 433; Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Anderson, 5 Kan. App. 18.

While the application and the certificate furnished in this case may be a warranty, it is only a warranty that the assured is in as good health as when first examined upon his application for said policy.

At most this warranty will only be held to warrant that he was at the time free from disease or ailment that affected the general soundness or healthfulness of his system seriously, not a mere temporary indisposition which does not tend to weaken or undermine the constitution of the assured.

Kettenbach v. Omaha Life Asso. 49 Neb. 842; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 76 Mich. 428; Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513; Plumb v. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. 108 Mich. 94.

A court of equity will not make a decree on slight or uncertain proofs that will result in canceling or forfeiting this policy.

furnished in accordance with the terms of the policy were blinding upon the claimant as the latter statement was untrue.

In Goldschmidt v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 486, 491, wherein the company sought to give in evidence the testimony of the coroner's inquest annexed to the proofs of death which were in all respects complete without such testimony, and fully complied with the requirements of the policy, the claimant's contention, that proofs of death were not admissible in evidence "except so far as they are evidence of the death as required by the rules of the company, and of the plaintiffs' presentation of proof to the company under their rules," and also their objection to the proceedings before the coroner being introduced in evidence as an admission of the plaintiffs, or as evidence of the statements contained therein, was upheld, as the claimants were in no respect bound by them.

And after the insurance company has received due notice of the facts stated in the proofs, the proofs have the probative force of solemn admissions under oath against interest. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. Rep. 179, 187, 12 C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629.

The case of Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Stibbe, 46 Md. 302, 312, also holds that when the proofs are offered in evidence by the company they are admitted as evidence against the claimant.

In the case of Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793, the claimant was bound by the statements contained in the proofs of death which showed suicide and consisted of several affidavits and the record of the proceedings before the coroner's jury, as there was nothing to show a mistake therein, and no suggestion was made that they did not truly state the manner of the death of the insured.

This case is, therefore, distinguished from the Goldschmidt Case, supra, as in that case the company raised no issue as to the preliminary proofs of death which were complete without the statements of the coroner's inquest, the contents of which formed no part of the representations of the claimant, and the statements were not sworn to by him nor prescribed as worthy of belief.

The Newton Case is also distinguished from that of Fisher v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 188 Pa. 1, 14, upon the ground that in the latter case there was no admission by the claimant 44 L. R. A.

that death occurred by suicide, while in the former case it was clear and uncontradicted.

The same ground of distinction is also made out by the Higginbotham Case, 95 U. S. 380, 24 L. ed. 499, and also by the case of Goldschmidt v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 486.

The proofs of loss or of death are not conclusive evidence against the claimant. Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 142 N. Y. 505, 509; Hanna v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 150 N. Y. 526, 530; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 229, 233, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Smith v. Ferris, 1 Daly, 18, 20; Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 183, 186; Bradley v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 20 App. Div. 22, 26; Redmond v. Industrial Benefit Asso. 150 N. Y. 167; Chinnery v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 15 App. Div. 515; Miaghian v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 24 Hun. 58, 61; Fisher v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 188 Pa. 1, 14; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 187, 12 C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629; Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 29 Fed. Rep. 198, 201; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793; Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. 28, 34. See more particularly hereon the various sections of the note, infra.

In the above case of Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. the court stated that if it were to hold that a claimant under a policy is irrevocably bound by statements of fact in the proof; that there is no room for the correction of mistakes,—correction made upon after-discovered testimony, and more careful inquiry,—it would give to such proofs a character higher than is given to evidence offered upon a trial and verdict thereon.

And the rule as to their conclusiveness holds, although they should be admitted as evidence. Bradley v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 20 App. Div. 22, 26; Chinnery v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 15 App. Div. 515; Hanna v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 150 N. Y. 526; Redmond v. Industrial Benefit Asso. 150 N. Y. 167.

They may be used as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein against the insured, and on behalf of the company, but they are not conclusive against the claimant. Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 3 Misc. 458, 460; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 24 L. ed. 499; Phillips v. New York L. Ins. Co. 31 N. Y. S. R. 639;

Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 141, 54 Am. Rep. 354; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545; Allen v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 473.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant issued an insurance policy upon the life of one John J. Dick, which he suffered to lapse. A short time afterwards his son presented a certificate of good health, reading as follows:

Detroit, Michigan, Feb. 18, 1890.

I, John J. Dick, of Detroit, Mich., being the person whose life is insured under policy No. 28,251 in the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, do hereby certify that I am in as good health as when first examined on my application for said policy, and that my family record is unchanged. I also understand and agree that the payment of premium due Jan. 8, 1890, is received, and said policy is now reinstated, by said company, on condition of the truth of the above statement.

John J. Dick.

Witness. (Note any change in family record below).

I witness the above: H. C. Judson, M. D., Physician of Family.

At the same time the overdue premium was paid. A day or two later, John J. Dick died. The bill was filed to cancel the renewal receipt given at the time the premium was paid, and has been before us, upon de-Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317; Miaghan v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 24 Hun, 58, 61; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 229, 14 Am. Rep. 239.

Proofs of death furnish some evidence of the facts therein stated, but after all they are only prima facie evidence and may be rebutted. Bradley v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 20 App. Div. 22, 26.

Preliminary proofs presented to an insurance company in compliance with the conditions of the policy of insurance are admissible as prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein against the insured and in behalf of the company. Goldschmidt v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 486, 493; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793; United States L. Ins. Co. v. Kleigast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572; Hayes v. Union Mut. L. Assur. Co. 44 U. C. Q. B. 360, 365.

And when the proofs are offered in evidence by the company as defendants they are admissible as declarations by the beneficiary. United States L. Ins. Co. v. Kleigast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Stibbe, 46 Md. 302.

But proofs of death are only competent evidence against a beneficiary so far as they contain statements of facts within his knowledge or that of the parties who made them as admissions against interest. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 8 Am. L. Rec. 629.

And a statement accompanying a proof of loss cannot be used as evidence against the claimant in an action on the policy. Helwig v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 58 Hun, 866.

Such proofs furnished by the beneficiaries are prima facie evidence against the persons furnishing the same, and when no evidence is given to contradict them they are conclusive. Proppe v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 13 Misc. 266, 269; National Life Asso. v. Sturtevant, 78 Hun, 572.

Statements made by the assured in the proof of loss are admissions, and may be considered by the jury for what they are worth, but the party furnishing them may show that statements in the proofs are erroneous or inadvertently made. Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 3 Misc. 458, 460.

And in the absence of any explanation or other evidence the statements contained in the proof of loss or of death should be deemed to establish the facts so stated. Proppe v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 13 Misc. 266, 269; Schmitt v. National Life Asso. 84 Hun, 128.

The sworn statement of the claimant put in evidence by the company tends to prove the facts stated therein in favor of the company and against the claimant, even in the absence of other evidence tending in that direction, although it might not have that effect as against any other person who might be interested in the question. Bachmeyer v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 82 Wis. 255, 263.

It has, however, been held that the assured may correct a mistake of fact in his original statement of proof of loss, but such corrections are not for the first time to be made known to the insurers at the trial of the action to recover the loss by the introduction of evidence showing that the statements filed were not true in a material fact, which, if it exists as stated, will be fatal to the right of the insured to recover. Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 10 Allen, 213, 219.

And further, that if an incorrect statement in a material fact made by mistake in the notice or proof of loss, as required by the conditions of the policy, is not corrected or amended before the trial, the assured cannot prove the mistake and show that the facts are not as therein stated. Ibid.

The same doctrine is maintained by the court in Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507, 514, in which case the company rested its claim upon the facts stated and sworn to in the affidavit of proof of loss, and the plaintiff was not allowed to impeach the truth of his statement at the trial.

This theory has, however, been looked upon as too strict.

Thus, in Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793, the court stated that the opinions maintained in the above cases of Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. and Irving v. Excelsior Ins. Co., to the effect that where a mistake has occurred in the preliminary proofs presented, and no corrected statement is furnished the insurers before trial, the insured will not be allowed on the trial to show that the facts were different from those stated, were applicable only where the insurers have been prejudiced in their defense by relying upon the statements contained in the proofs.

In Neill v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 10 Jones & S. 259, the above case of Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507, was looked upon as overruled by the subsequent case of McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239, and also by the case of Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 193.

But in Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 1 Robt. 501, 518, the court stated that it did not think the case of Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507, would exclude the correction of mistakes, and cited the case of American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. 399.

And it has been expressly held that errors and omissions in the proof of loss furnished to insurers in cases of insurance may be corrected or supplied at the trial. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schwenk, 94 U. S. 593, 24 L. ed. 294.

murrer, on a former occasion. See 72 N. W. 179. It is now before us upon the merits, having been appealed by the complainant, against whom a decree for the amount of the policy was granted in the circuit court.

Two questions are presented: 'First, the claim that the renewal was obtained by fraud; and, second, that the certificate was a warranty of good health, which the proof shows that Mr. Dick did not enjoy at the time.

In our opinion, the preponderance of the evidence shows that the renewal was not obtained through fraud. It is true that the statements made by Dr. Judson may be criticised as not entirely consistent upon the subject of the time that he was called to treat the deceased for his last illness. But, aside from his testimony, there is much evidence, from the family, neighbors, and acquaintances, tending to show that the deceased was not attacked by his last illness until after the renewal of the policy.

The proofs of loss state that the deceased died from typhlitis, and it is urged that the nature of this disease is such as to conclusively show that he must have been ill before the certificate of good health was furnished. We are of the opinion that the proofs justify the conclusion that he may not have died from that disease, but from some other cause. In this connection it is insisted that we must find that he died from that disease, inasmuch as the beneficiary has decided upon that, and based her claim and proofs of loss upon it. We have no doubt that the proofs of loss should be treated as evidence of the fact stated, being in the na-

So, the assured may, without filing an amended statement, show upon the trial that his proofs of loss are erroneous, if the error is in fact a mistake and not an attempt upon the part of the assured to defraud or mislead the insurer. McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Smiley v. Citizens' Fire, Marine, & L. Ins. Co. 14 W. Va. 88, 41.

And an insurance company cannot, by embodying in his preliminary proof any document which it sees fit to call for, hold the assured to an admission, not only of the existence of a document and its terms, but also of the truth of all the statements therein contained. United States L. Ins. Co. v. Kleigast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572.

So, if a mistake has been made in the proof of death it may be corrected or explained by evidence given on the trial. National Life Assn. v. Sturtevant, 78 Hun, 572.

Proofs of loss are not stronger than a receipt in full which has always been held to be open to explanation. Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. 28, 34.

And there is no magic in a proof of loss which prevents a correction of errors contained therein, and it is proper to show the circumstances under which the proofs of loss were made out, and the rest is for the jury. Ibid.

Honest mistakes made in proofs of loss cannot defeat the right of the insured to recover what may be justly due him under the contract of insurance. Boyd v. Royal Ins. Co. 111 N. C. 372, 377.

Proofs of loss in which honest mistakes have been made are open to explanation. Ellis v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 264, 267.

And a statement accompanying the proof of loss cannot be used against the claimant in an action on the policy. Pickett v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20 App. Div. 114, 116.

So, a mere mistake or unintentional error or misstatement of an immaterial matter in the affidavit in the proof of loss will not avoid the policy, but the statement in order to preclude recovery of the policy must be wilfully made in respect to a material matter and for the purpose of deceiving the company. Walker v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 209.

And even if the policy contains a provision that "any fraud or attempt at fraud, or any misrepresentations in proof of loss or examination, or any false swearing, shall cause a forfeiture of all claims," it cannot be taken that any innocent misstatement can work a forfeiture; and the court commits no error in charging the jury that under such a clause a misstatement will not avoid the policy if it is a 44 L. R. A.

mere mistake in an expression of opinion, and that the misstatement meant by such condition must be false and fraudulent. Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 410, 420.

The right of the assured to recover under the policy is not forfeited by a mere mistake or misstatement in his proof of loss in the absence of fraud or false swearing. Planters' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Deford, 38 Md. 382.

In Chapman v. Pole, 22 L. T. N. S. 306, 307, it is said a man may make a mistake in his claim of proof of loss, and it may be quite honestly. He may either fail to recollect the precise quantity of the goods he has on his premises at the time of the fire, or mistake the value of those of which he is in possession, and press the claim according to what he believes honestly to be true, but which may in the end turn out to be a mistake. In such cases the only consequence which ensues is that as the contract of insurance is simply one of indemnity he can only recover to the extent of the real value of the goods actually lost.

II. In life insurance.

a. In general.

As shown in the preceding section, the doctrine generally adopted in case of life and fire insurance is that the preliminary proofs presented to an insurance company in compliance with a condition of the policy of insurance are admissible as prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated against the insured and on behalf of the company. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793.

The whole of the preliminary proofs of death must, however, be taken together, and are evidence of facts therein stated in favor of as well as against the company. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 24 L. ed. 499.

The proofs of death required by a fraternal society or order, furnished by the plaintiff under the conditions of the certificate, and as an necessary to be done in order to sustain an action against the company, are competent evidence on behalf of the company as against the beneficiaries, and the court errs in rejecting them. Modern Woodmen of America v. Von Wald, 6 Kan. App. 231, 236.

Yet, although misstatements in the proof of loss or death may be conclusive evidence of the fact therein stated as against the party seeking to recover if he does not furnish corrected statements before the trial, such rule only applies in cases where the insurer has been prejudiced in his defense by relying upon such statements. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Anderson, 5 Kan. App. 18, 23.

ture of an admission; but it is subject to explanation, and cannot have the effect of an estoppel, when made upon information received from the attendant physician, and in good faith. We find nothing in the case of New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486, which is at variance with this doctrine; and the same may be said of the other cases cited. In Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507, when the assured furnished an account of loss under a claim in the policy requiring it, and making it a condition precedent to "his right to recover,"—the loss "not being payable until sixty days after such account is delivered,"—it was held that the defendants had a right to take the facts as he stated them, and that, had they been subsequently corrected, they would have been entitled to sixty days for examination, and that, "for the purposes of the trial of this action and its decision [the plaintiff] was concluded by that [his] affidavit." That falls short of the broad contention made here. The case of Campbell v. [Charter Oak F. & M.] Ins. Co. cited as 99 Mass. 317, we do not find. [10 Allen, 213.]

Upon the proofs, we think that the complainant has failed to sustain the case made by the bill.

The decree is affirmed, with costs.

The other Justices concur.

Rehearing denied.

And all admissions contained in the proof of death are not binding upon the claimant, and they may be varied or contradicted by him in cases of mistake. Fisher v. Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. 188 Pa. 1.

The general rule is that the claimant under a life-insurance policy is not concluded by the proofs of death presented, but such claimant may give evidence changing or correcting the facts therein appearing to have been stated by or for him. Hanna v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 150 N. Y. 526, 530.

So, the claimant under a life policy is not absolutely concluded by the statements made by another party as to the cause of the assured's death contained in an affidavit made by such party forming part of the preliminary proofs of death, especially where it is not affirmatively shown that the claimant knew of the statements made in such affidavit, and the terms of the policy as to proof of loss do not require any such evidence. Day v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 1 MacArth. 598, 599.

If the policy requires the proofs of death to be furnished through the insurer, but does not state what such proofs shall contain, the plaintiff will be allowed upon the trial to explain and contradict statements made in such proofs as to the manner of death. Beckett v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Assn. 67 Minn. 298.

And an incorrect statement or mistake made by the beneficiary in the preliminary proof of loss may be corrected and explained by parol evidence upon the trial, when the same has been asked for by the company by letter and has been rendered to it in substance by letter prior to the commencement of the suit. Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 28 Fla. 209, 240, 23 Fla. 193.

So, if an affidavit of the beneficiary tending to show that, contrary to the representations of the assured in his application, he had been subject to epileptic fits, is introduced, it is proper to permit the affiant to show that she never knowingly subscribed to or made the statements contained in such affidavit. Bankers' Life Assn. v. Lisco, 47 Neb. 340.

In Covenant Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Hoffman, 110 Ill. 603, 605, under the assured's certificate of membership, no benefit could be claimed if death was caused by any act of self-destruction committed, "sane or insane," or upon the happening of any one of certain other conditions. The proof of death given in evidence stated the disease to be pneumonia. The company asked for an instruction to the jury that the proofs of death were not evidence of what disease the holder of the certificate died, and that they could not be considered by the jury for that purpose. The court refused the instruction, and held the proofs of death were proper evidence although they contained proof of the disease of which the assured died, and that it was not error in the trial court to refuse the instruction in the form it was asked; and further, that as the conflict was as to whether he had disease of the lungs or other diseases at the time he made the application or renewal of membership the court would, if so asked, have instructed the jury that the proofs of death were no evidence on that question.

If, however, there is an express clause in the policy that the contents of the proofs of death are to be evidence of the facts therein stated, such condition is not only a waiver of privilege on the part of the deceased, but is an agreement and condition which binds the beneficiaries, and they cannot claim the benefit of the contract and sue to enforce it without accepting and abiding by its provisions. Proppe v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 13 Misc. 266, 269.

See also Bradley v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 20 App. Div. 22, 26; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 8 Am. L. Rec. 629; National Life Assn. v. Sturtevant, 78 Hun, 572,—supra, 1.

b. Misstatements as to dates.

Proofs of death are not conclusive upon the claimant under a life-insurance policy as to the age of the assured, and he can show the real age of the assured, and that the statement in the proof in that respect is erroneous. Schmitt v. National Life Assn. 84 Hun, 128; National Life Assn. v. Sturtevant, 78 Hun, 572; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239, Affirming 64 Barb. 536; Cummins v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 261, 23 Am. Rep. 111.

In Cotton States L. Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 220, 230, an error in stating the age and the proof of death was held to be explainable.

And a variance between the statements made in the claimant's proof of death and those made in the application for insurance, which, if true, would probably have constituted a breach of warranty which would have avoided the policy, with respect to the date of the birth of the deceased, and also with respect to another policy in another company, does not estop the claimant from showing that they were inadvertently made, and that as a matter of law they were not true. Wells v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 19 App. Div. 18.

The plaintiff in an action to recover on an insurance policy is not estopped, by reason of the statements in the proof of loss being inconsistent with those contained in the application by reason of a different statement of the age of the assured, and also as to other insurance, from showing that they were inadvertently made and incorrect, and that as a matter of fact they were not true. Wells v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 19 App. Div. 18, 22; McMaster v. In- insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Mead v. American F. Ins. Co. 13 App. Div. 476.

And the beneficiary under a life-insurance policy is not concluded by the statement made by her as to the age of the deceased in the proof of loss, where the same is voluntarily and not necessarily made by her, and she has a clear right to explain why and how she came to make such statement.

In this case the proofs of death showed the age of the decedent to be two years more than the age as shown by his application for insurance, and the beneficiary testified that she made the statement owing to being misled by an old book of the insured, which was a record of the service in the army, in the possession of the insured, and also by statements made by him that he was younger than the age as shown in the record of service. Hayes v. Union Mut. L. Assur. Co. 44 U. C. Q. B. 360, 365.

So, evidence to show a mistake in the date of a certain birth for which a blank had been left in the proof of death, and which, some days after the same had been signed and sworn to by the claimants, was filed in without their authority or consent by a person who had charge of the paper, has been allowed upon the ground that although the proof became prima facie evidence so far as the claimants are concerned, yet it was not conclusive. National Life Assn. v. Sturtevant, 78 Hun, 572.

And parol evidence on behalf of the claimant was admitted to explain a mistake in the age of the assured, in Neill v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 10 Jones & S. 259, where the proof of death made the insured one year older than he was stated to be in the original application, and this was proved to have been caused by an error of one year in the computation by the person who prepared the proofs of loss, and not to have resulted from any error in the original application, as the declaration of the age in the proofs of death did not mislead or injure the company, or lead it to do or omit to do anything by which it would be prejudiced, and the basis of an estoppel in pais did not exist.

In the case of Schmitt v. National Life Assn. 84 Hun, 128, there was a variance between the age of the assured as shown in the application and the age as contained in the proofs of death, as the latter showed that the assured was born the year previous to that stated in the application. The answers in the application were held to be warranties and material to the risk, and the claimant was not estopped by the proof of loss from showing the true age of the assured, and from showing that there was a mistake therein; and, as there was no explanation or other evidence, the statement of the age of the assured as given in the proofs was taken as establishing the facts so stated.

In Young v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 80 Me 244, 249, which was an action on an accident policy, the notice and proof of death were filed in by the agent of the company. It was held that if such agent, under the directions of the plaintiff without any fault on the part of the insured, misstated the date of the accident, the company could not take advantage of the error in date, and that the court below committed no error in the admission of the notice and proof of disability.

And the beneficiary under an accident policy is not concluded from showing that she was mistaken in the date of the accident mentioned by her in her letters to the company as that of the accident, as the date was not then material, and the deceased was not disabled so as to be prevented from attending to his ordinary business for fully a week after sustaining the injury, and no indemnity was claimed or paid for any disability between the two dates. American Acci. Ins. Co. v. Norment, 91 Tenn. 1.

In Tuthill v. United L. Ins. Assn. 50 N. Y. S. R. 266, the attention of one of the company's officers was called to a mistake in the proof of loss given by the plaintiff and the physician which stated that the health of the deceased was first affected on a given date when it should have been a year later, which the officer said was all right. On the trial the plaintiff was permitted to explain the mistake and how it happened, as the truth or veracity of the certificate was in issue.

In a case wherein the insured died three months from the date of his reinstatement, and the first proof of loss sworn to by the beneficiary and the attending physician stated the duration of the last illness as being between certain dates, and the remote cause of death as liquor, and the immediate cause acute Bright's disease, which statements were corrected in the supplemental proofs rendered by the beneficiary and the attending physician so far as they related to the time the deceased was taken sick, —the company claimed that the first proof established a breach of warranty and was conclusive of the interest of the beneficiary, but the court held that she was not estopped by such proof, and that she might still show the true facts of the case. Spencer v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Assn. 3 Misc. 458, 460.

c. As to condition of mind of insured.

The fact that the claimant in her proofs of the death of her husband deposed that he committed suicide while insane is not binding upon her where such statement was made in an honest and unintentional mistake of the facts, and where she testified on the trial that she deposed to such statements in the proofs of death on the faith of what others had told her, and not from actual knowledge. Bachmeyer v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 82 Wis. 255, 260.

In Behr v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 2 Filpp, 692, 699, 4 Fed. Rep. 357, the claimant had previously filed a petition for a divorce from her husband whose life was assured by the company. She stated under oath that her husband was an habitual drunkard for four years, and for the past two years prior to filing the petition was subject to mania a potu. The company claimed that his death was produced by drinking, and that the policy was void by reason of the representations made by the assured, and introduced the sworn statement of the claimant in proof thereof. The claimant stated that at the time she made such statement she was suffering from great mental anxiety, and that it was a mistake made by her in telling her lawyer that her husband had been so long a drunkard, and that she had sworn to the petition without knowing the effect or force of the words employed and without discovering the mistake. It was claimed that the petition for divorce was an estoppel, but the court ruled otherwise as it was made inconsiderately or by mistake, and that the distinguishing feature of an estoppel was that under no circumstances could it be averred against, and was not susceptible of explanation and often spoke against the truth, but it was not an estoppel where the parties had not acted upon it or been prejudiced by it. In this case the court pointed out that the real question was as to the force and effect of a petition for divorce as a part of the proof, and further that when it was once admitted as part of such proof the contrary might be shown, and it was not an estoppel.

Yet the sworn statement made by the claimant herself that her husband was insane, put in evidence by the company, as against the claimant tends to prove such insanity even in the absence of other evidence tending in the same direction, although it might not have that effect as against any other person interested in the question. Bachmeyer v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 82 Wis. 255, 263.

See also Home Benefit Asso. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160, supra, d. 1.

d. As to cause of death.

1. In general.

Statements as to the cause of death in proofs of loss are binding and conclusive on the party who makes them until by pleading or otherwise he gives the insurance company reasonable notice that he was mistaken in his statement and that he will endeavor to show that the death was the result of a different cause than that stated in his proofs, and, after the company has received due notice of the fact, the proofs have the probative force of solemn admissions under oath against interest, but they are not conclusive. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 22 L. ed. 793; Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 29 Fed. Rep. 198, 201; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 228, 233, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Farnelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 193.

The cause of death as represented in the proof of death furnished under the provisions of the life policy constitutes admissions of the material fact made by the claimant against interest, and although they are not conclusive, yet they are competent prima facie evidence against him in an action on the policy wherein the issue is the cause of death,—especially in the absence of evidence showing misstatements or errors therein. Hanna v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 150 N. Y. 526, 530.

A statement as to the cause of death, made by the claimant under a life policy which accompanied the proof of loss, does not constitute a part of the proof of death required by the policy, but is a mere declaration of the opinion of the claimant as to the cause of death, and as such cannot be relied upon by the company as conclusive, but is only to be considered by the jury in connection with all the other evidence in the case. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Stibbe, 46 Md. 302, 312.

So, in an action on a life policy proofs of loss stating suicide as the cause of death are admissible but not conclusive against the assured. Leman v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1189, 24 L. R. A. 589. See further, as to suicide, infra, II. d. 2.

And the claimant's affidavit in the proof of death under a life policy which shows that the injuries from which the deceased died were received by him while unloading hay, when he accidentally strained himself, and an affidavit of a physician showing the cause of death to be from an accident, by exertions made in hauling in hay, are not conclusive so as to prevent recovery, where it is proved upon the trial that death was the result of a blow with a pitchfork while hauling hay, as the injury producing death is correctly described in the preliminary proof, although the claimant may have imputed death to a strain instead of a blow, as the variance is not such as can be regarded as fatal. North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 48, 52, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

In an action on a life-insurance policy, the claimant is not estopped from claiming that the death of the insured was caused otherwise than by suicide, by the statements and opinions contained in the proofs of death, that the cause of death was mental aberration, where the statements were based on hearsay. Home Benefit Asso. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160. See also II. d. 2, infra.

In Walther v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 65 Cal. 417, 418, the claimant, after proving the fact of death, offered in evidence, for the sole purpose of showing a compliance with the requirements of the policy, the preliminary proofs of death of the deceased which had been furnished to the company, and which consisted of the proceedings of the coroner's inquest had upon the deceased's body, and statements made by the claimant together with statements by attending physicians, the undertaker, and a householder. This evidence, which was not contradicted, showed that the deceased died from the effects of prussic acid, and the verdict of the coroner's jury was death by prussic acid administered by his own hands with suicidal intent. The court below found that there was no evidence sufficient to show that the deceased committed suicide, and that the allegations of the answer that he committed suicide were untrue. This finding was based on the proposition that as the claimant offered the papers referred to solely for the purpose of showing that she had complied with the requirements as to preliminary proofs they would not be considered for any other purpose.

Upon appeal this was held to be error for the reason that when the papers were in evidence they were before the court and showed on their face that the cause of death was suicide, and for the purpose of the trial they were prima facie evidence of such fact and should have been so considered, although the claimant might have been permitted to overcome them by evidence that death was due to natural causes.

See also Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 29 Fed. Rep. 198, infra, II.

2. Coroner's inquests, suicide.

It has been held that the finding of the coroner's inquest is only admissible as part of the proof of loss furnished by the claimant to the insurance company, and is not evidence which the jury are to consider in making up their minds how the deceased was or was not injured, and they must determine such questions by the evidence produced at the trial. Dougherty v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 154 Pa. 385, 387.

A certified copy of the verdict and evidence given at a coroner's inquest furnished under the policy as part of the proofs of death will not be binding upon the beneficiary as an admission that the verdict therein stated is true, or that the evidence was actually given, or that the witnesses had stated the facts correctly. United States L. Ins. Co. v. Kleigast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572.

In Keels v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 29 Fed. Rep. 198, 201, the court held that although the cause of death in the proof may be stated to be suicide, and this may be found by the proceedings of the coroner's jury attached to the proof of death, and the claimant may admit making such statement on information, and not from personal knowledge, and as not meaning technical suicide by the use of the word, such claimant may show that death was caused by some other means, such as accident, as, at the most, the statement made in the proof is an admission by the claimant, and, with all the other evidence, is to be submitted to and weighed by the jury, and such evidence meets the presumption of accidental death, and puts on the claimant the burden of showing a mistake.

And the claimant is not estopped from asserting that the cause of death was otherwise than suicide where the proofs of death signed by the defendants in answer to the question as to whether the deceased's death was caused by his own hand or not referred to the statement of the coroner's physician which appeared on the next page and showed that he found "shock from penetrating shot wound in the head (right temple), mental aberration superinduced by chronic headache," and in answer to the question as to whether the death was "caused or accelerated or aggravated by his own hand or acts," the physician stated that he examined the deceased only as coroner's physician, and was unable to make any further statement than above, further than that his mental condition was probably due to chronic headaches which were caused either by chronic meningitis or tumor of the brain, as the company were in no way prejudiced by the statements and opinions in them. Sargent v. Home Benefit Assn. 35 Fed. Rep. 711.

So, the claimant's evidence contradicting the proof of death by suicide was admitted in Leman v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1189, 24 L. R. A. 589, where the proofs of loss furnished the company contained statements of the undertaker, physician, agent, and friends, as well as the coroner's inquest, that suicide was the cause of death, over the company's objection that the plaintiff was bound by these proofs, as the cause of death was mere matter of opinion, and there was no testimony whatever on the subject, except the fact that the insured was found dead from a mortal gun-shot wound, with a pistol wedged in the bend of his thumb, and the body so disposed as to suggest inferences entirely consistent with accidental death, or at least not of a character to exclude every supposition but suicide.

In Fisher v. Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. 188 Pa. 1, in the proofs of death to which a copy of the coroner's inquest and the testimony given thereat were attached, the claimant entered the following protest: "I have been informed the verdict was suicide, but I decline to be bound by it." The company made no request for further proofs, but accepted them as filed, and on the trial attempted to prove the defense of suicide by offering the proofs of death, and a copy of the coroner's notes as admissions by the claimant. The claimant was held not to be bound by them, as, although by attaching a copy of the coroner's verdict and depositions he admitted their existence, yet by his protest he expressly declined to admit the proof of the fact which the company sought to establish.

The proofs of loss which include the proceedings before the coroner read in evidence to the jury on behalf of the claimant, and offered generally as evidence and so received without objection on behalf of the company, are to be considered in all their parts, and effect must be given to all they prove or tend to prove. Lawrence v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 5 Ill. App. 280, 283.

So, the verdict of the coroner's jury sent to the company as part of the proof of death at the company's request and introduced by it to show the claim therein made by the plaintiff that the insured had died by his own hand, which was competent upon the issue made on the trial as to whether the death was due to an accident, forms no basis for an estoppel against the company, inasmuch as the plaintiff is not misled or prejudiced thereby, and the utmost he can claim is that the proofs of death, including the verdict of the coroner's jury, are evidence to be considered together with the other facts upon the issues in the case. Zimmerman v. Masonic Aid Assn. 75 Fed. Rep. 236, 239. Although this case is not directly in point as showing the conclusiveness of the proof of loss, yet it is here cited as showing that the proof is to be considered along with the other evidence and other facts upon the issues of the case, and therefore as supporting the view that they are not absolutely conclusive.

See also Home Benefit Assn. v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 35 L. ed. 1160; Walther v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 65 Cal. 417, 418, supra, d. 1.

3. Doctors' certificates, etc.

The preliminary proofs presented to an insurance company in compliance with the conditions of its policy of insurance are admissible as prima facie evidence against the insured, but statements by physicians which are by statute made confidential become available to the company as evidence because found in or connected with the preliminary proofs, especially when they are not made concerning the last sickness or proximate cause of death. Dreier v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 670, 673.

The certificate of a physician as to the cause of death, taken by itself and unexplained, is not conclusive evidence of the cause of death, nor is it prima facie proof against the claimant in an action to recover upon an insurance policy when it is stated ex parte and without opportunity for cross-examination, but it becomes a part of the evidence to be considered when it has been explained by and incorporated with the oral testimony of a physician examined by the court with reference to it. Davey v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 650, 653.

And a physician's certificate as to the cause of death, furnished with the proof of loss in compliance with the conditions and terms of the policy, is not conclusive as against the beneficiary claiming under the policy. De Camp v. New Jersey Mut. L. Ins. Co. 3 Ins. L. J. 89, 102.

The sworn testimony of a physician derived from hearsay, that death was caused by arsenic, is not conclusive as against the beneficiary, even though part of the proof of loss furnished by him in compliance with the conditions of the policy. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 8 Am. L. Rec. 624.

And the physician's statements based entirely upon hearsay, furnished with the proofs of death submitted upon the company's forms which required the physician who attended the deceased to answer questions prepared by the company, and required the claimant to furnish said answers to the insurer, were rejected by the court as not binding upon the assured, in Insurance Co. v. Schmidt, 40 Ohio St. 112.

So, a certificate of death, signed by the attending physician of the deceased, which contained the duration of his illness, with which the claimant had nothing to do, procured by the company, although evidence in the case, is not conclusive upon the claimants, especially where it is an unsworn document. Chinnery v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 15 App. Div. 515.

And the claimant is not bound or responsible for the statement of a doctor who attended the insured during his last illness, attached to the proof of death in compliance with the conditions of the policy, in which he incorrectly stated that he had been the attendant or family physician for five years, as not caused by the claimant himself, and the evidence of such physician as a witness for the defense is properly contradicted by another medical witness on behalf of the plaintiff to prove that his evidence was not correct, and that he had made contrary statements. Cushman v. United States L. Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 72.

A doctor's certificate which shows his attendance upon the deceased for one month at a time prior to the policy is not conclusive when it is explained or contradicted by the claimant, who states that the deceased had never been sick or at any time attended by a physician. Howard v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 18 Misc. 74. In this case, however, the court reversed the judgment of the court below in favor of the claimant and ordered a new trial upon the ground that by a condition in the policy the contents of the proof of death were to be evidence of the facts therein stated in behalf of, but not as against, the company, which condition or statement was not invalid in its nature as it was competent for the parties to agree to such an arrangement.

And where the only proof of the veracity in the application of the assured was contained in the certificate of the physician presented by the claimant among the proofs of death and put in evidence by her, and this constituted prima facie evidence binding upon her as an admission, evidence by the deceased's mother which tended to contradict the physician's certificate was admitted and showed that the deceased was not ill at the time the insurance was effected but was in good health, and this obviated the effect of the contrary admission in the proof of death and raised an issue upon the facts, and was sufficient to authorize a finding, not only that no admission was intended, but also that the fact was otherwise than as appeared to be admitted by the proofs. Boylan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 18 Misc. 444.

And under a policy which provides that the proofs of death shall contain answers by the claimant, physicians, and other persons, and that all the contents of such proofs shall be evidence of the facts therein stated in behalf of, but not against, the company, and also a condition that the statements of the attending physician are to be considered as part of the proof of death, the proofs of death, signed by the claimant, which contain the sworn statement by the attending physician that the chief or primary cause of death was organic heart disease, asthma, and pleurisy, and that he had attended the deceased prior to the issuing of the policy for a similar disease, although competent evidence in support of the defense that the insured had been treated for the disease prior to the date of the policy as an admission in a material fact and under the rules as to admissions against interest, are not conclusive against the claimant who is at liberty to offer any evidence to set aside, contradict, or qualify the statements therein contained. Kipp v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 41 App. Div. 298, 300.

If the by-laws of the company require that upon the decease of a member the proofs of death shall contain, inter alia, a statement under oath of the attending physician made upon a blank furnished by the company as a condition precedent to recovery, the sworn statement of the attending physician of the deceased in the proofs of death that he had attended her for a certain disease prior to the application and issuance of the policy, is not conclusive evidence that the representations of the deceased in the application, to the effect that for a number of years previous to the application for insurance he had no disease of those parts, was false, where the doctor's certificate showed the true cause of death to be the disease of several members of the body. Bedmond v. Industrial Benefit Assn. 150 N. Y. 187.

So, the beneficiary is neither concluded nor estopped on the trial by the statements of the physicians contained in two affidavits made by them as to the cause of death on the company's blanks, one of which states delirium tremens as the cause, while the other asserts that hemorrhages, induced by an excessive use of intoxicants, caused death, which affidavits were forwarded by the company to the plaintiff with other proofs of the death of the assured, as the issue made by the pleadings as to the real cause of death is triable as any other issue of fact. Bentz v. Northwestern Aid Assn. 40 Minn. 202, 2 L. R. A. 784. In this case the physicians were not the agents of the beneficiary, and she had not referred the company to them for information, but had merely given their names in reply to a question propounded to her as those who had attended the deceased in his last sickness, and the affidavits made by them were ex parte at the request of the company and were forwarded by the claimant by the advice of the company's agent on the assurance that they were all right.

Where the certificate of a physician furnishes as part of the proof of death according to the policy stated the cause of death to be exhaustion produced by the overuse of alcoholic liquors and opiates, the court admitted evidence to show that the symptoms at the post mortem examination did not point to alcoholism as the cause of death, or as one of the causes, and also that death was caused by a high state of mental excitement in consequence of domestic complication, aggravated by the use of liquor in not large quantities, and mainly by exhaustion produced by very severe overdoses of narcotics taken to allay that excitement. DeCamp v. New Jersey Mut. L. Ins. Co. 3 Ins. L. J. 89, 102.

A letter written by a doctor who attended the assured for some time previous to his death, and a part of the proof of death, although admissible for the purpose of showing compliance with the conditions of the contract requiring proof of loss, does not bind the beneficiaries, and even if it can be considered at all as proof of the facts certified to, its force may be overcome by other evidence proving the good health of the assured. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Assn. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 138, 157, 158.

In this case the company sought to give the letter in evidence so as to escape liability upon the ground that the assured was suffering from a certain disease at the time he made application for membership. The court refused to admit such evidence as the letter was an unsworn declaration by a third party.

And a charge to the jury that the doctor's certificate that the deceased came to his death from the effects of alcoholic stimulants, etc., is not to be taken or accepted by the jury as conclusive evidence of the truth of the facts therein stated, nor is the claimant bound by that statement or estopped from proving a different cause of death, but that the certificate is entitled to the weight which ought to be given to an opinion of a doctor as to the cause of death, who saw the person so spoken of shortly before his death and who had personal knowledge of the person for some time previous to his death, sufficiently embodies the law of the case. Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 140 U. S. 76, 88, 35 L. ed. 371, 376.

In Buffalo Loan, Trust, & S. D. Co. v. Knights Templar & Masonic Mut. Aid Assn. 56 Hun, 303, affirmed, 126 N. Y. 450, proof of death was furnished to the company, and the certificate of the physician who attended the assured in his lifetime stated the cause of death to be delirium tremens, which, if true, would have avoided the policy. It was a part of the contract that "upon due notice and satisfactory proof of the death of a member of the association, the asmance committee shall, within sixty days, pay," etc.; but, as there was nothing in the contract of insurance which required that those representing the deceased should state the cause in the notice of death, the exclusion of that part of the doctor's certificate which stated the cause of death on the trial was correct, as the only duty which devolved upon the claimant was to prove death, and that its cause was a matter of defense which must be proved by common-law evidence. In this case it was also held that the records or books of the board of health were not evidence as to the cause of death.

In Proppé v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 13 Misc. 266, 269, the policy provided that all the contents of the proofs of death should be evidence of the facts therein stated in behalf of, but not against, the company, and the evidence showed that the proofs of death submitted to the company were made upon the forms prescribed by the policy. The physician's certificate, which was a part of the proof of death, certified that the chief or primary cause of death was oedem pulmonum, and that the contributory or secondary cause of death was heart disease, and such certificate was referred to in the proof of death furnished by the beneficiary, and this was held to preclude her from claiming the privilege that the physician's statement did not bind her under the statute.

In Supreme Lodge K. of H. v. Jagers, 62 N. J. L. 96, the by-laws of a benevolent society provided that the suicide of a member should invalidate a benefit certificate issued upon his life, and the society for the purpose of establishing suicide produced and offered in evidence a paper asserted to be the official proof of death, which was signed by officers of the lodge and annexed to the affidavit of the attending physician, which stated suicide as the cause of death. It was held that the plaintiff's claim was not precluded by such proof.

III. In fire insurance.

a. In general.

It has been held that if the insured is induced to make a false statement in his proof of loss by false representations made by the representative of the company, he cannot be bound by such a statement. Cook v. Lion F. Ins. Co. 67 Cal. 372.

An honest or unintentional mistake in the proofs of loss under a fire policy will not necessarily prevent a recovery thereon even though notice of the error is not given to the insurers until the trial. Bachmeyer v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 82 Wis. 255, 256; Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 363; Waldeck v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 129.

So, if the question in the case does not arise with respect to the account which accompanies the preliminary proofs of loss in fire policies, but arises out of the examination of the claimants themselves under oath in the absence of their books of account, a mistake made under such circumstances should be open to correction, and the parties should not be concluded thereby. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Huckberger, 52 Ill. 464, 466.

And the statement made by an administrator under oath, upon examination before the insurance agent, that the property had been sold previous to the fire, does not estop her from proving otherwise on the trial. Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Curran, 8 Kan. 9.

The second proofs of loss made with a full knowledge of the value of the goods not totally destroyed, and with knowledge of the itemized appraisal of the arbitrators, and also that of his ex parte appraisers, so that if there was any mistake or fraud the claimant then knew of it, will be conclusive upon him, especially if he chose to adopt under his oath the appraisal made by the arbitrators which shows every article of the goods, and the amount of the damage done. Morley v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 85 Mich. 210, 219.

See also supra, I.

b. Misstatements as to cause of fire.

In McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239, the claimant was held not to be precluded from showing by evidence alibunde that the party who had made the proof of loss, and who was then deceased, was mistaken in his statement of the cause of the fire in his account of the loss, and the claimant was not bound by the erroneous statement made as to the cause of the fire but might fix the company's liability by proof of the true cause of the loss without regard to the statements in the preliminary loss.

So, an expression of opinion in a proof of loss that the fire originated through friction in the exhaust fan put into the building after the insurance without the consent of the company, while evidence as to how the fire originated, is not conclusive, and amounts to nothing more than an opinion. Roby v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. S. R. 93, 95.

And a sworn statement in the proof of loss that "the fire originated from explosion of the boiler, fire ensuing afterwards," may be corrected on the trial by other evidence showing that there was a mistake in the proof of loss in that respect, and that the fire originated from another cause, where the assured has made an honest mistake as to the material fact in his proof of loss. Waldeck v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 129, 130.

In this case it further appeared that the agents of the company had ample notice of the mistakes in the proof of loss before the suit was commenced, and it was not shown that there was any surprise or that the company had been misled to its prejudice in defending on the merits. To the same effect, Stache v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 89, 35 Am. Rep. 772.

c. Amount of loss.

And the claimant is not estopped by the statement and proof of loss of the actual costs, from claiming a larger sum as the value of the goods, where the actual cost of the articles was required to be shown by a condition attached to the policy, and to be stated in the preliminary proofs, but the policy showed that the value of the property was to be deemed to be the cost at the time of the fire to replace it. Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 1 Robt. 501, 518.

The claimant is not limited in recovery by the amount of loss specified in the proof of loss where no fraud is shown. Bentley v. Standard F. Ins. Co. 40 W. Va. 729.

And the fact that the claimant has made out his proofs of loss and given them to the company's agent does not preclude him from recovering a greater sum than is set forth in the said proofs, for the reason that they do not work an estoppel. Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. 28, 34.

In the above case, the insured was allowed to prove a recovery upon a higher valuation than his former proofs of loss had shown, and to explain the reason for that higher valuation and mistake in the proof of loss.

If an estimate of the loss under a fire policy is made out by the claimant under the policy from his best recollection without his books before him, and there is no intention to deceive, he will be entitled to recover as the mistakes are honestly committed. Huckberger v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. 4 Biss. 265, 266.

In Schulter v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 62 Mo. 236, 238, it was said that if there is a difference between the amount claimed and that sworn to by the assured himself on the trial or established by the uncontradicted testimony in the case, it is a question for the jury to determine from all the circumstances in the case whether the deficiency was the result of accident, of honest error, or fraudulent intent on the part of the plaintiff in making the proof of loss, and there is no presumption of law or fact arising from the absence of satisfactory explanation of such deficiency that the plaintiff has for a fraudulent purpose sworn falsely in making his proof of loss, and no false swearing will forfeit the rights of the assured unless it be also fraudulent.

Mere mistakes in stating facts, or an overvaluation in making out proofs of loss, are not sufficient to sustain a defense to an action brought against the company upon the policy; it must appear that the erroneous statements or overvaluation were made intentionally and with a fraudulent intent. Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co. 43 N. J. L. 800, 311, 39 Am. Rep. 584.

And no sworn statement made by plaintiff in his proof of loss as to the value of buildings will have the effect of defeating his right to recover on the policy, unless it is made falsely and wilfully and for the purpose of deceiving the company. Walker v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 209.

And if the company refuses to act upon the proofs of loss, and repudiates all liability, the insured is not bound by the proofs of loss which make the amount less than that awarded to him by the court, as there is no element of estoppel in the case, and the action of the company puts him to legal proof. In such a case there is no ground, legal or equitable, upon which the company can insist on holding the insured to proofs which are only made with a view to adjustment without litigation, but which the company itself repudiates. Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co. 57 Mich. 14, 20.

So, the assured is not concluded by the statement of the amount of his loss as made in his proof of loss so as to render a verdict for more than his share of the amount excessive, especially where the company has refused to pay upon the basis of that amount; and in such a case he may recover upon the basis of the actual value of the property destroyed. Corkery v. Security F. Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 382.

When the assured has been compelled to bring a suit for loss, he has a right to prove the value of the articles omitted by mere inadvertence from his account submitted with the preliminary proof, but if the insurance company settles the loss promptly according to the account exhibited, the assured is bound by it in the absence of fraud. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Huckberger, 52 Ill. 464, 466; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 48 Ill. 31, 34.

So, if the omission from the preliminary proofs of loss of articles destroyed in the fire is inadvertent, and the claim is not paid, and the assured is obliged to sue, he is not prevented from claiming in his action for additional articles which he can prove were destroyed by the fire. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 48 Ill. 31, 34.

And if the insurance company has done nothing upon the faith of the proofs of loss by which it can be prejudiced if some articles not enumerated in the proof of loss are proved on the trial to have been lost, the insured may 44 L. R. A.

still recover for such property. Schmidt v. Mutual City & Village F. Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 432.

If a mistake is made in the proof of loss by reason of an underestimate of the total amount of loss, and the company has a right to demand an arbitration, but has acted upon such undervaluation by not demanding arbitration, the assured cannot recover upon a higher estimate of the loss, yet he is not estopped from proving the full amount of actual loss as the basis of recovery in the action upon the policy when no right to arbitrate is given by the policy and the company has lost nothing by such undervaluation. Case v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 82 Cal. 263, 268, 271.

In a case in which the original complaint and proof of loss stated the loss to be a given amount and the plaintiff upon the trial sought to amend his complaint so as to demand the amount specified in the policy which was considerably larger, it was held that the court did not improperly make use of its discretion in allowing him to amend his complaint by increasing the amount of his demand, as he was not estopped by his proof of loss, and especially as the evidence adduced at the trial showed that the claim was stated as a less amount in the proof of loss in order to obtain a speedy settlement. Maghan v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 24 Hun, 53, 61.

An assured who after the exhibition of his proof of loss and interest under a marine insurance presents a statement of his demands less in amount than what he is legally entitled to recover, is not estopped from claiming a larger amount if a settlement is not made pursuant to such statement. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. 399.

The appraisal of the value of the property which was not destroyed, by parties selected for that purpose, was held not to be conclusive as to the amount of the loss sustained so as to preclude evidence of the quantity, quality, and value of the property insured. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander, 156 Ill. 595, 598.

And there is no error in the court's permitting the claimant's witness to enumerate and state the value of certain articles alleged to have been destroyed by the fire not included in the proof of loss. Kahn v. Traders' Ins. Co. 4 Wyo. 419.

If a renewal is issued to the insured by way of a binding slip, and the company subsequently proposes a reduced insurance which is not accepted by the insured, and the slip is in force at the time of the fire, the insured may sue upon the binding slip, as there is no waiver of it on his part, or he may elect to rely upon the unaccepted offer of reduced insurance, as a waiver or election will not be imported by the mere fact that in his notice of loss, tender of premium, and proof of loss, he limited his demand to the sum proposed for reduced insurance. Van Tassel v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 151 N. Y. 130.

If the assured in making proof of loss acts in good faith, and in the honest belief that the property destroyed is worth the amount of the valuation placed upon it, and the excessive valuation is not intended to deceive or defraud the company, such overvaluation cannot be held to be fraudulent, and will not defeat recovery, and is not conclusive. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander, 156 Ill. 595, 598. To the same effect, Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 75 Ill. 548; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 92 U. S. 516, 23 L. ed. 740.

A mere mistake as to the value of the premises burned, in proving the loss where there is no actual fraud shown, only amounts to an estimate and opinion, and even if it is excessive will not prevent recovery under a policy upon the ground that the assured swore or made false statements contrary to the provisions of the policy, and such an expression of opinion is not a misstatement of a material fact. Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol, 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 301, 40 Am. Rep. 625.

So, the mere fact that the assured in the proof of loss has made an overvaluation of the property destroyed will not defeat a recovery on the policy for the actual loss sustained. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander, 156 Ill. 595, 598.

If there is an overvaluation by mistake or inadvertence a verdict can be found for such an amount of loss as has actually occurred, but if such an overvaluation is made knowingly and with a fraudulent intent there can be no recovery. Hickman v. Long Island Ins. Co. 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 374, wherein the point in contest was the amount of the loss which the company alleged was greatly exaggerated.

And a claimant who largely overstates the value of the property destroyed in the preliminary proofs of loss without any fraudulent intent, in consequence of his imperfect knowledge of the English language, under the direction of a person who aided him in making out the proofs, is not precluded from recovering upon the policy when the statement is made honestly and without any fraudulent intent, although it may be an extravagant valuation. Dodge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 501, 504.

Recovery has been sustained although much less than the amount of loss as estimated in the proof of loss. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Friedlander, 156 Ill. 595, 598. To the same effect, National Bank v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 95 U. S. 873; First Nat. Bank v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 24 L. ed. 563; Moore v. Protection F. Ins. Co. 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514; Dodge v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 501; Helbing v. Svea Ins. Co. 54 Cal. 158, 35 Am. Rep. 72.

In Dolan v. Aetna Ins. Co. 22 Hun, 396, it was insisted that the claimant in submitting the proof of loss violated the provision in the policy that any fraud or attempts at fraud on the part of the assured should cause a forfeiture of all claims. The proof of loss contained a claim on his own behalf for several articles used by the claimant's daughter, and the company contended that this worked a forfeiture of all claim under the policy. It was shown, however, that the agent of the company had knowledge of the fact, and that he had directed an appraisal of such property, and that it so came to be included in the proof of loss. It was held that the question of its insertion in the proof with a fraudulent intent was for the jury, and further, that the fact that the claimant in the proof of loss showed the damage to amount to a certain sum, and the appraisers estimated it at a much less sum, and also that claimant had told the company's agent that the property was worth a certain amount, when in point of fact it was worth much less, was not conclusive against the plaintiff as showing an attempt to defraud.

An instruction to the jury to the effect that the slightest possible exaggeration of the amount or value of the property destroyed or damaged will be sufficient to defeat the insured's claim, even if such exaggeration only amounts to a fraction of a cent, is properly refused. Hamburg v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 335, 339.

But the claimants were concluded by the amount of loss which they claimed in their proof, and could not upon the trial for the first time show the loss to be greater than the amount claimed in the proofs of loss, where 44 L. R. A.

the policy required the proof of loss to show the character and extent of the loss, and the proof furnished showed a loss of much less than 5 per cent, and no further proof was made or presented to the company before the commencement of the action some two years and a half afterwards. DeGrove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 607, 19 Am. Rep. 305.

In Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 307, 514, the company had made no objections to the sufficiency of the accounts furnished in the proof of loss, and by its answer had acquiesced in its truth, and rested upon the claim that if the facts so stated and sworn to were true it was not liable. It was therefore held that the claimant could not change his ground on the trial by impeaching the truth of his own statements, as the company had a right to take the facts as the claimant had stated them, and the claimant was therefore bound by the material facts stated in his affidavit of loss, and was concluded thereby.

See also cases cited supra, I.

d. Misstatements as to occupancy and use of premises.

The statement in the proof of loss under a fire policy that the premises were vacant will not preclude the plaintiff from showing at the trial the circumstances under which the house had been vacated. Cummins v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 260, 263, 23 Am. Rep. 111.

In this case the absence of the plaintiff, though for a considerable period, was temporary in its nature, and for a special purpose, and there was evidence that he still retained the house as his residence, and that in his absence his wife took care of it. The policy contained a condition that it should be void if the house became vacant upon the removal of the owner or occupant.

And the claimant's statement in the proof of loss that the premises were occupied in part by another company and the insured, and for no other purpose whatever, and that the fire originated in an adjoining building occupied by such company, and that there was no change in the occupancy since the insurance, does not afford conclusive evidence against him that the warranty that the premises were wholly occupied by him at the time of the insurance was broken, and he can adduce evidence to show exactly how the fact of occupancy was at the time of the insurance. Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 193, 196.

In Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Meyer, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 7, the proofs of loss furnished were admitted to be complete except that the same did not name the occupant of the dwelling at the time of the fire, but stated that the property was occupied as a dwelling without showing the name of the occupant. As, however, it did not appear that the name of the occupant was material, or that the omission of the name from the proofs of loss affected the real issues directly or remotely, the plaintiff was allowed to recover.

The proof of loss is not an admission that the property was unoccupied for ten days after a date mentioned therein, so as to come within the conditions of the policy by which, if the premises were unoccupied for more than ten consecutive days, the policy was to be void, so as to raise a presumption of a breach of the condition of the policy with respect to the occupancy of the building when insured, where it relates to the character of the occupancy, and not to the fact of occupancy. Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Parrotte, 47 Neb. 576.

And under a policy containing a clause that it was to be void if benzine was kept, used, or allowed on the premises, and the proofs of loss signed and sworn to were to state the claimant's knowledge and belief as to the origin of the fire, evidence is admissible to contradict a statement in the proofs that the claimant believed that the fire originated from benzine which accidentally turned over and caught fire while his wife was cleaning clothes, and to show that it was not benzine that was being used. White v. Royal Ins. Co. 8 Misc. 613.

In that case the company relied upon the cases of Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 10 Allen, 213, and Irving v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. 507, as supporting the theory that the evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that the proofs concluded the assured from contradicting or explaining the mistake in the proof of loss, but the court pointed out that those cases differed from the one then before the court for the reason that in them the actual facts were required to be set forth in the proofs, whereas in the case then before the court only the belief as to what facts had caused the fire was called for. The court further distinguished that case from DeGrove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 504, 19 Am. Rep. 305, upon the ground that the latter case only held that the plaintiff could not recover more than he filed a claim for under a proof of loss, and pointed out that that case did not intend to overrule Parmelee v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 193, and McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 223, 14 Am. Rep. 239, without referring to them in the opinion.

e. Misstatements as to ownership, etc.

The statement in the proof of loss that the property belonged to the claimant as "the legal heir of his wife" and "by purchase at auction" although it may be incorrect, is not of a fact so much as of a legal conclusion, and does not and cannot mislead under a policy which provides that all persons having a claim shall give immediate notice and render a proper account stating the ownership of the property insured, and that any fraud or attempt at fraud will forfeit the claim. Rohrbach v. Aetna Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 613.

So, a misstatement by the assured, made after the fire, with respect to his being the sole and unconditional owner of the property covered by the policy, when in fact it was subject to a mortgage of which the company's agent had notice when he issued the policy, is immaterial, and will not prevent a recovery in the absence of evidence showing it to be fraudulent. German Ins. Co. v. Luckett, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 130, 144.

In Parker v. Amazon Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 363, 370, a mistake in the proof of loss occurred through the negligence or inadvertence of the insurer, and consisted in not properly giving the names of the owners of the property, and the statement was signed in haste by one of the owners; the claimants were, however, allowed to recover upon the policy as the mistake was an innocent one.

And under a proof of loss filed out by the adjuster and showing that the insurer was the owner in fee simple, when in fact he claimed under a contract, which proof was not read over to the insured, evidence to the effect that he did not read the same, but supposed that it had been filled out properly, and that his claim was really under a contract, is admissible as it shows that the insured had an insurable interest in the property, and that the proof of loss would have been equally available had the insured stated the actual facts as to his ownership, and the company is not prejudiced by such misstatement. Star Union Lumber Co. v. Finney, 35 Neb. 214.

In a case in which the proof of loss upon which the insurance company bases its defense was prepared by the adjuster who knew the condition of the title of the property, and the evidence showed that the assured, although he signed and swore to the document, which was very lengthy, did not know that it stated that he was the owner in fee simple, and his evidence and that of his witnesses proved the contrary, it was held that although the assured was negligent in not reading and fully comprehending all that was in the proof of loss before he signed it, yet as there was no reason to believe that he intended or attempted to commit fraud upon the company, and no such fraud was committed, he was not precluded from recovering on his policy. Home Ins. Co. v. Mendenhall, 164 Ill. 458, 469, 38 L. R. A. 374, Affirming 64 Ill. App. 30. In this case it appeared that the agent of the company knew of the condition of the title and of the claimant's interest in the premises at the time the policy was issued.

In a case in which the insured in proof of loss made claim for the loss of property of which she was not the owner, and testified upon the trial that she included such property for the reason that the company's agent told her to make a list of the articles burned, which she did without any intention of defrauding, and supposed that they were included in the policy covering clothing and wearing-apparel, the court refused to disturb a verdict of the jury found in her favor under proper instructions. Tubbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 646, 653.

Where one testifies that he lost certain personal property covered by the policy and which he claimed as his own, and made two sworn statements, one covering his father's loss and the other his own, and his statements were introduced in evidence and he then testified that some of the articles in the statement as his own loss belonged to his father, he may show and testify that he did not state or intend to state that he owned such property, and that in so doing he made a mistake. Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 161.

In Schuster v. Dutchess County Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 260, an action was brought upon a policy covering a house and personal property. The proofs of loss were made and verified by one of the insured and contained an untrue statement of the plaintiff's ownership of the house. The company requested the court to charge that if the party made and delivered the proofs to the company, intending thereby to obtain from it the amount of insurance, knowing that the insured was not the owner of it, such false statements precluded a recovery, but the court refused to give such instruction, and its action was upheld as it involved the proposition that a false statement not fraudulently made, as to the real property, would defeat a recovery as to personal property.

A condition in the policy that any misrepresentations in any statement touching the loss or any false swearing of the party assured in the proofs of loss or otherwise shall cause a forfeiture will not preclude the claimant from recovering under the policy where he has by an honest mistake failed to give notice of an encumbrance which he did not believe to be a lien upon the premises, in the absence of a showing that the nondisclosure was fraudulent and willful. Thierolf v. Universal F. Ins. Co. 110 Pa. 37, 42.

In Huff v. Jewett, 20 Misc. 35, 37, the company contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover upon the ground, inter alia that he was not the sole owner of the property as asserted under oath in the proof of loss, for the reason that there was a mortgage upon the premises which he had not disclosed. The court held that as the fact of the existence of the mortgage was not material and in no wise affected the validity of the contract at the time it was entered into, the "false swearing" of the plaintiff in the former proofs of loss as to the ownership of the property had no bearing upon the question, and that he was entitled to recover.

In Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co. 43 N. J. L. 300, 811, 39 Am. Rep. 584, there was a condition in the policy that all fraud or attempts at fraud by false swearing or otherwise should cause forfeiture of all claims under the policy. It was claimed that the assured made false statements with regard to encumbrances upon the property, but as there was no proof of fraud the claimant was not precluded thereby.

1. Discrepancy as to building.

Where the description of the building in the proof of loss corresponds in other respects with that contained in the policy, and there is nothing to show that the insurer is misled or prejudiced by the error, the right of the assured to recover is not affected by the mistake in the proof of loss in regard to the number of the building. Faulkner v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. 171 Mass. 349, 351.

g. Other insurance.

So, the statement of the insured in the proof of loss submitted to the company, that he had other insurance on the same property, does not estop him from showing the contrary thereof though the contrary was true, and such declaration made is not conclusive evidence of the facts asserted, as an estoppel in pais does not arise,—especially where the company itself was bound to inquire for other existing facts, and to rely upon them to sustain its theory and in such a case the insured may show that there was a mistake in the proof of loss. McMaster v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239, Affirming 64 Barb. 536.

The policy of insurance in this case contained a condition that if the assured should have any other insurance on the property, etc., without notice to and consent of the company in writing, the policy should be null and void. The proofs of loss stated "that there was other insurance on the same property," and gave copies of the written part of the policies, but the claimant was not estopped by such statement as he did not declare in his proof of loss that he had other insurance, and only stated that there was an insurance, which statement he was bound to make by the terms of the policy as to the rendition of the proof of loss, and he had stated that which showed he had made the policy null and void, and had furnished to the company a defense upon which it must rely, and for this reason, therefore, the claimant was allowed to show that the other insurance was not upon the same property.

This case is distinguishable from the cases of First Incorporated Presby. Congregation v. Williams, 9 Wend. 147, and Sheppard v. Hamli- 44 L. R. A.

ton, 29 Barb. 156, for the reason that in each of those cases the claimant had an option of two causes of action in which to enforce his claim against the company, and was led by the declaration of the company, calculated to mislead, to take one which he could not afterwards forsake without injury, but which he must be defeated in and forsake if the company was permitted to falsify his declaration, and for the further reason that those cases did not go upon the ground that the declaration of the company led the claimant to sue, but upon the ground that he, having a valid claim which might be sued in one form or another, or upon one instrument or another, dependent upon the existence of a certain fact, led to the adoption by the claimant of one of those causes to abandon which would be an injury to him. The court distinctly pointed out that in the case then before it the company's situation as to its liability was not changed, and it did not appear that relying upon the defense supposed to be furnished by the statement in the proof of loss any other tenable offense had the go-by.

And the fact that the proofs of loss under a fire policy are made out and signed and sent to the company, and contain the statement that a certain policy covered a portion of the same property insured by the company, is not such an admission of an additional insurance as concluded the claimant upon that question from recovering upon the policy, and do not estop him from showing that it was made by mistake and that as a matter of fact there was no such additional insurance, although without any explanation such declaration would have such effect. Mead v. American F. Ins. Co. 13 App. Div. 476, 482.

In City Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 122 Mass. 165, 168, the proof of loss stated that there was other insurance upon the property, and the company contended that the insured was bound thereby and could not recover the full loss. The court held that if the proofs of loss furnished by the assured stated facts which constituted a defense, he could not contradict those facts at the trial unless he had furnished the assurers with an amended statement before the trial, but as in that case he did not contradict the facts stated in the proof of loss, the honest statement of the facts of the proof of loss could not enlarge the legal effect of the facts stated, and make them a defense if they would not otherwise be one.

h. Magistrate's certificate.

A magistrate's certificate produced by the assured in compliance with the conditions of his policy, as to proof of loss, is not the award of an arbitrator, or the certificate of a party by whose estimate the insurer expressly or impliedly agrees to be bound, but is merely the estimate of a party which the insurer sees fit to require by the conditions of the policy, and the insured furnishes such certificate as a performance of the condition, and not as admitting its accuracy or agreeing to be bound by it, and it is open to him notwithstanding such certificate to establish by witnesses the true amount of the loss. Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 126 Ill. 329. E. W.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,v.
Iver JENSEN.

(56 Neb. 284.)

- *1. An insurance contract is a personal one between insured and insurer.
2. A provision in a fire-insurance policy that it should cease to be in effect if the insured conveyed the title of the insured property without the insurer's consent, is a reasonable and valid one.
3. An insured and his wife conveyed by warranty deed the insured property to their son, who at the same time conveyed the premises by warranty deed to the wife of the insured. This transaction occurred in pursuance of an agreement between the husband and wife that the latter should hold the title to the insured property in trust for her husband. The insurance policy provided that it should cease to be in force "in case any change shall take place in the title of the assured." Held, that the conveyance terminated the contract of insurance.

(October 5, 1898.)

ERROR to the District Court for Saunders County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Halleck F. Rose and Wellington H. England, for plaintiff in error:

The deeds in this case stand as written admissions opposed to the testimony of the witnesses, and presenting a question of fact which the jury only can determine.

Kavanagh v. Wilson, 70 N. Y. 177; Nicholson v. Conner, 8 Daly, 212; Lewis v. State, 88 Ala. 13; Smith v. Logan, 52 Neb. 590; Linton v. Cooper, 53 Neb. 400; Murphey v. Virgin, 47 Neb. 693; Tracey v. State, 46 Neb. 365.

Neither husband nor wife is competent to testify in any case as to any communication between them made while the marriage subsisted.

Lihs v. Lihs, 44 Neb. 143; French v. Wade, 35 Kan. 391.

Parol evidence is not admissible to establish an express trust.

Farrington v. Barr, 36 N. H. 86; Hansen v. Borthelsen, 19 Neb. 440.

On all the proofs Mrs. Jensen by the deed acquired an insurable interest in the property.

This being established, it follows, as a matter of law, that the risk has been materially affected and the hazard increased, so that the company is no longer bound by the policy.

*Headnotes by RAGAN, C.

NOTE.—The above decision is somewhat novel in its discussion of the effect of the statute of uses.

As to the change of title to insured property, see Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 40 L. R. A. 845, and Forward v. Continental Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 637. 44 L. R. A.

Oakes v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 164; Baldwin v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164; Langdon v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 22 Minn. 193; Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kettler 24 Ill. App. 188; Milwaukee Trust Co. v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 95 Wis. 192; Dadmun Mfg. Co. v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 1. Met. 434; Savage v. Howard Ins. Co. 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741.

On rehearing.

The statute of uses is not in force in Nebraska.

In the published reports of this court there is to be found no recognition of the statute of uses. It has never been held here that a cestui que trust takes the legal estate, or that the trustee cannot hold title in fee.

The uniform practice has been to decree the execution of the trust in equity.

Hoehne v. Breitkreitz, 5 Neb. 110; Bear v. Koenigstein, 16 Neb. 65; Jones v. Johnson Harvester Co. 8 Neb. 446; Carter v. Gibson, 29 Neb. 324; Thomas v. Churchill, 48 Neb. 266; Dailey v. Kinsler, 35 Neb. 835; Blodgett v. McMurtry, 39 Neb. 210; Leader v. Tierney, 45 Neb. 753; Hewes v. Kenney, 43 Neb. 815.

The statute of uses is inconsistent with the statutes of Nebraska establishing rules of conveyancing, evidently designed to be complete and to cover the whole subject.

Helfenstine v. Garrard, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, 275; Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 609.

Messrs. Clark & Allen for defendant in error.

RAGAN, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an error proceeding instituted in this court by the Farmers' & Merchants' Insurance Company to review a judgment of the district court of Saunders county pronounced against it in favor of Iver Jensen. Jensen, in his petition, declared upon an ordinary insurance policy. The insurer interposed as a defense to the action that the contract of insurance provided that it should cease to be in force "in case any change shall take place in the title . . . of the assured in the above-mentioned property" without the consent of the insurer thereto indorsed on the policy; that after the delivery of the policy the insured—his wife joining therein—conveyed the real estate on which the insured property was situate by ordinary warranty deed to one John H. Jensen, and that the latter afterwards, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the insured property to the wife of the insured; all without the knowledge or consent of the insurer. The insured attempted to meet this defense by a reply admitting the conveyance of the title by the insured to John H. Jensen, and by him to the wife of the insured, but alleging that these conveyances were made in pursuance of an agreement between the insured and his wife that the latter should and would hold the title to the property for the use and benefit of the insured, and subject to his direction and control. The judgment of the district court cannot stand. The provision in the policy that it should cease to be in force if a change should take place in the title of the insured without the consent of the insurer is a valid and reasonable provision. An insurance contract is a personal one between the insured and the insurer. An insurance company might be very willing to guarantee against loss or damage of his property by fire, but unwilling to furnish such a guaranty to A's vendee; and it is for this reason that such a provision as the one under consideration is inserted in fire-insurance policies, so that, in case the insured shall transfer his title, the insurer may have notice thereof, and an opportunity to elect whether it will keep the policy in force in favor of the grantee or vendee. And it is because the courts recognize such a provision in an insurance policy to be a personal contract between the insurer and the insured that they hold that the violation thereof by the insured terminates the contract of insurance. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ketterlin, 24 Ill. App. 188; Langdon v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 22 Minn. 193; Oakes v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 164; J. B. Ehrsam Mach. Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 43 Neb. 554.

Counsel for the defendant in error insist that, since the wife of the insured holds the legal title to the insured property in trust for him, there has been no violation of the provision of the policy under consideration by the assured. This contention we think untenable. The provision of the policy is that, if any change should take place in the title of the assured, the policy should cease to be in force. Certainly, the execution and delivery of the warranty deed by the assured and his wife to John H. Jensen vested the latter with the legal title to these premises; and the execution and delivery by the latter of the warranty deed to the wife of the assured vested her with the legal title to these premises. There has been, then, a change in the title of the assured. The authorities cited by counsel for defendant in error do not sustain their contention. One of these cases is Grable v. German Ins. Co. 32 Neb. 645. In that case the assured, without the knowledge or consent of the insurer, entered into a contract in writing, agreeing to sell the insured property, and make a conveyance thereof, upon the payment of certain sums of money in future by the purchaser. This contract was interposed as a defense to a suit on the insurance policy, but the insurance company was held liable upon the ground that the contract agreeing to sell and convey was not an alienation of the title to the property. Another case cited is Bailey v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 250. In that case the policy was issued to a mortgagee. He subsequently became the owner of the insured property, after which it was destroyed by fire. In a suit upon the policy the insurance company interposed the defense of a change of title without its knowledge or consent, but the court held that a mere increase of his interest in the insured property was not a change of title within the meaning of the contract.

44 L. R. A.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Harrison, Ch. J., on May 3, 1899, handed down the following response:

In an action instituted in the district court of Saunders county, the defendant in error recovered a judgment, which, on hearing in the error proceeding in this court, was reversed. A motion for a rehearing was sustained, not on the questions decided in the former opinion (56 Neb. 284) but to allow argument as to whether the rule of the statute of uses is in force or is of the law of this state. We are satisfied of the correctness of the former decision, and, relative to the points therein determined, announce at this time our adherence to what was then stated.

The issues presented by the pleadings in the suit were succinctly set forth in the former opinion, and we will reproduce the statement: "Jensen, in his petition, declared upon an ordinary insurance policy. The insurer interposed as a defense to the action that the contract of insurance provided that it should cease to be in force 'in case any change shall take place in the title, . . . of the assured in the above-mentioned property' without the consent of the insurer thereto indorsed on the policy; that after the delivery of the policy the insured,—his wife joining therein—conveyed the real estate on which the insured property was situate by ordinary warranty deed, to one John H. Jensen, and that the latter afterwards, by an ordinary warranty deed, conveyed the insured property to the wife of the insured,—all without the knowledge or consent of the insurer. The insured attempted to meet this defense by a reply admitting the conveyance of the title by the insured to John H. Jensen, and by him to the wife of the insured, but alleging that these conveyances were made in pursuance of an agreement between the insured and his wife that the latter should and would hold the title to the property for the use and benefit of the insured, and subject to his directions and control." The argument now is that the use, by reason of the operation of the rule of law embodied in what is termed "the statute of uses," was executed, and the title to the property was in Iver Jensen; that there was no change of title or interest; and the agreement of the policy of insurance was not violated, and the policy remained in force. The statute of uses is in part as follows: "Where any person or persons stand or be seised . . . of and in any . . . lands, tenements, . . . or other hereditaments, to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or persons, or of any body politic, . . . every such person and persons, and bodies politic, that have or hereafter shall have any such use, confidence, or trust, in fee simple, fee tail, for term of life, or for years, or otherwise, . . . shall from henceforth stand and be seised, deemed, and adjudged in lawful seisin, estate, and possession of and in the same . . . lands, tenements, . . . and hereditaments, . . . of and in such like estates as they had or shall have in use, trust, or confidence of or in the same; and that the estate, title, right, and possession that was in such person or persons that were or hereafter shall be seised of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to the use, confidence, or trust of any such person or persons, or of any body politic, be from henceforth clearly deemed and adjudged to be in him or them that have, or hereafter shall have, such use, confidence, or trust, after such quality, manner, form, and condition as they had before in or to the use, confidence, or trust that was in them." Stat. 27 Hen. VIII. chap. 10. Counsel for defendant in error gives this exemplification of its effect: "If A owning real estate, shall convey or will it to B under an agreement between them that, notwithstanding the conveyance, A or some other person or corporation shall have the rents and profits arising from the real estate, notwithstanding the conveyance made by A under that agreement, he shall still have the title he had before he made the conveyance."

We deem it scarcely within our province, or necessary herein, if we felt equal to the task, to trace and set forth the evolution of transfers, conveyances of property, or titles thereto, from the early, primitive, and simple methods employed, down through, and following, the intricacies and complexities which came into being or existence when, as time advanced, the desires, designs, and ingenuities of mankind were drawn into and displayed therein. These may be sought in the commentaries and cases on the subject. Statutes were enacted by the proper bodies, one, and probably the main, aim, at least, of which was apparently to discountenance and discourage or prohibit what were deemed vicious practices in conveyancing, or, rather, to avoid the results condemned as pernicious of the conveyances. One of the statutes was that of uses. It has been said that the doctrine of the statute of uses is in force in the most of the United States, either by re-enactment or by adoption; and, where it has been expressly declared not of force, a knowledge of its doctrine is necessary to understand and apply the common or statutory forms of conveyances. 1 Perry, Tr. 4th ed. § 299, in a note to which there are statements of the condition of the law on the subject in many of the states of the Union; Walker, American Law, 311. In 2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 438, it is stated: "It would be difficult to define, with any satisfactory degree of accuracy, the extent to which the doctrine of uses has been applied in the systems of conveyance adopted by the several states of this country. In few, if any, of these are there any prescribed forms of deeds which it is necessary to follow in executing conveyances of lands. In a large proportion of them the form is that of bargain and sale, though other forms which clearly indicate the intention of the grantor to pass the estate are held sufficient." It is further said, on page 440: "It may be stated generally, that the cases in which resort has been had to the doctrine of uses have been where the parties, in undertaking to convey lands, have failed to follow the form in use in the state, or have undertaken, by a form borrowed from the common law, to create an interest like a freehold in futuro, for instance, which could not be done by construing the conveyance as one deriving its validity from the common law, and resort has been had to the doctrine of uses in order to effectuate the intention of the parties." See further, Hill, Trustees, Wharton's ed. 233, note; 4 Kent, Com. 299-301. For an article on "The English Doctrine of Uses, as an Element of the American Law of Conveyance," see 5 Am. L. Reg. p. 641, and a second article in 6 Am. L. Reg. p. 65. These citations will suffice, at least, to direct to sources from which a full study of the subject may be made. The statute of uses and other parliamentary acts were modifications of the common law. The common law is composed of ancient maxims and customs. 1 Bl. Com. Cooley's 3d ed. *67.

A question which is here somewhat pertinent is, What has been adopted or is in force in this country,—the common law or the common law with statutory modifications? It has been stated by the Massachusetts court generally, and particularly in reference to the statute of uses: "The statute of uses being in force in England when our ancestors came here, they brought it with them, as an existing modification of the common law, and it has always been considered a part of our law." Marshall v. Fisk, 6 Mass. 24, 4 Am. Dec. 76. It has been observed "that English statutes passed before the emigration of our ancestors applicable to our situation, or an amendment or amelioration of the common law, are part and parcel of the common law of this country." 5 Am. L. Reg. 644, citing 2 Salk. 441; Journal of Congress, Oct. 14, 1774; Patterson v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 8 L. ed. 108. "Conflicting theories as to the origin of law in the North American Colonies have been entertained, but, whatever be the true one, it is well settled that, speaking broadly, the law of England, as it existed at the time of the colonial settlements, is the basis of the law of all the states, with the single exception of Louisiana." 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1035, 1036, and notes. In a decision filed March 30, 1897, it was said by the supreme court of Utah that "while the statute of uses never became a part of the English common law, and has never been adopted by the legislature of this state, the rule of law that vests a passive or naked trust in the person having the use is a part of the common law of this state." Henderson v. Adams, 15 Utah, 30. The supreme court of Vermont, in an opinion written by Redfield, J., expressed itself on the subject of the statute of uses, holding it not in force, as follows: "But so far as the conveyance of lands in this state is concerned, it seems to me that our statutes are fully adequate to all the ordinary incidents of the subject, and that in those extraordinary occasions, where the statute of uses might answer a good end, it will be safer, and better every way, to have resort to a court of equity, than to introduce a portion of the ancient common-law system of conveying real estate, most of the incidents of which having been materially modified, even in England, since the separation of this country from that, it would become necessary immediately to resort to very extensive legislation, in order to render this addition to our present laws even tolerable. This view is certainly confirmed by the history of our jurisprudence upon this subject. Nothing ever existed in the history of this state calling, in the slightest degree, for the use of such a statute, except in those cases where, by some mistake, the parties have failed fully to effect their intention in the prescribed mode. The statute of uses would no doubt aid somewhat this class of cases. But its original purpose and design had not the remotest bearing or purpose in that direction even. And to adopt a portion of a system of laws which will in its train, very likely, draw in the whole, for the mere purpose of effecting some collateral purpose in a particular cause, seems almost absurd. We entertain no doubt that our system of conveyancing, so different from the English, so simple and intelligible to all, and so intended to be, by means of a thorough system of registry, from the very first, was designed to be entire in itself. And although most of its terms, and many of its forms of deeds even, like that of bargain and sale, derived their meaning and operation to some extent, from the common law and the English statutes, and that of uses among others, yet it was no doubt the purpose of the framers of our laws upon conveyancing to have them 'understanded' of the people, without the necessity of resorting to the study of the subject in other quarters. Such has been the practical construction of the subject by all, professional or unprofessional, ever since. With rare exceptions, the profession in this state have never supposed any of the common-law modes of conveyancing could be regarded as in force here. The attempt to bar an entail, in this state, by a common recovery, or the rights of a married woman, by a fine, would, I think, strike the profession with some surprise." Gorham v. Daniels, 23 Vt. 609. In the state of Ohio, in 1826, in an opinion in the case of Doe, Thompson, v. Gibson, 2 Ohio, 339, it was stated: "The court were divided in opinion upon the point whether the statute of uses (27 Hen. VIII. chap. 10), had ever been in force in Ohio. Two judges held that that statute was in force in Ohio from 1795 to January 1806, for all the purposes that it was in force in Virginia or England. The other two judges held differently." In 1835 the question was again under consideration by the Ohio court and the statute was decided not in force at any time in the state. It was said in the opinion: "After a political organization, and the administration of justice by courts, within the state of Ohio, for a period of forty-eight years, we find no traces of the authority of the statute of uses at this time as a rule of property, and no distinction is known in practice between uses and trusts. And none seems necessary, since uses in our construction are not attended with those exceptionable privileges which they possessed in England before the statute, and every quality of trusts is attached to them. Our system of conveyancing, although 44 L. R. A.

it has grown out of the English system, does not depend upon the statute of uses, but has taken its form and derives its authority from our own statutes and local usages. Under these circumstances, the recognition of the power of this statute is not only unnecessary, but would be mischievous, by the introduction of new and complex rules of property." Helvestine v. Garrard, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 276.

We presume we are to ascertain whether the statute of uses is a component part of the law of this state. To appropriate some expressions of a quotation in the article in 5 Am. L. Reg. 641: "The consideration of what is reasonable or unreasonable makes no part of this question. We are inquiring now what the law is, not what it ought to be. Reason may be applied to show the impropriety or expediency of a law, but we must have either statute or precedent to show the existence of it. Junius, Letter XVI." It has been enacted by our legislative body: "So much of the common law of England as is applicable and not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States with the organic law of this territory, or with any law passed or to be passed by the legislature of this territory is adopted and declared to be law within said territory." Comp. Stat. chap. 15. In terms and ordinary import, the foregoing appears to be of the "common law of England," and not of the statutory laws, or of the former as modified by the latter. This state has statutory rules for conveyancing which include some directions for construction of instruments. See chapters 32 and 73, Comp. Stat., section 50 of the latter of which is as follows: "Every conveyance of real estate shall pass all the interest of the grantor therein, unless a contrary intent can be reasonably inferred from the terms used." This statutory system of conveyancing would seem sufficiently complete within and of itself and to have been intended so, and that this is true seems to have been concluded by the acts and opinions of the people, the practitioners, and the courts. We know of no instance of an authorizedly expressed or recorded opinion to the contrary. It is true that no specific form of conveyance is prescribed, and doubtless many or any sufficient may be employed; and it is also safe to say that, in construing any form which may be adopted by any parties, any and all rules generally applicable to like forms of conveyancing, in the ascertainment of the intent, may be pertinent, regardless of the doctrines in which the rules may have originated; but the statute of uses, in its direct action and execution of a use and absolute establishment of the results of conveyances, is not of the law of our system of conveyancing, as a statute or law. It has not been and is not recognized. In the case at bar, its effect, if allowed to prevail, would be to declare that the parties, by their conveyances, had accomplished just the opposite of what they therein asserted in unequivocal terms that they intended or did. If we thought that such was the law, it would be our duty so to say, but, believing differently, we must so state. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Fourth Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1898, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS; ASSOCIATIONS; FRANCHISES.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARIES OR REPRESENTATIVES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

The addition of an enacting clause to a bill by a clerk of one branch of the legislature, to which the bill was sent from another house, is held void when no definite action was taken on it by the legislative body. (Mich.) 164.

A statute applicable to a particular county, changing the law as to jury trials, is held to violate a constitutional provision requiring uniformity in all laws of a general nature. (Ohio) 264.

The constitutionality of an extraordinary call of the legislature by the governor, attacked on the ground that no extraordinary occasion existed, is upheld on the ground that the governor's discretion in the matter is not reviewable. (Kan.) 464.

Parliamentary law.

A vote put by one of the members of a board, after the mayor, who was its presiding officer, had held the motion out of order and refused to put it, is held altogether void, although four of the five members entitled to vote supported it. (Conn.) 197.

Courts.

The duty of a judge to decide with respect to the issuance of a license upon application and objection, and upon hearing evidence, is held to be judicial, and not merely executive or administrative. (Md.) 485.

Taxation.

Taxation of telegraph and telephone lines by assessment fixed by a state board at the average rate of all taxes (general, municipal, and local) levied throughout the state during the previous year is held to be in violation of the constitutional rule of uniformity. (Mich.) 679.

Public Improvements.

See also infra, II.

Conferring power on municipal corporations to improve streets at the expense of the abutting owners is held not to violate the 44 L. R. A.

Texas Constitution, and a street-railway company is required to pave between its rails and for 6 inches each side. (Tex.) 716.

County.

See also infra, II.

The liability of a county for the lynching of a person, under the South Carolina Constitution and statute, is held to extend to the lynching of a person who was not a prisoner. (S. C.) 734.

A state is held to be estopped to deny the legal creation of a county, when for four years it has been recognized as such by every department of the state government. (Idaho) 122.

Municipal corporations.

A municipal corporation is held not liable for imprisonment of a person under sentence for violation of an ordinance, by a municipal court, although its judgment was erroneous, or even void. (Ga.) 795.

Reward.

The power of a city to offer a reward for testimony to secure the conviction of incendiaries is held to be within the general-welfare clause. (Mich.) 677.

The right of a sheriff to a reward for making an arrest within his county for an offense committed therein is denied on grounds of public policy. (Ill.) 809.

License.

An ordinance requiring a license for the purchase of claims is held unconstitutional as to a purchaser of unpaid claims against a city merely as an investment. (Ky.) 141.

An ordinance requiring a license for the business of contracting for public improvements is held unconstitutional as tending to a monopoly and to the increase of the burden of property owners on whom the cost of improvements is assessed by the frontage rule. (Ky.) 135.

RÉSUMÉ OF DECISIONS.
(CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.)

Houses of ill fame.

An ordinance changing the limits beyond which houses of prostitution are prohibited is held constitutional, although property is depreciated by being brought within such limits by the change. (La.) 90.

Pest house.

The liability of a city for the establishment of a pest house near a residence is sustained, notwithstanding the fact that a statute makes officers expressly liable therefor, without any provision as to the city. (Ky.) 474.

Ferries.

A municipal corporation is held not to be liable for negligent operation of a ferry in its name by the common council, without lawful authority. (La.) 477.

Police.

Death from accident is held not to be from natural causes under a statute providing a fund for families of policemen. (Cal.) 114.

Highways.

An injunction against telephone poles in streets was sustained when there was an attempt to erect them without any permit, and the fact that there were no ordinances or regulations on the subject was held immaterial. (Wis.) 565.

Riding a tricycle on a sidewalk is held not to be within the scope of an ordinance prohibiting bicycles on sidewalks, or another ordinance against beasts of burden or vehicles on sidewalks. (Iowa) 821.

Parks.

Public parks maintained at public expense, as well as buildings and appliances necessary to meet the demands of a fire department, are held to be within the terms of a constitutional provision exempting from taxation public property used for public purposes. (Ky.) 202.

Railway crossing.

Imperious necessity for an additional crossing of a street railway and a steam railroad at grade is held not to be shown by the fact that traffic has so increased that the present crossings are not sufficient to enable cars to be moved quickly; and the fact that the expense of avoiding the grade crossing would be very great is held immaterial, if it was reasonably practicable to make an overhead crossing. (Pa.) 269.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Arbitration.

A deposit to secure payment of an award is held forfeited on revocation of the arbitration, and subject to payment of the damages allowed by statute for revoking it, although it was made by a third person, who committed no breach of the agreement and had no control over the one who did so. (N. Y.) 227.

Assignment.

An assignee of accounts and other choses in action, who buys them in good faith, gets possession, and gives notice to the debtors, is held to have a perfect legal title as against a prior assignee, who did not give notice to the debtors or obtain possession of the accounts, but left them with the assignor for collection. (Cal.) 632.

The assignability of a cause of action for personal injuries is denied in an Illinois case on rehearing, thereby reversing the first decision, and it is also held that a contract to divest the party in whose name the action is brought, and to whom it belongs, of the right to control or compromise it, is void. (Ill.) 177.

Curing defects.

A statute curing defects in the acknowledgment and record of a deed of trust is held ineffectual to give it priority over a judgment lien which had been acquired before the defects were cured, on the ground that the displacement of his lien would impair the contract of the judgment creditor. (Va.) 306.

Bills, notes, and checks.

The existence of a debt due by the drawee of a bill of exchange to the payee is held a sufficient consideration to bind the drawer upon his promise to pay the bill and render him liable for the amount, although he was a stranger to the debt. (Ky.) 664.
44 L. R. A.

The right of a bank to send a check for collection directly to the drawee is denied, even if there is a custom of banks authorizing it. (Minn.) 504.

But in Oregon a custom of banks to send checks directly to the drawee bank for collection is held reasonable,—at least as applied to a plain, unindorsed check. (Or.) 236.

For the negligence of a notary who was the assistant cashier of a bank, in failing to give proper notice to an indorser of an inland draft which the bank held for collection, it is held that the bank is not liable, although no protest of the draft was necessary, where the statutes recognized the giving of notices as part of the official duty of a notary when protesting paper. (Iowa) 133.

The liability of the drawee bank to bear the loss when it pays a forged check is enforced notwithstanding the forgery of the first indorsement on the check and the possible negligence of the party who first cashes it and puts it in circulation. (Iowa) 131.

Pledge.

The pledgee of a promissory note is held entitled to enforce it against the maker only to the extent of his claim against the pledgor,—at least where the maker has a valid defense against the pledgor. (Mont.) 243.

Bonds of county.

The doctrine as to the rights of bona fide holders is held inapplicable to county bonds issued under authority of an unconstitutional statute, notwithstanding recitals in the bonds. (N. C.) 252.

Champerty.

The right of an attorney to contract for compensation contingent upon his success and payable by percentage or otherwise out of the proceeds of the litigation is sustained, but it is held that his agreement, made prior to the suit, to pay the fees and costs thereof, renders the contract invalid, though this invalidity could not be asserted by one who was not a party to the contract. (Utah) 285.

Brokers.

A real-estate broker who produces a purchaser, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale, is held entitled to his commissions, whether the contract is actually enforced or not. (Neb.) 593.

Carriers.

The abandonment of a steamer trip from Seattle to Dawson after the steamer has reached Ft. Yukon, because the water in the Yukon river is too low, is held to require the steamer company to bring a passenger back to Seattle without charge, instead of leaving him through the winter in the Alaskan climate to await the completion of his trip the following summer. (Wash.) 557.

A contract to indemnify a common carrier against losses occurring from injuries to passengers carried by it is held not to be invalid as against public policy because it covers losses resulting from negligence. (N. J.) 213.

Theft of a valise taken through a window of a sleeping car while the train was running slowly at the crossing of another railroad is held not to make the carrier liable, where the back door of the car was locked, and the conductor and porter were guarding the front door, while the passenger was in the smoking car. (Ga.) 790.

Insurance.

The interest of a person to whom insurance on his father's life is payable, if his mother be not living at the father's death, is vested, though contingent, and will descend to his widow and children on his death during the mother's life. (Mich.) 689.

The murder of a person whose life is insured by an assignee of the policy, whose interest extends only to reimbursement for premiums paid, is held not to forfeit the policy altogether, but only the assignee's interest in it. (Va.) 305.

Proofs of loss as to the cause of death, made in good faith upon information from an attendant and physician, are held insufficient to estop the beneficiary in a life-insurance policy from showing that death resulted from a different cause. (Mich.) 846.

Insurance of an employer against injury to employees, providing for payment to him for their benefit, is held to give no right of action to the personal representatives of an employee,—at least after a claim against the employer for negligence on account of the accident has been paid. (N. Y.) 512.

Guaranteeing the fidelity of officers and the performance of contracts is held to be insurance, within the meaning of a statute excepting insurance from the kinds of business for which corporations may be formed, although, when the statute was passed, such kinds of insurance were not known. (Ill.) 124.

The value of property which an insurer must pay to the purchaser who is in possession and has mostly paid the purchase price, although the title still remains in the vendor, is the cost to him, and not to the seller. (Pa.) 272.

Relief fund.

A contract by which a railroad employee is allowed his option between an action for damages against the employer or a claim on a relief fund, but denying him both, is held not to be within the prohibition of a statute against contracts to relieve a railroad company from liability for injury to an employee. (Ind.) 638.

By equal division of the court, it is held that an election by a railroad employee to take the benefits of a relief fund instead of bringing an action for damages against his employer shall operate to release the company, and that a contract giving him such option is not against public policy. (S. C.) 645.

Lease.

The retention of one room in a leased building for a few days because it is occupied by a member of the family who is too ill to be moved is held not to create a liability for a new term except for the time that the building is actually occupied. (N. Y.) 703.

Paving contract.

The bond of a street contractor to a city for the repair of a street for five years is held beyond the scope of the power of the city. (Or.) 527.

But a paving contract which requires all repairs within ten years which are necessary because of defects in the work or materials to be paid for by the contractor is upheld under a statute which requires a city to pay for all ordinary repairs. (Neu.) 534.

So, a contract requiring a street contractor to guarantee the durability of the pavement made by him for five years, and to repair at a stated price all openings made in the street during the same time, is held valid in New Jersey. (N. J.) 540.

III. CORPORATIONS; ASSOCIATIONS; FRANCHISES.

See also infra, VIII., as to Mandamus, and IX., as to Criminal Contempt.

The extension of corporate charters after the adoption of a law making all grants to corporations subject to amendment is held to make such charters subject thereto, notwithstanding irrevocable exemptions in the original charters. (Ky.) 825.
44 L. R. A.

Compelling operation.

The duty to operate a street railway which has been abandoned is held not to be a legal duty enforceable by writ of mandate, where the ordinances gave the privilege of using the streets subject to forfeiture, but without providing expressly that the line must be operated. (Mont.) 692.

(DOMESTIC RELATIONS. FIDUCIARIES OR REPRESENTATIVES. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.)

Stock.

A purchaser of corporate stock at execution sale, with notice of a pledge to a third person, is held to take it subject to the pledgee's rights, though the pledge was not entered on the books of the company. (Mich.) 163.

Directors' liability.

The liability of directors of a corporation for the maintenance of a nuisance by storage of explosives in violation of law is held to depend upon their exercise of due care in the management of the business to prevent the maintenance of such a nuisance. (Mont.) 508.

Bank directors who have no reason to distrust the integrity or efficiency of their cashier are held not to be required to procure periodical expert examination of the books before dividends are declared or reports made to the comptroller of the currency, but they are required to cause examination of the discounted paper of the bank with reasonable frequency so as to keep informed about it and be able to pass intelligent judgment upon its value. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 761.

Building and loan associations.

The issuance of preferred stock by a building and loan association is held to be void as against public policy. (Ky.) 659.

The right to apply dues paid upon stock upon a mortgage to an insolvent loan association is denied in North Dakota. (N. D.) 261.

Winding up.

The preference of a debt by an insolvent corporation is held lawful, although the creditor is stockholder, director, and president of the company. (Ala.) 766.

A receiver of a bank is held not to be liable for a trust fund deposited in the bank in preference to the claims of other creditors, unless that fund can be identified or traced. (Mich.) 493.

Taxes assessed against a partnership are held not to be payable out of the assets of a corporation subsequently formed to carry on the business until after the payment of all corporate debts other than those which consisted of obligations of the partnership which had been assigned by the corporation. (Conn.) 786.

The person who is allowed to have full control and management of the business of a corporation is held entitled to make an assignment for its creditors. (Mich.) 844.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

The power of the court to allow a gross sum out of the husband's estate as a part of the permanent alimony of the wife in addition to a monthly allowance is sustained under statutes authorizing an allowance which the court may deem just and reasonable. (Wis.) 725.

The custody of an infant held under an agreement with the parent, which is not binding on the infant, is held to be nevertheless such as the court may uphold in the interest of the child. (S. C.) 277.

The restoration to their parents of children who have been duly committed to a charitable institution is held to be within the general powers of the New York supreme court as a court of chancery, and also authorized by statute. (N. Y.) 699.

V. FIDUCIARIES OR REPRESENTATIVES.

Settlement of a suit brought by an infant and a discharge of a judgment already entered therein, by the infant's attorney of record, although he had been discharged, is held binding on the infant, although the attorney absconded with the proceeds. (N. H.) 167.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

The unsoundness of mind of a co-conspirator is held ineffectual to relieve the others from liability for injury caused by the conspiracy. (Ind.) 129.

One who drew another in front of him to serve as a shield against a threatened explosion is held not to be liable for the injuries sustained by the person grasped by him, which resulted from the explosion, when that was caused by a third party, and there is nothing to show that he would not have received the same injuries if he had not been drawn out of his original position to shield the other person. (N. Y.) 216.

Sale of poison.

The duty of druggists to put a label marked "poison" on every poisonous substance is held not to extend to medicines compounded 44 L. R. A.

from a physician's prescription. (Tenn.) 540.

Dangerous premises.

The maintenance of dangerous machinery on private grounds, unprotected from the visits of trespassing children, is held such negligence as will render the owner liable, if he knows that children and others are accustomed to frequent the place and climb upon the structures which support the dangerous machinery. (Kan.) 655.

Leaving a shattered pane of glass in a window above a sidewalk is held to be negligence creating liability to a person who is injured by the fall of the glass during a wind. (Mich.) 500.

The landlор who takes the platform from a well in order to put it in proper condition, and leaves the well open and unguarded a few feet from the kitchen door, is held liable to a guest of his tenant who falls into the well in the night. (Ind.) 815.

The lessor of a building which has a door opening at some height into space, and unprovided with bars or guards, is held not to be liable for an injury to a person who steps out of it while the lessee is in possession of the premises. (Tex.) 279.

Gas.

Furnishing natural gas at a pressure so great that it sets a building on fire is held to be negligence for which a gas company is liable. (W. Va.) 92.

False imprisonment.

The unreasonable refusal of a passenger who tendered a mileage ticket to tell the conductor whether the name thereon was his own or not is held to be no justification for the conductor's procurement of his arrest without a warrant on a charge of fraudulently evading payment of fare, but the passenger's fault was held sufficient to prevent his recovering more than nominal damages for the false imprisonment. (Me.) 673.

Passenger's negligence.

Riding on the front of the platform of an electric street car is held not negligence as matter of law. (Me.) 107.

Carrier's negligence.

A woman with a transfer ticket approaching a street car to get on, when she is injured by the breaking of a trolley pole as a motorman was changing it for reversing the direction of the car, is held to be a passenger, to whom the high degree of care required of common carriers is due. (Pa.) 546.

The duty of a railroad company to stop a train and rescue a passenger who has fallen or been thrown from it and is likely to perish or suffer great injury if not rescued is held to exist only when this can be done without risk of collision with other trains. (Ky.) 823.

Permitting salt water to run through pens provided by a carrier for live stock is held such negligence as to render the carrier liable for injuries thereby caused to animals placed in the pens. (Va.) 299.

Failure of a railroad company carrying horses or mules from one state to another to comply with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, by unloading the stock for rest, food, and water after being confined twenty-eight hours is held to make the carrier liable for negligence in an action in a state court, and the statute is held applicable to horses and mules as well as to animals used for food. (Va.) 449.

Negligence of contractor.

Employing an independent contractor to excavate near a neighbor's house and several feet below its foundations, in a populous city, is held not to relieve the proprietor from the duty of seeing that the contractor uses due care, or else notifying the neighbor in order that he may protect his own house. (Md.) 482.

Running street car.

The gripman of a cable street car is held not guilty of negligence in failing to stop or slacken speed when he sees boys standing near the track in the street in front of the car, one of whom, when the car is near, suddenly starts to run across the track. (Ill.) 127.

Servant's tort.

The act of a brakeman in throwing coal at a boy on the tender of an engine, thereby knocking him off or frightening him so that he jumps off, causing him to be run over and killed by the engine, is held to render the railroad company liable. (N. C.) 316.

Negligence toward employee.

The failure to furnish automatic car couplers for freight cars is again held to be negligence per se, and to constitute continuing negligence, which precludes the defense of contributory negligence. (N. C.) 313.

For the negligence of the foreman of a steam sawmill in calling on an employee suddenly to take a dangerous position, without giving him any instructions or explanation of the movements of the machinery or the risk to be incurred, with which the employee had no acquaintance, the proprietor is held responsible to the servant. (La.) 33.

On leased railroad.

The liability of the lessor of a railroad for negligent operation by the lessee is denied where the lease is authorized by statute and is general in its terms. (Kan.) 737.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS.

Boundary.

Naming a meander line on the bank of a river as a boundary is held to carry title at least to the water line with riparian rights, if not to the thread of the stream. (Ind.) 814.

Canal.

The rights of riparian owners are held to be changed by a contract which establishes a canal built originally without right as a substitute for the natural watercourse. (Wis.) 728.

Life estate.

The liability of a life tenant to rebuild in case of accidental fire is held not to exist in Rhode Island by force of the statute of 44 L. R. A.

Gloucester, and not to be assumed by accepting a devise requiring the life tenant to keep the premises in repair. (R. I.) 711.

Land titles.

A statute providing for the registration of land titles, similar to the Torrens law, is held valid against various objections. (Ill.) 801.

Deeds.

The rule that no interest can pass by deed to a person not in esse is applied to a case in which the deed was made to the grantor's son and his own brothers and sisters, one of whom was born after the deed was executed. (Ill.) 489.

Fixtures.

Bath tubs standing on legs, attachable to any heating apparatus, hot water heaters attached to a building only by plumbing, and stock mantels made and sold separately for use in any building, are held not to be fixtures as matter of law. (Wash.) 559.

Gift.

A valid gift of savings-bank deposits is held not to be made by depositing them in the name of both donor and donee as joint owners, payable to the order of either or to the survivor, where the donor retains possession of the pass book. (Md.) 208.

Trust.

A deposit in a savings bank in trust for the owner of the money and another person as joint owners, payable to the order of either, and the balance to belong to the survivor on the death of either, is held to create a valid trust. (Md.) 205.

A trust deed by an intemperate and improvident person, containing no power of revocation, is held irrevocable. (Pa.) 542.

The statute of uses is held not to be a part of the law of Nebraska. (Neb.) 861.

Oil or gas lease.

The discovery of oil or gas is held to be a condition precedent to the continuance or vesting of a lease for oil or gas for the period of five years and as much longer as oil or gas is found in paying quantities, where there is no consideration for the lease except oil royalties and gas rentals. In such a case, if the first well proves unproductive, the lease is declared to be invalid and of no binding force as to any of its provisions. (W. Va.) 107.

Mortgage.

One who takes special title to a mortgage by assignment, for purpose of foreclosure only, is held to have no such interest as will vest in or devolve upon his administrator. (Md.) 479.

Foreclosure.

The right of possession of property sold under foreclosure of a mortgage during the year allowed by statute for redemption is held to be in the purchaser, where the mortgage passes title, leaving only an equity of redemption in the mortgagor, and is silent as to possession. (Ark.) 193.

Tradenam.

The use of a name sufficiently similar to that rightfully used by another party engaged in the same business to mislead the public is held unlawful even if it is the name of the person using it. (Mich.) 841.

Probate of will.

After the end of the term at which a will is admitted to probate it is held that the court has no jurisdiction to admit to probate a codicil which is entirely inconsistent with the original will. (Ky.) 136.

Lien.

The lien of an innkeeper or keeper of live stock is held not to be lost by levying an attachment on the property. (W. Va.) 561.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.

Who may sue.

The right of a wife to sue on a contract for her benefit between her husband and a third person is upheld in a case where the contract was to pay her a part of the proceeds of a successful will contest, and she, although not a legal heir, had strong moral and family claims to be so regarded. (N. Y.) 170.

The benefit of a contract between a town and a street-railway company, limiting rates of fare, is held to be available to a passenger who sues for trespass on account of being ejected after tendering the rate fixed by the contract. (R. I.) 273.

Recommencement of action.

The right to recommence an action in a state court after the dismissal of an action for the same cause by a Federal court to which it had been removed is denied on the ground that the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal court acquired by the removal includes the recommencement of the action or the bringing of a new action for the same cause. (Ohio) 520.

Action for death.

The cause of action for personal injuries which survives the death of the person injured under Wisconsin statutes is held to be distinct from that given to surviving relatives for the death. (Wis.) 579.

Seduction.

The right of a parent to maintain an action for seduction of a daughter is held to 44 L. R. A.

be no longer dependent upon loss of her services as a servant under a code of procedure which abolishes fictions in pleading and requires a statement of the actual facts. (Kan.) 757.

Garnishment.

No situs for purpose of garnishment of a foreign insurance company is held to exist in a state where it has an agency, when the money is due to a nonresident for a loss of property insured in another state in which the loss is payable. (Del.) 115.

Judgment against a garnishee of a non-resident debtor on a contract utterly void at the latter's domicile, and when the latter did not appear and was not personally served in the state, is held to be no protection to the garnishee in such state, when sued by the principal debtor. (W. Va.) 101.

Injunction.

An injunction against the maintenance of a house of ill fame is sustained at suit of a private owner whose property is so near that the enjoyment of it is affected by disgusting scenes and sounds in such house. (Or.) 522.

A suit for an injunction against assessments upon a member of a foreign mutual insurance association, and to prevent the forfeiture of his policy for nonpayment of the assessments, is held to be beyond the jurisdiction because it involves a control of the internal management of a foreign corporation. (Md.) 149.

A mandatory injunction equivalent to specific performance is upheld for the enforcement of a lease requiring the operation of a leased railroad. (Va.) 297.

Mandamus.

Mandamus to compel a board of examiners to indorse a diploma of a dental college is denied after the indorsement has been refused by the board, where the statute provides for their indorsement when satisfied of the character of the institution. (Cal.) 635.

Replevin.

An action of replevin for a corpse is held not to be maintainable where statutes require the affidavit to be made for goods or chattels, and provide that judgment for defendant shall be for a return of the property or for its value. (Mich.) 242.

Supplementary proceedings.

The examination of a wife in supplementary proceedings against her husband is held "not to be for or against him," within the meaning of statutes as to testimony by husband or wife. (Wash.) 311.

Judgment by confession.

A judgment by confession entered in another state in accordance with a warrant of attorney executed there by a resident is held to be entitled to full faith and credit in another state, although it was entered without any personal service on the defendant. (Mass.) 840.

Evidence.

An assignment purporting to be signed by the mark of a woman holding a life-insurance policy on her husband's life and delivered with the policy by the husband to his creditor is not sufficiently proved nearly twenty-five years afterwards, by the testimony of an attesting witness to the effect that he certainly saw her sign the paper or he would not have put his name there, when he is unable to recall the circumstances or the place of the alleged signing,—especially when there is no proof that she made or authorized the delivery of the policy to the alleged assignee, or that the assignment was read or explained to her, while it appears that she could not read. (Md.) 142.

The burden of proof as to negligence of a carrier when goods lost were shipped under a contract limiting its liability for negligence is held to be on the carrier. (N. C.) 515.

An oral promise by the payee of a note to renew it until the improvement in business will enable the maker to proceed in business without such assistance is held not to be enforceable in equity. (Mass.) 319.

Proving claim for dividends.

A surety who has paid the debt is held entitled to prove the entire debt against the insolvent estate of his cosurety, and receive dividends thereon until reimbursed for that part of the obligation which it belongs to the cosurety to pay. (Va.) 459.

Damages.

The rule that a person injured by negligence cannot recover for such damage as results from his failure to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of the injury is held not to apply to a case of wilful injury. (Tex.) 553.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

The excusing of a juror in a criminal case during the absence of the accused, and the consequent discharge of the jury without a verdict, are held to be a bar to further prosecution, where the juror was excused on his own representations that his wife was sick. (Tex.) 694.

Contempt.

A corporation is held liable for criminal contempt in publishing a newspaper article at a place where a cause is on trial, which is calculated to prejudice the jury and prevent a fair trial. (Mass.) 159.
44 L. R. A.

False token.

That a person cannot be himself a false token is held in a case where one obtained money from a woman under a promise of marriage, by falsely pretending that he was unmarried and by using a fictitious name. (Or.) 266.

Rape.

A husband is held incapable of committing rape upon his own wife, and, when indicted jointly with another for that offense, is to be regarded only as an aider or abettor, who must be acquitted if the other is. (La.) 837.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Afterborn children. See DEEDS.

Assignment; assignability of cause of action for personal injuries:—(I.) Summary; (II.) classification by causes of action; (III.) in cases of insolvency and bankruptcy; (IV.) test of assignability; (V.) classification by states 177

Bankruptcy; assignability of causes of action for personal injuries in case of 177

Bills and notes; extent of recovery by pledgee on negotiable paper which pledgee could not collect:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) limitation to unpaid advances made without notice; (III.) application to accommodation paper; (IV.) matters of procedure 243

Brokers; when real-estate broker is considered as the procuring cause of the sale or exchange effected:—(I.) Procuring cause of sale: (a) general rule; (b) evidence to establish procuring cause; (c) acts held sufficient to establish; (d) acts held not sufficient to establish; (II.) when several brokers are employed; (III.) in case of a sale by principal: (a) general rule governing; (b) negotiations by principal; (c) before broker has reasonable opportunity to reap results of his efforts; (d) pending broker's negotiations with purchaser; (e) after suspension of negotiations; (f) after withdrawal or termination of agency, etc.; (g) after broker has failed to secure purchaser or to close negotiations; (h) within time limited by contract; (i) when broker has option or sole agency; (j) effect of modification of terms 321

Performance by a real-estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property:—(I.) General rule; (II.) custom as affecting performance; (III.) the necessity of a written contract; (IV.) necessity of consummated sale; (V.) time of performance; (VI.) in case of a special contract; (VII.) in case of an exchange; (VIII.) negotiations by principal; (IX.) acceptance of purchaser by principal; (X.) broker's presence at sale by principal; (XI.) ratification of broker's acts; (XII.) position of purchaser found; (XIII.) effect of purchaser's default; (XIV.) failure of broker to report purchaser; (XV.) acts held sufficient performance; (XVI.) acts held not to constitute performance 593

Carriers; duties of carriers of live stock as to pens or yards at stations:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) application generally; (III.) commencement and termination of risk; (IV.) effect of contributory negligence; (V.) relief from liability by contract 289

Statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) the United States statute; (III.) the South Carolina statute; (IV.) the Texas statute; (V.) miscellaneous statutory provisions 449

Collateral security. See BILLS AND NOTES.

Criminal law; former jeopardy by reason of the discharge of the jury in the prisoner's absence:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) general rule; (III.) plea allowed; (IV.) plea disallowed 694

Deeds; infant en ventre sa mère as grantee in deed:—(I.) Ordinary conveyances; (II.) conveyances of uses, trusts, remainders, etc. 48

Evidence. See also INSURANCE.

Proof of signature by mark when attesting witnesses thereto are dead or cannot remember the transaction:—(I.) Of testator: (a) where the attesting witness is dead; (b) where the attesting witness is forgetful; (II.) of maker of other instruments: (a) where the attesting witness is dead; (b) where the attesting witness is forgetful 142

Admissibility of telegram on behalf of person receiving it in reply to another 438

False imprisonment. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Homestead; revaluation or reassignment of homestead for appreciation or depreciation of value:—(I.) When the question arises; (II.) change from fluctuation in prices; (III.) change from imprisonments and additions; (IV.) homestead in decedent's estate 400

Infants. See DEEDS.

Injunction; by municipalities against nuisances by railroads and electrical companies:—(I.) Railroads; (II.) telegraph and telephone poles 565

Insolvency; assignability of causes of action for personal injuries in case of 177

Insurance; conclusiveness of proofs of loss as against insured or his beneficiaries:—(I.) General rule; (II.) in life insurance: (a) in general; (b) misstatements as to dates, etc.; (c) as to condition of mind of insured; (d) as to cause of death: (1) in 873 general; (2) coroner's inquests, suicide; (3) doctor's certificates, etc.; (III.) in fire insurance: (a) in general; (b) misstatements as to cause of fire; (c) amount of loss; (d) misstatements as to occupancy and use of premises; (e) misstatements as to ownership, etc.; (f) discrepancy as to building; (g) other insurance; (A) magistrate's certificate

Lease. See RAILROADS.

Mark. See EVIDENCE.

Master and servant; the duty of a master to instruct and warn his servants as to the perils of the employment:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) actual knowledge of servant, existence of duty to instruct negatived by; (III.) constructive knowledge of servant as bearing upon the duty of the master to instruct him: (a) generally; (b) ordinary perils of an employment, no duty to instruct as to; (c) extraordinary risks of employment; (d) fact that danger was or was not discoverable by ordinary care; (IV.) experience of servant as a special factor bearing upon the master's duty of instruction: (a) generally; (b) circumstances under which no instruction is necessary; (c) circumstances under which instruction is necessary; (V.) minority of servant as a special factor bearing upon the master's duty of instruction: (a) general principles stated; (b) minor employees usually on the same footing as adults after proper instruction has been given; (c) constructive knowledge of dangers, when a bar to an action by minor servants; (d) circumstances to be considered in determining whether knowledge of a danger is to be imputed to a minor; (e) illustrative cases in regard to the constructive knowledge of minor servants; (VI.) what knowledge of scientific facts is imputed to servants (adults and minors): (a) in case of adults; (b) in case of minors; (VII.) duty to warn servant against transitory and sporadic dangers: (a) introductory; (b) cases involving customary methods of doing business and departure from such methods; (c) perils due to transitory changes in the condition of the place of work; (d) perils due to the recurrent movements of railway cars and other heavy bodies; (VIII.) what instruction and warning will be sufficient: (a) in the case of adults; (b) in the case of infants; (c) as to sporadic and transitory dangers; (IX.) no recovery by servant unless failure to instruct was efficient cause of injury; (X.) duty of instruction considered with reference to the doctrine of common employment 846 Municipal corporations. See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

44 L. R. A.

Liability of municipal corporations for false imprisonment and unlawful arrest:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) general rule stated; (III.) application of the maxim Respondet superior; (IV.) liability as affected by ratification; (V.) reasons for the rule; (VI.) English and Canadian decisions

Pledge. See BILLS AND NOTES.

Public improvements; power of city to bind contractor to repair pavement which he makes:—(I.) When the question arises; (II.) agreements including repairs; (III.) agreements constituting mere guaranty; (IV.) single agreements for construction and repair; (V.) separable agreements; (VI.) express statutory authority

Railroads. See also INJUNCTION.

Liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using the road under a lease, license, or other contract:—(I.) General principles as to; (II.) under railway leases: (a) the general rule; (b) application to particular subjects; (c) authority to lease, construction; (d) effect of authority: (1) conflict of opinion; (2) rule requiring special statutory exemption; (3) rule that general authority to lease is sufficient; (4) necessity of entire control by lessee; (5) limited to injuries in operation of road; (6) operation and charter duties distinguished; (III.) under running privileges or arrangements; (IV.) under contracts for construction or otherwise; (V.) under ineffectual attempt to consolidate; (VI.) occupation must be authorized; (VII.) injuries to employees; (VIII.) provisions for joint liability; (IX.) effect of lease or other contract upon failure of duty to fence

Signature. See EVIDENCE.

Telegraphs. See INJUNCTION.

Telephones. See INJUNCTION.

Unborn children. See DEDDA.

88

795

527

787

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

Of Street Railway, see MANDAMUS, 3.
See also CANALS, 2; CARRIERS, 5.

1. The failure of a decree of separation to make any allowance for the wife, while it provides that an application for that purpose may be thereafter made in case of a material change in the husband's pecuniary circumstances, does not leave him liable to a prosecution for abandonment or desertion in case she becomes a charge upon the public. People, Comrs. of Public Charities & C., v. Cullen (N. Y.) 420

2. A judicial separation at the suit of the wife, although it does not dissolve the marriage, does so far terminate or suspend the relation of husband and wife that the husband cannot be guilty of the statutory offense of abandonment or desertion. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Abandonment; of wife by husband. 421

ACCIDENT.

See POLICE.

ACCOUNT.

See ASSIGNMENT, 2.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

See CONTRACTS, 12.

ACTION OR SUIT.

See also BONDS, 8; CONTRACTS, 8;
DEATH, 2.

1. The fact that a person boarded a car for the purpose of making a test case as to the amount of fare demandable will not affect his right to maintain an action for an unlawful ejection after tendering the fare lawfully due. Adams v. Union R. Co. (R. I.) 273

2. The benefit of a contract by a town with a street-railway company, limiting the rate of fare, is available to a passenger in an action of trespass for being ejected for nonpayment of fare after tendering the amount allowed by the contract. Id.

3. A third person cannot recover on a contract made for his benefit unless some obligation or duty was owing to him from the 44 L. R. A.

promisee. [Per Gray, J.] Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Insp. & Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 512

4. A woman may sue on a contract of a third person with her husband to pay her certain moneys in the event of success in contesting a will, where the husband procured an advancement of funds for the contest, and there were strong moral and family reasons why she should be regarded as one of the heirs, although she was not legally such. Buchanan v. Tilden (N. Y.) 170

5. A covenant by a vendee to repair a ditch which has become a substitute for a natural watercourse cannot be invoked by third persons who may profit incidentally by its enforcement. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

Joinder.

6. A cause of action under the common law against a city for establishing a pest house near a residence, claiming compensatory damages only, cannot be joined with an action against officers under a statute for punitive damages, although both causes of action arise out of the same transaction. Clayton v. Henderson (Ky.) 474

Parties.

7. One of two beneficiaries in an insurance policy cannot maintain an action to enforce the policy without making the other a party. Voss v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 689

8. The payee of a note should be made a party to a suit against the maker by one to whom it was pledged as collateral security for a debt less than its value, where the maker has a defense against the enforcement of the note by the payee. Yellowstone Nat. Bank v. Gagnon (Mont.) 243

Recommendation.

9. An action cannot be recommended in a state court after the dismissal of a prior action for the same cause of action by a Federal court to which it had been removed from the state court, as the exclusive jurisdiction obtained by the Federal court on removal includes a reinstatement of the action or the commencement of a new one for the same cause of action. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Fulton (Ohio) 520

875

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Action; survival of, for personal injuries. 580
 On contracts between other persons. 787
 On contract made with third person. 170
 By citizen for benefit of contract by town. 273

ACT OF GOD.

To excuse nonperformance of a contract on the ground of an act of God, there must be no mixture of negligence or want of diligence, judgment, or skill on the part of the promisor. Smith v. North American Transp. & T. Co. (Wash.) 557

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Act of God; what is. 557

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

See also CHAMPERTY, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Adverse possession; effect of, to give title. 480

AFTERBORN CHILDREN.

See DEEDS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

AGISTER.

See LIENS, 2.

ALIMONY.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 24; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

ANIMALS.

See CARRIERS, 12-17; LIENS, 2.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

See also BONDS, 7; CASES CERTIFIED; COURTS, 6, 7.

1. A statute limiting the right of appeal in cases of personal injury has no application to judgments rendered before its passage. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

2. Legislative power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court of appeals by providing for a review of certain judgments of inferior courts that were not reviewable before is not taken away by the provision of N. Y. Const. art. 6, § 9, that the legislature may further restrict such jurisdiction. People, Comrs. of Public Charities & C., v. Cullen (N. Y.) 420

3. The party relying on the exception in a statute permitting appeal from judgments or orders finally determining actions, excepting unanimous decisions that there is evidence to sustain a finding of fact, must show from the record that the decision was unanimous. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

Record and case on appeal.

4. Questions made on a demurrer need not be embodied in a motion for a new trial in order to be saved for appeal. Wise v. Morgan (Tenn.) 548

5. A request that the court hold that, under the law of the case, the plaintiff could not recover, is in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, and preserves the question of law for review on appeal. Hogan v. Stophlet (Ill.) 809

6. To get an omitted fact into the record for the purpose of presenting a question of law under Conn. act 1897, it must appear to have been an admitted or undisputed fact, and that its statement is necessary to properly present a question of law decided adversely to appellant. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

7. A finding by the trial judge is unnecessary when the appeal is used as a substitute for a former motion in error. Id.

8. The finding by the trial judge when an appeal is used as a substitute for a motion for new trial may contain a statement of facts on which the judgment is founded, or which are necessary to present a question of law which was made at the trial and decided by the judge, or it may contain a recital of what took place at the trial for the purpose of presenting for review rulings upon questions of evidence or other ruling not directly affecting the judgment. Id.

9. Bills of exception in criminal trials should be signed by the trial judge; and a mere note of a reservation of exceptions, or a bill signed by the clerk only, is insufficient. State v. Haines (La.) 837

Objections and exceptions.

10. A broadside exception "to the charge as given" will not be considered. Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. (N. C.) 316

11. The rendition of judgment cannot be questioned on appeal unless the defect or mistake in it is particularly pointed out by the objection. Tucker v. Hyatt (Ind.) 129

12. An objection that a witness is not an expert is insufficient to raise the question of the competency of opinion evidence on the question involved. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

13. An objection that a hypothetical question is insufficient does not raise the point that the question is not in proper form because it includes the witness's understanding of the testimony of another witness. Id.

14. An objection to the incompetency of the admissions of the president of a defendant corporation, made a few hours after an accident, does not raise the question of his authority to make a settlement, or of his being engaged in the company's business, or in an attempt to make a compromise. Id.

Hearing and determination.

15. Conclusions of the trial court from subordinate facts found may be reviewed on appeal. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

16. The legal sufficiency of evidence to support a finding by the court is a question of law on appeal. Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming (Tex.) 279

17. The necessity for instituting contempt proceedings to vindicate its authority in case of publication of newspaper articles calculated to prejudice the jury in a pending trial is for the trial court, and will not be considered on appeal. Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Com. (Mass.) 159

18. The decision of municipal authorities as to who among several bidders is the lowest cannot, if resting on legal evidence, be reviewed on writ of error. State, Wilson, v. Trenton (N. J. Err. & App.) 540

19. Facts adjudicated by a trial court cannot be retried on appeal, upon the certified testimony. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

20. The amount of damages is a question of fact for the jury upon all the evidence, and, if there is any evidence to support the verdict, the Utah supreme court is not at liberty, under the Constitution, to set it aside. Croco v. Oregon Short-Line R. Co. (Utah) 285

21. The sum of $3,500 is not so excessive a recovery for a stiff arm that it will be interfered with on appeal. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

22. A finding by the jury will be accepted as correct upon appeal, unless it clearly appears to have been erroneous. James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 33

23. The findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless they are clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

24. An allowance of alimony by the trial court will not be disturbed unless manifestly unjust. Hooper v. Hooper (Wis.) 725

25. Testimony introduced on an immaterial matter not in issue cannot be considered on appeal in an equity case tried de novo, although no exception was taken to its admission. Blagen v. Smith (Or.) 522

26. An insufficient complaint which was tested by demurrer cannot be aided on appeal by reading into it a fundamental fact from the findings of the jury. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

27. A demurrer treated in the trial court as waived or withdrawn must be so considered on appeal. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 449

Grounds of reversal.

28. The court on writ of error will not reverse the judgment in a case tried to the court without a jury, merely because of the admission of improper evidence. Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) 593

29. Overruling a demurrer to a bad paragraph of a complaint is not available error if the judgment rests on a good paragraph. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

30. The omission of admitted or undisputed facts from a finding is not an error that affects the judgment, unless by correcting the record and including them in the finding it appears that the court erred in some ruling of law material to the judgment. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

31. On vacating a judgment which was void because the qualified members of the court were equally divided the court, instead of entering judgment, may order a reargument, if it sees fit to do so. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728 ment, if it sees fit to do so. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

Second appeal.

32. A decision on a former appeal is the law of the case so far as it is applicable to the facts established on the second trial. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; review of excessive damages. 501

APPRENTICES.

An instrument binding children to the service of a person during their minority, though signed by him and by their parents, is void as to them as an indenture of apprenticeship under S. C. Rev. Stat. 1893, § 2206, unless signed by the infants, although the statute does not expressly provide for their signature. Anderson v. Young (S. C.) 277

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Apprentices; indenture of. 277

ARBITRATION.

See also INSURANCE, 15.

1. A deposit made to secure payment of an award under an arbitration agreement becomes forfeited upon revocation of the arbitration, and subject to payment of the damages allowed by statute against one who revokes an arbitration, although made by a third person who committed no breach of the agreement and had no control over the one who did so. Union Ins. Co. v. Central Trust Co. (N. Y.) 227

2. That an arbitration agreement provides that the costs shall not become part of the amount for which a deposit made to secure payment of the award shall be liable will not, in case the deposit is forfeited by revocation of the award, prevent the deposit from becoming chargeable with the costs which the statute casts upon the one who revokes an arbitration. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Arbitration; deposit to secure award; revocation of. 229

ARREST.

Reward for, see REWARD.

See also FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Arrest; right to make without warrant. 674

ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

See CRIMINAL LAW, 3.

ASSAULT.

See also TRESPASS.

A boy upon whom a locomotive engineer throws hot water and steam to drive him off from the engine is entitled to recover from the railroad company for the assault, regardless of injuries which resulted from his attempt to get off in consequence of such act. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zant-zinger (Tex.) 553

ASSESSMENT.

See INJUNCTION, 5; INSURANCE, 8;
PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

ASSIGNMENT.

See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. A right of action for personal injuries is not assignable. North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ackley (Ill.) 177

2. An assignment of accounts and other choses in action to a purchaser in good faith, who obtains actual possession of them and immediately notifies the debtors, gives him a perfect legal title thereto as against a prior assignee to whom they were assigned for security, but who, without obtaining possession of them or giving notice to the debtors, left them with the assignor for collection. Graham Paper Co. v. Pembroke (Cal.) 632

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assignability of cause of action for personal injuries:—(I.) Summary; (II.) classification by causes of action; (III.) in cases of insolvency and bankruptcy; (IV.) test of assignability; (V.) classification by states. 177

ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS.

See CORPORATIONS, 15; INSOLVENCY.

ATTACHMENT.

See also LEVY AND SEIZURE; LIENS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attachment; effect of judgment in; as due process of law. 101

ATTORNEYS.

See also CHAMPERTY, 2.

1. A final disposition of a cause may be made by agreement of the attorney of record, as to whose authority no limitation is known or might be known by reasonable inquiry by the opposite party, which is entered of record, made an order of court, and executed by the adversary in good faith. Beliveau v. Amoskeag Co. (N. H.) 167

2. A discharged attorney who is permitted to remain the attorney of record without notice to the opposite party may enter into an agreement for settlement of the suit, which will bind his former client. Id.

3. An attorney employed by the next friend of an infant to prosecute a suit on the infant's behalf has power to make a settlement of the suit which will bind the infant. Id.

4. That an agreement by an attorney for settlement was not brought to the attention of the court, and did not obtain its sanction before it was entered of record, does not impair its effect. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys; power of, to compromise or satisfy judgment. 168
44 L. R. A.

BANKRUPTCY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bankruptcy; assignability of causes of action for personal injuries in case of. 177

BANKS.

See also CHECKS, 1; EVIDENCE, 15, 29, 30; GIFT; PUBLIC MONIES; TAXES; TRUSTS, 2.

1. Bank directors are not required to procure periodical expert examination of the books in order to verify by personal examination such details of the bank's condition as they ought to know before declaring dividends, or which are required to be reported to the comptroller of the currency, if there is no reason to distrust the integrity or efficiency of the cashier. Warner v. Penoyer (C. C. App. 2d C.) 761

2. Directors of a national bank are required to cause examination of the discounted paper of the bank due, with reasonable frequency, and to keep themselves sufficiently informed about it to enable them to pass an intelligent judgment upon its value. Id.

3. Directors of a national bank who are members of the discount and examining committees will be held liable for losses occasioned by the reckless loans of the cashier, where they made not even a cursory examination of the discounts or overdrafts beyond looking at such notes as the cashier saw fit to consult them about. Id.

4. Mere failure to attend meetings of the board will not render directors of a national bank liable for defalcation of the cashier. Id.

Forged checks.

5. The drawee bank which pays the good-faith holder of a forged check cannot recover back the money paid. First Nat. Bank v. Marshalltown State Bank (Iowa) 131

6. Negligence of a bank which first cashes a forged check and puts it in circulation cannot be imputed to a subsequent good-faith holder of the check, so as to make him liable to the drawee, from whom he has obtained payment of the check. Id.

7. The forgery of an indorsement on a forged check will not make a good-faith holder liable to the drawee, which has paid the check. Id.

Collections.

8. A custom of banks to send a check direct to the drawee bank for collection and return is not unreasonable, at least as applied to the collection of a plain, undorsed check. Kershaw v. Ladd (Or.) 236
But see next case.

9. A collecting bank must not transmit checks or drafts directly to the bank or party by whom payment is to be made. Minneapolis Sash & D. Co. v. Metropolitan Bank (Minn.) 504

10. Notice to a depositor by a collecting bank that it will be responsible only for the selection of agents according to its judgment and means of knowledge, and will assume no risk or responsibility on account of their omission, neglect, or failure, will not relieve the bank from liability for sending a check directly to the bank by which payment is to be made. Id.

11. An established usage and custom existing among banks will not justify a collecting bank in sending a check or a draft by mail directly to the drawee because there is no other bank of good standing in the same town. Id.

12. A bank receiving for collection a check the proceeds of which it is to retain to the drawer's credit will be regarded as receiving sufficient compensation for its services to make it liable for negligence in attempting to make the collection. Kershaw v. Ladd (Or.) 236

13. The retention by a collecting bank of a dishonored check until after the drawee bank has closed does not create any liability to the sender, unless he was injured thereby. Id.

14. The negligence of a notary public in failing to learn the residence of an indorser of an inland draft, and give him proper notice of its dishonor, is not chargeable to a bank of which he is assistant cashier, and which placed the draft, which it held only for collection, in his hands for protest, although no protest of the draft was required by law, but the law recognizes the giving of notices in case of protest as part of the official duty of the notary. First Nat. Bank v. German Bank (Iowa) 133

Insolvency.

15. A receiver of a bank in which a trust fund was deposited cannot be required to repay it in preference to the claims of other creditors, unless the trust fund can be identified or traced into some other specific fund or property. Marquette Fire & W. Comrs. v. Wilkinson (Mich.) 493

16. Public moneys deposited by an officer in a bank of which he was a partner constitute a trust fund, even if he had the legal title to the money. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; liability for negligence of notary. 133
Liability of directors. 762
Forwarding check to drawee. 237
Mailing check to drawee. 505

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

See INSURANCE, 19, 20.

BICYCLE.

See also HIGHWAYS, 4.

A tricycle is not within the scope of an ordinance prohibiting the use of "all varieties of vehicles known by the general name 'bicycles,'" on sidewalks. Wheeler v. Boone (Iowa) 821

BID.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 18.

BILL.

See STATUTES, 1.

44 L. R. A

BILLS AND NOTES.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 8; BANKS, 14; EVIDENCE, 13, 14; PLEADING, 2.

1. That a draft is to the knowledge of the payee drawn by the agent of the drawee to pay the latter's debt will not relieve the drawer from personal liability thereon if he directs the amount to be charged to his account. Citizens' Bank v. Millett (Ky.) 664

2. The existence of a debt due by the drawee of a bill of exchange to the payee is a sufficient consideration to bind the drawer upon his promise to pay the bill, and render him liable for the amount, although he was a stranger to the debt. Id.

3. The pledgee of a promissory note as collateral security can enforce it against the maker only to the extent of his claim against the pledgeor,—at least where the maker has a valid defense against the enforcement of the note by the pledgeor. Yellowstone Nat. Bank v. Gagnon (Mont.) 243

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; extent of recovery by pledgee on negotiable paper which pledgeor could not collect:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) limitation to unpaid advances made without notice; (III.) application to accommodation paper; (IV.) matters of procedure. 243

BILLS OF EXCEPTION.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 9.

BILLS OF LADING.

See CARRIERS, 9.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

See BANKS, 6, 7; BONDS, 7.

BONDS.

See also HOSPITAL, 1.

1. The fact that the bond is voluntary and founded upon a valid consideration will not enable a city to enforce a bond by a street contractor to repair a street for five years, when the contract is entirely beyond the general scope of the powers of the city, even if it has been fully executed by the city. Portland v. Portland Bituminous Paving & Improv. Co. (Or.) 527

2. A bond to a city by a street contractor which constitutes an independent undertaking by the latter to keep the street and pavement in repair for five years, and which covers in effect all injuries liable to arise from whatsoever source, is not authorized by statutory power to take security by bonds for the performance of the contract. Id.

3. The legislature cannot by a sweeping statute give all counties in the state the right to issue railroad-aid bonds without regard to the restrictions imposed by the Constitution thereon. Wilkes County v. Call (N. C.) 252

4. County bonds issued under authority of a statute passed in violation of the state Constitution are null and void. Id.

5. Recitals in a county bond will not estop the county from denying its validity, if they point to an unconstitutional statute as the authority under which the bond was issued. Id.

6. The holder of a county bond which recites that it was issued under a particular statute which is adjudged unconstitutional will be estopped from contending that it was issued under another statute. Id.

7. There can be no bona fide holder of county bonds issued under authority of an unconstitutional statute. Id.

8. An issue of county bonds may be declared void at the suit of the county commissioners, although only one bond is represented before the court, if a full defense is made and other bondholders have an opportunity to come in and be heard. Id.

BOUNDARIES.

Mentioning a meander line on the bank of a river as a boundary will convey the property at least to the water line, with riparian rights, if not to the thread of the stream, unless a contrary intent clearly appears from the deed itself. Sizor v. Logansport (Ind.) 814

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Boundaries; controlling effect of monuments; meander lines. 814

BROKERS.

See also EVIDENCE, 11.

1. Where a real-estate broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale. The failure to carry out that contract, even if the default be that of the purchaser, does not deprive the broker of his right to commissions. Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) 593

2. That a broker was not given the exclusive sale of property, and that the owner himself made the sale, will not defeat the broker's right to commissions if he was the procuring cause of sale. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

3. A broker may be found to be the procuring cause of sale, where he calls a person's attention to a certain piece of property, and gives him information as to how to obtain admission thereto, although the owner, without the broker's knowledge, subsequently takes up the negotiation and completes the sale. Id.

4. That one who is led to begin negotiation for property which he finally purchases through the intervention of a broker had been engaged at some prior time in a bootless negotiation for the same property, and that he finally completes the sale through secret negotiations with the owner, do not deprive the broker of his right to commissions. Id.

5. After a broker has rendered the services which make him the procuring cause of sale the owner cannot escape liability by telling him that no commission will be paid in case the property brings only a certain price. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

When real-estate broker is considered as the procuring cause of the sale or exchange effected:—(I.) Procuring cause of sale: (a) general rule; (b) evidence to establish procuring cause; (c) acts held sufficient to establish; (d) acts held not sufficient to establish; (II.) when several brokers are employed; (III.) in case of a sale by his principal: (a) general rule governing; (b) negotiations by principal; (c) before broker has reasonable opportunity to reap results of his efforts; (d) pending broker's negotiations with purchaser; (e) after suspension of negotiations; (f) after withdrawal or termination of agency, etc.; (g) after broker has failed to secure purchaser or to close negotiations; (h) within time limited by contract; (i) when broker has option or sole agency; (j) effect of modification of terms. 321

Performance by a real-estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property:—(I.) General rule; (II.) custom as affecting performance; (III.) the necessity of a written contract; (IV.) necessity of consummated sale; (V.) time of performance; (VI.) in case of a special contract; (VII.) in case of an exchange; (VIII.) negotiations by principal; (IX.) acceptance of purchaser by principal; (X.) broker's presence at sale by principal; (XI.) ratification of broker's acts; (XII.) position of purchaser found; (XIII.) effect of purchaser's default; (XIV.) failure of broker to report purchaser; (XV.) acts held sufficient performance; (XVI.) acts held not to constitute performance. 593

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

1. The issuance of preferred stock by a building and loan association which is based on principles of co-operation, equality, and mutuality is void as against public policy. Sumrall v. Columbia Finance & T. Co. (Ky.) 659

2. A guaranty that preferred stock in a building and loan association shall mature at a certain time, and that the common stock shall constitute a guaranty therefor, constitutes a guaranty for the accumulation of sufficient profits or dividends to mature the preferred stock, and does not control a distribution of the capital and assets of the concern on the winding up of the association, when there are no profits on hand. Id.

3. A member of a building and loan association who borrows money from the association, and bids a premium for the privilege of obtaining the loan, and executes his bond for the amount of the loan and premium, and gives a mortgage to secure the payment of such bond, and also assigns to such association his shares of stock as collateral security for such payment, is not entitled, in an action brought to foreclose such mortgage by the receiver of such association (said association being insolvent), to apply the amounts he has paid as dues upon his stock in reduction of his indebtedness. Hale v. Cairns (N. D.) 261

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Building and loan associations; preferred stock in. 659

Rights of members in case of insolvency; application of dues. 261

BUILDINGS.

See FIXTURES; NEGLIGENCE, 3; TRIAL, 4; WRIT AND PROCESS, 4.

BULKHEAD.

See CANALS.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE, 1-10.

BY-LAWS.

See INSURANCE, 7.

CABLE RAILWAY.

See STREET RAILWAYS.

CANAL.

See also CONTRACTS, 7; NOTICE, 1.

1. The owner of a canal who acquires it with notice of the rights of other persons to have a certain quantity of water supplied from it, for which a dam or bulkhead in the canal is required, must maintain such dam or bulkhead as long as he continues to use the canal. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

2. The owner of a canal which has become a substitute for a natural watercourse, although he acquires it with notice of certain rights and privileges of other persons thereon, which are open, visible, and notorious, which require the maintenance by him, so long as he uses the canal, of a dam or bulkhead to furnish them water from the canal, can free himself from this obligation by the abandonment of his use of the canal. Id.

CAR COUPLERS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 7.

CARRIERS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1, 2; ACT OF GOD; DAMAGES, 3; EVIDENCE, 8, 9; FALSE IMPRISONMENT, 2; INSURANCE, 3; PLEADING, 5; TRIAL, 6.

1. A woman with a transfer ticket approaching a street car to get on, when she is struck by a piece of the trolley pole, which breaks while the motorman is trying to change it to the other end of the car, is a passenger to whom the high degree of care which a common carrier owes to passengers is due. Keator v. Scranton Traction Co. (Pa.) 548

2. A railroad company is under obligation to stop a train, and rescue a passenger who has been thrown or pushed therefrom without any fault on its part, where he is 44 I. R. A.

liable to perish or suffer great injury unless rescued, only when it can stop the train long enough to rescue him without endangering the safety of other passengers by collisions. Reed v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 823

3. Riding on the front platform of an electric street-car is not negligence as a matter of law. Watson v. Portland & C. E. R. Co. (Me.) 157

Abandoning trip.

4. It is the duty of a transportation company legitimately to inform itself concerning the stages of water on a route over which it contracts to transport a passenger, and he may rely upon the carrier's information concerning the practicability and feasibility of the trip. Smith v. North American Transp. & T. Co. (Wash.) 557

5. A steamer compelled to abandon for the season its trip from Seattle to Dawson after it reaches Ft. Yukon because of the low stage of the water in the Yukon river, owes to a passenger whom it has agreed to transport to Dawson by September 15 of the current year the duty of bringing him back to Seattle without charge, and has no right to leave him where he will be forced to remain over winter in the Alaskan climate, to await the convenience of the carrier for completing the transportation the following summer. Id.

Arrest of passenger.

6. The unreasonable refusal of a passenger to state his name when asked by a conductor to whom he tenders a mileage ticket if the name thereon is his own does not justify the conductor in procuring his arrest without a warrant, on the charge of fraudulently evading payment of fare. Palmer v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 673

Sleeping car.

7. A sleeping-car company is not liable to a passenger for the loss by theft of personal effects taken into the car by a passenger for his own use and retained in his possession, either under the rules governing innkeepers or those relating to carriers' liability for baggage, but the carrier is liable only for failure to exercise reasonable care to guard the property. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Hall (Ga.) 790

8. Theft of a passenger's valise from the sleeping car by one who took it out of the car window by catching on to the car as it slackened speed while crossing another railroad, will not render the sleeping-car company liable, where it had locked the back door of the car, and the conductor and porter were guarding the open door in front, while the passenger himself was in the smoking car. Id.

Contracts as to shipments.

9. A shipper's contract with a carrier cannot be changed by handing a receipt or bill of lading to his clerk. Rudell v. Ogdensburg Transit Co. (Mich.) 415

10. A contract by a carrier to deliver goods at destination at a certain time, which allows the usual period for making the trip, is within the general authority of the carrier's agent. Id.

11. In Virginia a common carrier cannot contract for exemption from liability for injury or loss caused by its own neglect. Harman v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.) 289

Live stock.

12. A carrier of live stock cannot relieve itself from liability for the death of animals by showing that they died in possession of a connecting carrier, if its own negligence was the cause of their death. Id.

13. Failure of a railroad company to provide suitable and safe facilities for loading and unloading stock, and also for watering and feeding them, while being carried over its line of road, is negligence against which a common carrier is not permitted to contract. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 449

14. Horses and mules, as well as animals intended for food, are within the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, requiring "cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals" when carried from one state to another to be unloaded for rest, water, and feeding, if confined for twenty-eight hours. Id.

15. "Other accidental causes" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, making a railroad company liable for failure to unload cattle when confined for twenty-eight hours, unless prevented by "storm or other accidental causes," must be taken to mean other inevitable accidental causes. Id.

16. Permitting salt water to run through pens provided by a carrier of live stock to facilitate shipments, so that it is accessible to animals placed in the pens, is negligence which will render the carrier liable for injuries caused to animals placed in the pens for shipment, by drinking of the water. Harman v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.) 289

17. The knowledge of the sellers of live stock to be delivered in the shipping pen of a railroad, of the existence of salt water therein, does not charge the buyer, who has contracted for their transportation, with contributory negligence precluding recovery for damages to stock from drinking such water. Id.

Discrimination.

18. Discrimination between localities in facilities for transportation, such as a better supply of cars at a terminus of the road than at some other point on the road, when there are not cars enough to supply all, does not make the railroad company liable to an action for a penalty under Ark. act March 24, 1887, providing that "all individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported, . . . and no unjust or undue discrimination shall be made. . . in facilities for transportation," and that "no discrimination in . . . facilities for transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or . . . any preferences in furnishing cars." The act does not apply to discrimination in facilities at different localities. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Oppenheimer (Ark.) 353
44 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carrier; power of agent of, to make contracts. 415

Liability for abandoning trip. 557

Nontransferable tickets; identification of passenger; reasonableness of rules. 673

Liability of sleeping-car company for passenger's property. 791

Negligence in riding on street-car platform. 157

Ejection of passenger as an assault. 274

Duty to person falling from train. 823

Duties of carriers of live stock as to pens or yards at stations:—(I.) The general rule; (II.) application generally; (III.) commencement and termination of risk; (IV.) effect of contributory negligence; (V.) relief from liability by contract. 289

Statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) the United States statute; (III.) the South Carolina statute; (IV.) the Texas statute; (V.) miscellaneous statutory provisions. 449

Unlawful discriminations by. 353

CARS.

See CARRIERS, 18.

CASES CERTIFIED AND REPORTED.

1. The very question to be decided, which the court of civil appeals is by statute authorized to certify to the supreme court, is not an abstract question which may determine the issue as presented to that court, but the issue itself. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zantzing (Tex.) 553

2. The question of the right of a boy to recover from a railroad company whose engineer turns hot water and steam on him to drive him from the engine, for the loss of his leg in attempting to get off, in the event that his action succeeding the assault was negligent, does not arise upon an instruction to find for plaintiff if the engineer's act was negligent, without specifying whether the recovery was to be for loss of leg or for the assault, so that it can be certified by the court of civil appeals to the supreme court; but the right of his mother to recover does so arise, since her recovery, if any, must be based on the loss of the leg. Id.

CASHIER.

See BANKS, 4.

CHAMPERTY.

See also PLEADING, 1.

1. Defendant cannot avail himself, as a defense, of the champertous character of a contract between the plaintiff and his attorney with reference to the prosecution of the suit. Oroco v. Oregon Short-Line R. Co. (Utah) 285

2. The common-law rule as to champertous agreements between attorneys and clients is modified by Utah Comp. Laws 1888, § 3683, providing that the measure and mode of compensation of attorneys and counselors at law shall be left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties; and under that section it is competent for the attorney and client to agree that the former's compensation shall be contingent upon success, and payable, by percentage or otherwise, out of the proceeds of the litigation; but it is not competent to agree that the attorney shall pay the advance fees and costs of the suit thereafter to be commenced. Id.

3. A conveyance by the administrator of land of which one holding a bond for title from his intestate is in possession is void as being a conveyance of land held adversely. Heard v. Phillips (Ga.) 369

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Champertry; in attorney's contract. 286

CHARITIES.

See INFANTS, 3.

CHECKS.

See also BANKS, 5-7; EVIDENCE, 10, 15, 29, 30.

1. Failure of the payee of a check to promptly present the same to the bank for payment will release the maker from liability if he is injured thereby where the bank subsequently fails, although his general deposit in the bank was overdrawn at the time where he had a special deposit in the bank and had reasonable grounds to believe that the check would be paid because of a promise by the cashier to allow him to check against such special deposit. Hamlin v. Simpson (Iowa) 397

2. The maker of a check which the payee fails to present for some time and until after the bank has failed is damaged thereby so as to be discharged from liability on the check, where at the time of the failure he had general and special deposits in the bank for which he holds collateral security which would be insufficient to pay the amount which would remain in the bank if the check were paid. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Checks; delay in presentment of. 393

CHILD.

See INFANTS.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE, 28.

CITIES.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

CLAIMS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

CLERK.

See STATUTES, 2.

CODICIL.

See WILLS.

44 L. R. A.

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

See BILLS AND NOTES, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COLLEGE.

See PLEADING, 3; STATE INSTITUTIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COMMISSIONERS.

See PUBLIC MONEYS.

COMMON LAW.

See SEDUCTION.

COMPOUNDING CRIME.

See EVIDENCE, 23.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

See ATTORNEYS, 2-4; CONTRACTS, 8.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

See EVIDENCE, 19.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. The liability of an employer for injury to an employee by a fellow servant in a state which has by statute abolished the common-law rule can be enforced in another state in which the common-law rule still prevails. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Rouse (Ill.) 410

2. The responsibility of the master for the act of a fellow servant is governed by the law of the place where the cause of action arose. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; as to liability of master to servant. 410

CONSPIRACY.

1. The unsoundness of mind of a co-conspirator at the time of the trial of an action to recover for injuries caused by the conspiracy is no defense to any of the guilty parties. Tucker v. Hyatt (Ind.) 129

2. Co-conspirators are not relieved from liability for injuries caused by the conspiracy, by the fact that one of their number was of unsound mind. Id.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

See also COURTS, 4; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; RAILROADS, 4, 5; STATUTES, 3.

1. The rule of construction by long and continued usage should be applied to a constitutional provision only in cases of doubt. Pingree v. Dix (Mich.) 679

2. An ordinance requiring a license fee to be paid as a condition of buying claims is unconstitutional in case of a person who buys, merely as an investment, a few claims against a city, which are admitted to be just and due, but which are not paid because of the lack of funds. Bitzer v. Thompson (Ky.) 141

3. An ordinance requiring a license for the business of contracting for public work is unconstitutional because it tends to create a monopoly and increase the burden of property owners, where the statutes require the cost of improvements to be assessed upon abutting owners by the front foot. Figg v. Thompson (Ky.) 135

Due process of law.

4. A landowner is not deprived of his property without due process of law by a statute which provides that, after the title has been judicially determined and registered, the tenure of the owner, the right of transfer and encumbrance, and all rights subsequently accruing shall be determined in accordance with the rules prescribed by that statute. People, Deneen, v. Simon (Ill.) 801

5. A statute authorizing service of process on an agent of a foreign corporation, "no matter what character of agent such person may be," if the corporation has any transaction with any person or concerning any property in the state through any agency whatever within the state, is not unconstitutional as authorizing judgment without due process of law, at least when the service is on an agent who may be reasonably presumed to give notice thereof to the corporation. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley (Tenn.) 442

Police power.

6. An ordinance changing the limits outside of which houses of prostitution are prohibited does not unconstitutionally deprive a citizen of his property because it is depreciated in value in consequence of being included within such limits, as the ordinance is an exercise of the police power. L'Hote v. New Orleans (La.) 90

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutional law; validity of curative statute. 307

Depriving of property without due process; delegation of power. 803

CONTEMPT.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 17.

1. A corporation may be held liable for criminal contempt for publishing, in a newspaper printed and circulated in a place where a trial is had, an article concerning the cause on trial, which is calculated to prejudice the jury and prevent a fair trial. Telegram Newspaper Co. v. Com. (Mass.) 159.

2. Publishing in a newspaper the figures named by the respective parties to a suit on trial in an effort to compromise the controversy, so that they are likely to be brought to the notice of the jury, is punishable as a contempt of court, although there is no intent to pervert the course of justice. Id.

3. A formal complaint is not necessary to authorize a court to take cognizance of a contempt consisting in publishing newspaper articles calculated to prejudice the jury in a trial pending before it. Id.

4. That the jurors did not in fact see a newspaper article published during a trial in such a way as to be likely to come to their notice and prejudice their judgment will not relieve the publisher from contempt of court. Id.

44 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contempt; by publication pending trial; procedure. 180

CONTRACTOR.

See RECEIVERS, 2.

CONTRACTS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2, 3; ACT OF GOD; INSURANCE, 3; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. A foreign company executing a power of attorney to the secretary of state, in accordance with Tenn. act 1875, authorizing him to accept service of process, does not thereby make a contract with the state which precludes the state from authorizing service to be made on agents of the company. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley (Tenn.) 442

Statute of frauds.

2. A court of equity cannot give effect to a contract declared void by the statute of frauds under the pretext of aiding an attempt to execute a contract. Bloomfield State Bank v. Miller (Neb.) 387

3. The exception of the statute of frauds in reference to estates arising by act or operation of law does not embrace cases where the creation of the estate depends solely upon the contract. Id.

4. An oral promise by a wife who is the beneficiary of her husband's certificate in a fraternal beneficiary society, to pay his debts, is within the statute of frauds. Fisher v. Donovan (Neb.) 383

5. The vote of the directors of a corporation assuming payment of the debt of a third person, duly recorded, is a sufficient memorandum in writing, and the signature of the recording officer in attestation of the minutes a sufficient signing of the party to be charged, to satisfy the statute of frauds. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

Validity.

6. A contract invalid as to one of the parties is invalid also as to the other. Portland v. Portland Bituminous Paving & Improv. Co. (Or.) 527

7. One whose water rights have been injured by diverting a watercourse by a canal constructed across his land without his consent may make a valid contract for the continuance of the canal and a supply of water therefrom. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

8. A contract by which a person in whose name an action is brought and to whom it belongs attempts to transfer his control over it so as to restrict him from compromising or settling the claim is not valid. North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ackley (Ill.) 177

9. A contract by which the acceptance of benefits from a relief organization by a railroad employee who has been injured will operate to release the railroad company from liability to damages, but which gives him the option to accept such benefits or to decline them and retain his right of action against the railroad company, is not against public policy. Johnson v. Charleston & S. R. Co. (S. C.) 645

10. A contract that a railroad company shall be relieved of liability for the injury or death of an employee by the acceptance of benefits from a relief fund which the railroad company helps to provide, but leaving the employee or those entitled to maintain an action for his death the option of choosing the benefits of the relief fund or bringing an action against the company, does not violate Ind. Acts 1893, chap. 130, p. 294, § 5, prohibiting contracts to relieve railroad companies from liability to employees. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

Impairment.

11. An enlargement of the liability of a street-railway company for paving a street is not unconstitutional, where the company's rights were acquired subject to Tex. Const. 1895, art. 1, § 17, providing that all privileges and franchises shall be subject to legislative control, and that there shall be no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities. Storrie v. Houston City Street R. Co. (Tex.) 716

12. A statute curing the defective acknowledgment of a deed of trust and the consequent defect in the record of the deed is ineffectual to give it priority over a judgment lien which had been acquired before the defect was cured, as the displacement of the judgment creditor's lien would impair the obligation of his contract. Merchants' Bank v. Ballou (Va.) 306

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RAILROAD RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Contracts; indefiniteness of. 320

CORPORATIONS.

See also BANKS; BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5; CONTEMPT, 1; CONTRACTS, 5, 11; COURTS, 1-3; EVIDENCE, 27; INJUNCTION, 5; INSOLVENCY; RAILROADS, 6; RECEIVERS, 1; TAXES, 8; WRIT AND PROCESS.

1. The de facto character of a corporation will not be varied by the fact that it was insolvent from the beginning. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

Name.

2. The name "Lamb Glove & Mitten Company," or any name in which the word "Lamb" occurs when used in connection with the business of manufacturing gloves and mittens by what is known as the Lamb stitch, cannot lawfully be used, even by the man named Lamb who invented the stitch, when he has transferred his right in a similar business previously carried on to a corporation named "Lamb Knitting Goods Company," which conducts such business in another town in the same state. Lamb Knitting Goods Co. v. Lamb Glove & M. Co. (Mich.) 841

Charters.

3. Charters granting exemptions from 44 L. R. A.

taxation, passed after the enactment of a general law which provides that all charters subsequently enacted shall be subject to amendment or repeal, may, unless a contrary intent was plainly expressed therein, be amended or repealed at the pleasure of the legislature, so as to deprive the corporation of the exemption. Deposit Bank v. Daviess County (Ky.) 825

4. Statutes granting extension to corporate charters, passed after the adoption of an act making all grants to corporations subject to amendment, will be subject to that act, although the original charters contained exemptions which were irrevocable. Id.

Officers.

5. The liability of a director of a corporation in tort is not to be avoided by his vicarious character, where a tort of the corporation has been committed through the directors. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. (Mont.) 508

6. It is the duty of the directors of a corporation to avoid the creation of nuisances by their corporation through its employees acting within the line of their duties. Id.

7. A director who knows nothing of a nuisance maintained by the corporation, and who could not, by exercising ordinary diligence in control, have known of it, or who has performed his duty of taking care, is not personally responsible for the nuisance. Id.

8. Nonexecution of the duty of directors, which results in the positive act of a creation and maintenance of a continuing nuisance by the corporation, on account of which a third person is killed, amounts, unless explained, to a misfeasance on their part, or, if they have actual knowledge of and authorize the nuisance, to malfeasance, and is not merely a nonfeasance for which the liability can be limited to the corporation only. Id.

9. It is the duty of the directors of a corporation dealing in explosives to exercise such reasonable supervision over the management of their company's business as will result in the observance of the utmost care on the part of the subordinates who direct or handle the explosives. Id.

10. The liability of the officers of a corporation for negligence in storing giant powder in violation of law depends upon their exercise of reasonable diligence in the control and supervision of the business. Id.

Stock.

11. A purchaser at execution sale of corporate stock, with notice that it has been pledged to a third person, takes subject to the rights of the pledgee, although the pledge has not been entered on the books of the corporation. May v. Cleland (Mich.) 163

Assuming partnership liabilities.

12. The insertion in a deed conveying the assets of a partnership to a corporation organized to continue the business and which has agreed to pay partnership debts to a certain amount, of a clause obligating it to pay "all the liabilities" of the partnership, will not operate to extend its liability beyond the amount specified, unless the insertion of such clause was authorized or ratified by the corporation. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

13. To entitle a creditor of a partnership to payment out of assets of a corporation which was organized to continue the partnership business and received a conveyance of the partnership assets upon undertaking to pay a specified amount of the partnership liabilities, which proves to be less than all, he must show that his claim was among those estimated in fixing the amount so specified. Id.

14. That an organization never became more than a de facto corporation will not relieve it from liability for the debts of a partnership whose business it was organized to continue, and whose assets it received upon undertaking to pay its liabilities. Id.

Insolvency.
15. An agent to whom are intrusted the entire management and control of a corporation whose stockholders hold no meetings has power to make an assignment of its property for its creditors. Conely v. Collins (Mich.) 844

16. Taxes due by a partnership whose business a corporation is organized to continue, which receives the partnership assets upon undertaking to pay its liabilities, are not, in case the corporation becomes insolvent, entitled to preference out of assets in the hands of its receiver, where the statute gives such preference to taxes assessed against the insolvent debtor. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

17. Debts of the partnership must be postponed to those contracted by the corporation after its organization, where a corporation is organized to continue the business of a partnership whose assets are transferred to it upon its undertaking to pay the partnership debts, and the corporation becomes insolvent. Id.

18. The preference of a creditor of an insolvent corporation is not invalid because he was a stockholder, director, and president of the company, and as such participated in the transaction by which he was given a preference over other creditors. Corey v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 766

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; ultra vires contracts of; contract of stockholders. 659
Unrecorded transfer of stock. 163
Liability of officers of, for nuisance. 508
Custom as to power of officers; power of officers to contract. 632
Power to make assignments for creditors. 846
Preference of debts to officers. 766

CORPSE.

See also REPLEVIN.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corpse; property in; right to control. 242

COSTS.

See ARBITRATION, 2.

COUNTIES.

See also BONDS, 3-6, 8; RAILROADS, 5.

1. The state is estopped from questioning the regularity of the passage of an act creating a county, when for four years the county has been recognized by each of the co-ordinate branches of the government as a county and legal subdivision of the state. People, Attorney General, v. Alturas County (Id.) 122

2. The liability of a county "in all cases of lynching when death ensues," under S. C. Const. art. 6, § 6 (S. C. Acts 1896, p. 213), is not limited to cases in which the persons lynched were prisoners or in custody of the court, although the provision contains the words "without regard to the conduct of the officers," as these mean that this liability is without reference to other provisions respecting the lynching of prisoners. Brown v. Orangeburg County (S. C.) 734

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MOBS.

Counties; established by acquiescence in invalid statute. 122

COURTS.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 2; EVIDENCE, 2; INFANTS, 3; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LEGISLATURE, 3; WILLS.

1. Jurisdiction of an inquiry into and control over the internal management of a foreign corporation is not conferred by a statute which in broad and comprehensive terms provides for all actions, suits, or proceedings against foreign corporations. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (Md.) 149

2. The motive or effect of acts within the internal management of a foreign corporation cannot make them cognizable by a court which does not otherwise have jurisdiction over them. Id.

3. An accounting between a foreign mutual insurance association and a member involves an inquiry into the internal affairs of the company, which cannot be made by a court outside of the state in which the corporation has its home. Id.

4. Judicial power is not conferred upon a registrar of deeds, within the prohibition of a constitutional provision separating the departments of government, by a statute requiring him to make certain entries when it appears to him that the person intending to create a charge on property "has the title and right to create such charge," and that the person in whose favor it is to be made "is entitled by the terms of the act to have the same registered,"—especially where a party aggrieved is given the right to apply to a court of equity for relief. People, Deneen, v. Simon (Ill.) 801

5. A civil action against a railroad company by the owner of injured cattle, to recover damages for violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4386, requiring cattle to be unloaded for rest, water, and feeding when confined for twenty-eight consecutive hours, can be maintained in a state court, and is not within the rule which prohibits one state from enforcing the penal laws of another state or country, although there is a penalty provided for violating the statute, which is payable to the United States. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 449

6. A constitutional question is not involved in a case, so as to require the calling in of the judges of the circuit courts to assist in its decision upon failure of the judges of the supreme court to agree, under the provisions of S. C. Const. art. 5, § 12, where the record does not show that the question was presented to and considered by the trial judge. Johnson v. Charleston & S. R. Co. (S. C.) 645

7. Although a constitutional question is involved in a case, yet the circuit judges, need not be called in to assist in its decision, under S. C. Const. art. 5, § 12, in case of failure of the judges of the supreme court to agree, if there is another question involved not requiring the construction of the Constitution, which is decisive, and upon which the conclusions reached manifestly turned. Id.

8. Propositions assumed by the court to be within the case, and questions presented, considered, and deliberately decided by the court, leading up to the final conclusion reached, are not obiter dicta, but, if dicta at all, are judicial dicta, and are as effectually passed upon as the ultimate questions solved. Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 570

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; what constitutes jurisdiction. 101

Interference with business of foreign corporation. 150

Power to say proclamation is not lawful. 466

Rule of stare decisis. 123

COVENANT.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 5.

CREDITORS' BILL.

A creditors' bill will not lie against a municipal corporation to reach money due from it to a contractor who is a debtor of the complainant. Addyston Pipe & S. Co. v. Chicago (Ill.) 405

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Creditors' bill against municipality. 405

CRIMINAL LAW.

See also CONTEMPT, 1; RAPE, 2.

1. A plea of former jeopardy should be sustained where, after the evidence for the state had been introduced at the former trial, the judge, when absent from the courtroom, and in the absence of the prisoner, released a juror upon representations as to the dangerous sickness of his wife, which resulted 44 L. R. A.

in the discharge of the jury without a verdict. Upchurch v. State (Tex.) 694

2. Under a statute permitting discharge of the jury in a felony case upon one of them becoming sick, or in case of accident or circumstance occurring to prevent their being kept together, the necessary facts must be judicially determined; and if the judge, when absent from the courtroom, and in the absence of the prisoner, acts upon representations made to him, and excuses a juror, the prisoner will be entitled to release. Id.

3. The "face of the record" considered on a motion in arrest of judgment on indictment embraces not only the face of the indictment, but the entire record as made up to that point. State v. Haines (La.) 837

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; former jeopardy by reason of the discharge of the jury in the prisoner's absence:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) general rule; (III.) plea allowed; (IV.) plea disallowed. 694

Evidence on motion in arrest. 839

CROSSING.

See RAILROADS, 7, 8.

CURATIVE ACTS.

See CONTRACTS, 12.

CUSTOM.

See also BANKS, 8, 11; EVIDENCE, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Custom; as affecting negligence. 237

DAMAGES.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 20, 21; PLEADING, 6.

1. The fact that a dealer has been fully paid for an article which he sold will not preclude a recovery by him from the party from whom he bought it, on breach of warranty, to the full extent of defects existing in it. Western Twine Co. v. Wright (S. D.) 438

2. One on whom a wilful injury is inflicted is not precluded, by his mere failure to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of the injury, from recovering for so much of the damage as results from that failure. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zantzinger (Tex.) 553

3. Ten dollars is a sufficient compensation for a passenger's injured pride, wounded sensibility, and mortification caused by public arrest, where it was procured by a conductor in the belief that the passenger was fraudulently evading payment of fare, when he in fact tendered a valid mileage ticket, but unreasonably refused to state whether the name on the ticket was his own. Palmer v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 673

DAMS.

See CANALS.

DEAD BODY.

See REPLEVIN.

DEATH.

1. A widow's release of a right of action for the death of her husband does not affect her right to maintain an action for her child in her representative capacity, under Burns's (Ind.) Rev. Stat. 1894, § 285 (Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 284). Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

2. A cause of action for personal injuries which survives by force of Wis. Rev. Stat. § 4253, is separate and distinct from the cause of action in favor of surviving relatives under § 4255. Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 579

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; right of action for injuries causing. 580

DEEDS.

Deposit of, see MORTGAGE, 1, 2.

See also CHAMPERTY, 3; CONTRACTS, 12; REAL PROPERTY; TRUSTS, 3, 4.

1. A deed to a son of the grantor and "his own brothers and sisters" gives no interest to a child born a short time after the execution of the deed. Morris v. Caudle (Ill.) 480

2. A deed executed before the birth of a child, but not delivered until after the birth and also the death of the child, conveys no interest either to the child or those claiming under the child, although the child would have been a grantee if in esse when the instrument took effect. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deeds; infant en ventre sa mere as grantee in deed:—(I.) Ordinary conveyances; (II.) conveyances of uses, trusts, remainders, etc. 43

DE FACTO.

See CORPORATIONS, 1, 14.

DEFENSE.

See CHAMPERTY, 1.

DEFINITIONS.

See PLEADING, 4; POLICE; TAXES, 1.

DENTIST.

See MANDAMUS, 2.

DEPOSIT.

See ARBITRATION.

DEPOSITIONS.

See TRIAL, 3.

DESCENT.

See INSURANCE, 16.

DESERTION.

See ABANDONMENT, 2.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

See also INJUNCTION, 2, 3.

1. The power to assign limits by ordinance, outside of which houses of prostitution are prohibited, is not exhausted by its first exercise, but the limits may be changed by a subsequent ordinance. L'Hote v. New Orleans (La.) 20

2. An ordinance confining houses of prostitution within certain limits is not unconstitutional on the ground that it sanctions vice or undertakes to punish vice. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Disorderly house; injunction against. 523

DITCH.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 5.

DIVIDENDS.

See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

DOMICIL.

See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 2.

DRAFT.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

DRUGGIST.

See also PROXIMATE CAUSE, 3.

The duty to put a label containing the word "Poison" on every poisonous liquid or substance, which is imposed on druggists by Shannon's (Tenn.) Code, § 6745, does not extend to medicines compounded upon the prescription of a physician, though they contain poison. Wise v. Morgan (Tenn.) 549

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Druggists; liability for negligence of. 549

DUE PROCESS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4, 5.

DYNAMITE.

See CORPORATIONS, 10; EXPLOSIONS.

ELECTION DISTRICT.

See LEGISLATURE, 2.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

See CARRIERS, 3.

EMPLOYEES.

See INSURANCE, 4-6.

EQUAL DIVISION.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 31.

EQUITY.

See INFANTS, 3; INJUNCTION.

ESTOPPEL.

See also BONDS, 5, 6; COUNTIES, 1; INSURANCE, 14; NAME.

A municipality will be estopped to enforce the performance of a contract under the same or like conditions that an individual will be estopped to proceed against it. Portland v. Portland Bituminous Paving & Improv. Co. (Or.) 527

EVIDENCE.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 12-14, 25, 28; TRIAL, 1-3; WITNESSES.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

1. The statute of a sister state will be presumed to be similar to that of the forum, in the absence of proof to the contrary. Fisher v. Donovan (Neb.) 383

2. It will be presumed that a court of record in another state which entered judgment upon a warrant of attorney had jurisdiction to do so, and that its proceedings were regular. Van Norman v. Gordon (Mass.) 840

3. The law never presumes fraud, but the presumption is always in favor of innocence and honesty. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis (Va.) 305

4. Usages are presumed to be reasonable, and the person attacking them has the burden of showing their unreasonableness. Kershaw v. Ladd (Or.) 236

5. The mere fact that a building furnished with gas at an unusual pressure was set on fire from the gas does not justify an inference that the increased pressure caused the fire. Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co. (W. Va.) 92

6. A contract made by telegrams is a contract in writing, for which a consideration is presumed under S. D. Comp. Laws, § 3538. Western Twine Co. v. Wright (S. D.) 438

7. The presumption is that a telegram properly addressed and deposited in the telegraph office, with charges prepaid, reached its destination and was delivered in accordance with the obligation which the law imposes upon telegraph companies. Id.

8. A carrier has the burden of showing its want of negligence, when property is lost in transit, although shipped under a contract which limits the carrier's liability to a loss resulting from its negligence. Mitchell v. Carolina C. R. Co. (N. C.) 515

9. The breaking of a trolley pole while being manipulated in the usual way to reverse the direction of the car imposes upon the carrier the burden of proving its lack of negligence, in an action by a passenger injured by the accident. Keator v. Scranton Traction Co. (Pa.) 548

10. The payee of a check who does not promptly present it for payment to the bank which fails before it is presented has the burden of proving that the maker was not injured thereby. Hamlin v. Simpson (Iowa) 397

Documentary.

11. A letter written by a broker to his principal pending the latter's negotiations for a sale of the property, stating that the purchaser was procured through his efforts, is admissible in evidence in an action for commissions, not to support the truth of the statement, but as a fact relating to the conduct of the parties in respect to the transaction in dispute. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

44 L. R. A.

12. A telegram received from a telegraph operator, which purports to be in reply to one which the recipient had previously deposited with the operator, with charges prepaid and properly addressed, is admissible in evidence against the person by whom it purports to have been sent, without any proof that he actually executed or authorized such dispatch, or that it was ever transmitted. Western Twine Co. v. Wright (S. D.) 438

Parol as to writing.

13. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a draft drawn by one as an individual was drawn in accordance with a parol agreement between him and the payee that he should not be bound thereon. Citizens' Bank v. Millett (Ky.) 664

14. An oral promise by the payee of a note to renew it until such time as the improvement in the business situation will enable the maker to proceed in business without such assistance is not enforceable in equity. Hall v. First Nat. Bank (Mass.) 319

15. Oral evidence of an agreement by the cashier of a bank to allow a depositor to check against a special deposit for which certificates of deposit had been issued is admissible in an action against such depositor by one to whom he had given a check for the amount of a debt which check was not duly presented, for the purpose of showing that he had reasonable ground to believe that such check would be paid, although he had no general deposit in the bank. Hamlin v. Simpson (Iowa) 397

Opinions.

16. The opinion of a witness that the glass in a broken window was unsafe is incompetent, where that is one of the principal points in the case. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

17. A witness after testifying that, in his judgment, employment about a certain machine in a mill is quite dangerous, may state whether he considers it necessary to instruct a new man to that effect. James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 33

Declarations.

18. Loose declarations of a grantor, made twenty years after the date of a deed, cannot be proved to impeach it. Wilson v. Anderson (Pa.) 542

19. An agreement made openly in court and participated in by the parties, their counsel, and the district attorney, has no element of confidential professional communication in it which will preclude testimony concerning it by one of the attorneys. Kramer v. Kister (Pa.) 432

Relevancy.

20. Evidence that a declaration of homestead was made is not admissible as tending to prove the intention with which articles in controversy, claimed to be fixtures, were affixed to the premises. Philadelphia Mortgage & T. Co. v. Miller (Wash.) 559

21. Evidence that farmers who purchased twine were troubled by its breaking is admissible on behalf of the dealer, as against the party from whom he bought it, in order to show the worthlessness of the twine, where there is no claim made for injury to the farmers. Western Twine Co. v. Wright (S. D.) 439

22. Evidence of the value of articles belonging to plaintiff, but taken from his house by an officer who broke into it to execute a writ of replevin which did not cover those articles, is admissible in trespass against him. Kelley v. Schuyler (R. I.) 435

23. Evidence of an agreement to compound a prosecution for felony is not inadmissible because the agreement is void, when offered to contradict a party who has denied that there was such an agreement. Kramer v. Kister (Pa.) 432

24. Evidence of defendant's wealth, property, and business is not admissible in a suit for negligent injuries. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

25. Upon the question whether or not one person held another in front of him as a shield from an impending explosion, evidence is not admissible that one whom witness took to be the former said he was not injured because protected from the explosion. Id.

26. Evidence of the pressure shown usually by the gauge of another gas company is not admissible in an action for negligently furnishing natural gas at a pressure so great as to cause the burning of a building. Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co. (W. Va.) 92

27. In an action by a creditor of a partnership to recover his debt from a corporation which was organized to continue the partnership business and received its assets upon undertaking to pay its debts, evidence is admissible to show the true character of the transaction out of which his equity arose, as compared with the form which it assumed in the proceedings incident to the organization of the corporation. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

Sufficiency.

28. Connection with a conspiracy may be established by circumstantial evidence. Tucker v. Hyatt (Ind.) 129

29. A finding that defendant did not know that a bank upon which he drew a check in favor of plaintiff was insolvent at the time is sustained by evidence that two days thereafter he made a large deposit in the bank although he took security for special deposits made by him therein, where such deposits were made at a time when banks were failing all over the country. Hamlin v. Simpson (Iowa) 397

30. A finding that the cashier of a bank agreed to allow defendant to check against the amount of a special deposit in the bank is sustained by positive evidence by defendant to that effect and by evidence that the bank although hopelessly insolvent and making desperate efforts to keep its doors open permitted defendant to overdraw his general account. Id.

31. A charge that defendant drew plaintiff in front of him to serve as a shield from an impending explosion is not supported by the uncorroborated evidence of plaintiff, whose memory was seriously affected by the accident, so as to justify submission of the case to the jury where this testimony is contradicted by defendant, several disinterested witnesses, and by well-known and recognized physical facts about which there is no conflict. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216
-41 L. R. A.

32. The evidence to establish a gift must be explicit and convincing in support of every element needed to constitute a valid donation. Whalen v. Milholland (Md.) 208

33. An assignment purporting to be signed by the mark of a woman holding an insurance policy on her husband's life, and delivered with the policy by the husband to his creditor, is not sufficiently proved, nearly twenty-five years afterward, by the testimony of an attesting witness to the effect that he certainly saw her sign the paper or he would not have put his name there, when he is unable to recall the circumstances or the place of the alleged signing,—especially when there is no proof that she made or authorized the delivery of the policy to the alleged assignee, or that the assignment was read or explained to her, while it appears that she could not read. Wienecke v. Arbin (Md.) 142

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INSURANCE.

Burden of proof as to waiver of proofs of loss. 425

Admissibility of telegram on behalf of person receiving it in reply to another. 438

Proof of signature by mark when attesting witnesses thereto are dead or cannot remember the transaction:—(I.) Of testator: (a) where the attesting witness is dead; (b) where the attesting witness is forgetful; (II.) of maker of other instruments: (a) where the attesting witness is dead; (b) where the attesting witness is forgetful. 142

Conclusion of witness on matter of fact; questions of experts; presumption as to negligence in case of accident. 501

Of declarations as to trust. 543

Of injuries not described in complaint. 286

EXCEPTIONS.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 10-14.

EXECUTION.

See also JUDICIAL SALE.

Examination of a wife on supplementary proceedings against her husband, with respect to property in her possession, is not an examination "for or against her husband," within the meaning of 2 Hill's (Wash.) Code Proc. § 1649, requiring the husband's consent to her examination for or against him. Frankenthal v. Solomonson (Wash.) 311

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

A special title acquired by an assignee of a mortgage for the purpose of foreclosure only will not vest in or devolve upon his administrator upon his death. Taylor v. Carroll (Md.) 479

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Executors and administrators; estoppel to dispute sale by. 370

EXEMPTION.

See HOMESTEAD; LEVY AND SEIZURE, NOTES AND BRIEFS; TAXES, 4.

EXPLOSIONS.

See also CORPORATIONS, 10; EVIDENCE, 25, 31; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 2; TRESPASS.

An explosion of giant powder kept by a corporation within the city limits, in violation of law, renders the corporation liable for the damages thereby caused. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. (Mont.) 508

EXPLOSIVES.

A city ordinance cannot authorize a larger quantity of explosive powder to be kept within the city limits than the state statute allows. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. (Mont.) 508

EXTRAORDINARY SESSION.

See LEGISLATURE, 3.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

See also CARRIERS, 6; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A private individual who has procured the arrest of an innocent person by an officer without a warrant cannot justify by showing that he acted in good faith, without malice, and upon a belief of guilt founded upon reasonable grounds. Palmer v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 673

2. The settlement of an unwarranted prosecution of a passenger for alleged fraudulent evasion of the payment of fare, made by payment of the fare due and all costs of prosecution, and by an acknowledgment of the conductor of complete satisfaction "for evading his railroad fare," is not a bar or waiver of a cause of action by the passenger for false imprisonment. Id.

FALSE PERSONATION.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

False personation; what constitutes; person as false token. 266

FALSE PRETENSES.

A person cannot be himself a false token so as to be indictable for obtaining money by means of a false token and false pretenses, when he procures money from a woman by a promise of marriage, and by offering himself to her under a fictitious name, and by falsely stating that he is unmarried. State v. Renick (Or.) 220
44 L. R. A.

FELLOW SERVANT.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 6.

FERRIES.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ferry; municipal liability for. 478

FICTION.

See SEDUCTION.

FIDELITY INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE, 2.

FINDING.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 7, 8, 22, 23, 30.

FIRE.

See EVIDENCE, 5; GAS, 1; LIFE TENANTS.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

FIXTURES.

Stock mantels sold separately and made adaptive to any kind of a house, and which support themselves without any fastenings, or may be fastened merely by screws to render them more stable, and bath tubs resting upon legs and attachable to any heating system, and a hot-water heater attached to a building only by its plumbing connections,—do not constitute fixtures as matter of law, but may be found by a jury to be removable. Philadelphia Mortg. & T. Co. v. Miller (Wash.) 559

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fixtures; fastened to building. 559

FORECLOSURE.

See LIS PENDENS; MORTGAGE.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See COURTS, 1-3; INJUNCTION, 5; RECEIVERS, 1; WRIT AND PROCESS.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See JUDGMENT, 3.

FORFEITURE.

See ARBITRATION, 1; INSURANCE, 12.

FORGERY.

See BANKS, 5-7.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

FRAUD.

See EVIDENCE.

GARNISHMENT.

See also CREDITORS' BILL; WRIT AND PROCESS, 3.

1. A judgment against a garnishee of a nonresident debtor, who does not appear and is served by constructive service only, when the action is based on a contract which is utterly void in the state where the principal debtor resides, will not protect the garnishee when sued by the latter. Stewart v. North-ern Assur. Co. (W. Va.) 101

2. A demand against a foreign insurance company has no situs for the purpose of garnishment in a state where it has an agency, when the demand is due to a nonresident for a loss of property insured in another state in which the loss is payable. National Bank v. Furtick (Del.) 115

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Garnishment; situs of debt; of debt to nonresident. 101

Service of writ of. 115

GAS.

See also EVIDENCE, 5, 26; MINES.

1. A gas company which negligently and carelessly permits the pressure of the gas which it furnishes to be unreasonably great is liable for the burning of a dwelling supplied by it, which results therefrom. Bar-rickman v. Marion Oil Co. (W. Va.) 92

2. A person or corporation furnishing natural gas for use in dwellings is bound to exercise care, skill, and diligence proportionate to the danger. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gas; negligence in use of. 92

GIANT POWDER.

See CORPORATIONS, 10; EXPLOSIONS.

GIFT.

See also EVIDENCE, 32; TRUSTS, 2.

1. A gift of savings bank deposits is made by delivery of the pass book from the donor to the donee, describing them as joint owners, and making the money payable to the order of either, or the survivor when it was done with the intention of donating the fund, and preserving no control over it. Whalen v. Milholland (Md.) 208

2. No perfected gift is made of a savings bank deposit by depositing it in the names of donor and donee, making it payable to the order of either or to the survivor, and by the words "Joint owners" stamped on the pass book, where the donor continues in possession of the pass book, and therefore retains dominion over the funds, with the right at any moment to withdraw the whole of it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gift; of bank deposit. 208

Revocation of. 385

GOVERNOR.

See LEGISLATURE, 3.

GRIPMAN.

See STREET RAILWAYS.

GUARANTY.

See BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 2.

44 L. R. A.

HABEAS CORPUS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

To release apprentice. 277

HIGHWAYS.

See also BONDS, 1, 2; INJUNCTION, 4; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

1. One contracting with a city for the right to maintain a well in a public street is bound to take notice that the city has no power to bind itself by such a contract, and may revoke it at any time. Snyder v. Mt. Pulaski (Ill.) 407

2. Permission to use a well in a city street, given as part of an electric-light franchise, is a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the municipality, although the license has made expenditures on the faith of it, and would not have accepted the franchise without such permission. Id.

3. The duty of a city to keep a sidewalk in suitable condition to walk over extends to a person rightfully riding on the walk in a tricycle; and the test of the city's liability to him is the same as if he had been walking. Wheeler v. Boone (Iowa) 821

4. A tricycle in which a person unable to walk is traveling on a sidewalk is not within the scope of an ordinance against leading, riding, or placing "any beast of burden or vehicle on any sidewalk," or an ordinance prohibiting riding or driving other than between curb lines of the street. Id.

5. Placing telephone lines in a city street without any permit or direction from the city authorities, and without even giving the board of public works, to which the city charter gave authority in the matter, any time to act on an application for a permit, is not justified by the fact that there were no ordinances of the common council or regulations of the board of public works in relation to pole setting. Marshfield v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. (Wis.) 565

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; maintaining wells in. 409

Use of sidewalks; riding vehicles on. 821

HOMESTEAD.

See also EVIDENCE, 20.

1. The loss of the family after acquiring a homestead will not terminate the homestead right. Gowdy v. Johnson (Ky.) 400

2. An increase in the value of a homestead will not authorize a revaluation and reassignment,—at least when there has been no rapid or extraordinary increase of value, or any unreasonable outlay on the premises. Id.

3. A mistake of mere judgment with respect to the value of the lands set apart for a homestead will not be ground of impeaching the determination by which the homestead was set aside. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homestead; revaluation or reassignment of homestead for appreciation or depreciation of value:—(I.) When the question arises; (II.) change from fluctuation in prices; (III.) change from improvements and additions; (IV.) homestead in decedent's estate.

400

HONESTY.

See EVIDENCE, 3.

HORSE.

See LIENS, 2.

HOSPITAL.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3.

1. A surety on the bond of a pest house keeper is not, by executing the bond, rendered liable for the maintenance of the pest house within forbidden limits. Clayton v. Henderson (Ky.) 474

2. Ministerial officers only are liable for the erection of a pest house within a mile of a city in violation of Ky. Stat. § 3909. Id.

3. The restriction against locating a pest house within a mile of a city, made by Ky. Stat. § 3900, is not repealed by the act of June 14, 1893, providing that the common council of a city of the third class shall have power to make quarantine laws and enforce them within ten miles of the city, to establish hospitals, and other institutions, and acquire and hold land for such purposes within or beyond the boundaries of the city. Id.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME.

See DISORDERLY HOUSES.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

See also ABANDONMENT; ACTION OR SUIT, 4; APPEAL AND ERROR, 24; EXECUTION; FALSE PRETENSES; RAPE, 1.

The permanent alimony granted to a woman on divorce need not be limited to an allowance payable at stated periods sufficient for her support, but the allowance of a gross sum out of the husband's estate in addition to a monthly allowance is within the power of the court, under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2364, authorizing such alimony as the court shall deem just and reasonable, regarding the husband's ability to pay, the special estate of the wife, and all the circumstances of the case. Hooper v. Hooper (Wis.) 725

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Amount of alimony allowable. 725

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

See CONSPIRACY; TRUSTS, 3.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

See LATERAL SUPPORT.

INFANTS.

See also APPRENTICES; TRIAL, 8.

1. The real welfare of a child is the principal consideration in awarding its custody as between conflicting claims thereto. Anderson v. Young (S. C.) 277

2. The custody of a minor by virtue of a fair agreement with the parent, not prejudicial to the welfare of the minor, although 44 L. R. A.

not binding upon him, is not unlawful or against public policy, so as to constitute such an illegal restraint as a court must relieve at the will or caprice of the parent. Id.

3. The restoration to their parents of infants committed to a charitable institution by a court or magistrate of competent jurisdiction, under N. Y. Pen. Code, § 291, is within the general jurisdiction of the supreme court of New York as a court of chancery, and is also within the power conferred on the court by N. Y. Laws 1884, chap. 438, providing for the return of pauper children to the custody of their parents, when the interests of the children shall be promoted thereby, and the parents are fit, competent, and able to give them proper support and education. Re Knowack (N. Y.) 690

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also DEEDS.

Infant; power of attorney of. 168

Power of courts as to custody of. 699

INHABITANT.

See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 2.

INJUNCTION.

1. Equity has jurisdiction to restrain existing or threatened public nuisances by injunction, at the suit of a private person who suffers therefrom a special and peculiar injury distinct from that suffered by him in common with the public at large. Blagen v. Smith (Or.) 522

2. The rule that an injunction will not be granted against the continuance of a nuisance in a locality mainly occupied for business does not apply where the nuisance is malum in se, such as a house of ill fame. Id.

3. Owners of property so near to a house of ill fame that their enjoyment of their property is affected by disgusting scenes and sounds in such house sustain an injury different in kind from that suffered by the public at large, which entitles them to an injunction against the maintenance of the nuisance. Id.

4. An injunction is properly granted in a suit by a city against an unauthorized obstruction of a street by telephone poles. Marshfield v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. (Wis.) 565

5. An injunction cannot be granted against illegal assessments upon members by a foreign insurance association, although they are alleged to be unnecessary and made with the dishonest and fraudulent purpose of forcing members to lapse, as this would involve an inquiry into the internal management of the association. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (Md.) 149

6. A decree for the continuous operation of a leased railroad as it was then operated is not objectionable as disregarding the exigencies that may arise, when the existing train service is such as the lessee has for several years deemed proper and necessary. Southern R. Co. v. Franklin & P. R. Co. (Va.) 297

7. Equity may compel the continued operation of a leased railroad during the term of the lease by a mandatory injunction, which is in fact a decree of specific performance, as the remedy at law would be neither complete nor adequate. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction, mandatory rule as to granting. 298

Against bawdy house. 523

By municipalities against nuisances by railroads and electrical companies:—(I.) Railroads; (II.) telegraph and telephone poles. 565

Against use of name. 542

INNKEEPER.

See LIENS, L.

INNOCENCE.

See EVIDENCE, 3.

INSOLVENCY.

See also BANKS, 15, 16; CORPORATIONS, 16; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

A conveyance of property of a corporation in trust to be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of indebtedness, also authorizing the trustee to collect accounts and use the proceeds in payment of debts, but providing that any surplus shall be returned to the corporation or its assigns, is an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and not a mere mortgage. Conely v. Collins (Mich.) 844

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insolvency; assignability of cause of action for personal injuries in case of. 177

Proof of secured claims for dividends. 450

What constitutes assignment for creditors; power to make assignment. 846

INSURANCE.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 7; CONTRACTS, 4; COURTS, 3; GARNISHMENT, 2; POLICE.

1. Insurance of a kind not known at the time of its passage is within a provision of a statute excepting insurance from the kinds of business for the transaction of which corporations may be formed under it, although provision is made in another statute for corporations to transact all kinds of insurance then known. People, Kasson, v. Rose (Ill.) 124

Fidelity insurance.

2. Guaranteeing the fidelity of officers and the performance of contracts is insurance within the meaning of a statute excepting the business of insurance from those for which corporations may be formed. Id.

Of common carriers.

3. A contract to indemnify a common carrier of passengers against losses occurring from injuries to passengers carried by it is not invalid as against public policy because it covers losses resulting from its negligence or the negligence of its servants. Trenton 44 L. R. A.

Pass. R. Co. v. Guarantor's Liability Indemnity Co. (N. J. Sup.) 213

Of employers.

4. Recovery against an employer for the death of an employee precludes any right of the latter's representatives to recover on an insurance policy taken out by the employer, which includes a clause insuring against death or injury of employees or other persons, and providing for payment therefor to the employer "for the benefit of the injured person or persons, or their legal representatives in case of death." Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Insp. & Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 512

5. Insurance of an employer against loss of life or injury to person either of his employees or other persons, caused by a peril insured against, making the insurance payable to him for the benefit of the injured person or persons, or their legal representatives in case of death, and not contingent upon his legal liability, does not create any right of action in favor of an employee or his legal representatives,—especially in case of one who was not employed when the insurance was taken. [Per Gray, J.] Id.

6. A father who sues for injuries sustained by his minor son in a mill in which the latter was employed is not entitled to recover from the employer insurance money which may be ultimately received by the latter under an accident policy in which he is the beneficiary, although the premiums were paid with sums exacted monthly from the wages of the employee. James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 33

Mutual companies.

7. The contract between a mutual insurance association and a member cannot be construed when the application, constitution, and by-laws, which form part of the contract, are not before the court. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (Md.) 149

8. Assessments paid for a series of years to a mutual insurance association by a member cannot be recovered back simply because he failed to read or to understand the provisions of his contract. Id.

Insurable interest.

9. The insurable interest of a creditor in the life of his debtor is limited to the amount of the indebtedness, although that may include the cost of taking out and keeping up the insurance, if made a charge against the debtor or his estate, or upon the proceeds of the policy when collected. Exchange Bank v. Loh (Ga.) 372

Assignment.

10. One having no insurable interest in the life of another may acquire by assignment a valid policy upon his life, and enforce it to the full amount. Steinback v. Diepenbrock (N. Y.) 417

11. A life insurance policy taken out by one upon his own life for the purpose of assigning it to another having no insurable interest will be invalid. Id.

Murder of insured.

12. The murder of a person whose life is insured, by an assignee of the policy, whose claim to it is valid only for a reimbursement of premiums paid, forfeits only the assignee's part of the insurance, and not the residue thereof, to which the estate of the insured is entitled. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis (Va.) 305

Amount.

13. The cost to the purchaser in possession, and not to the seller who attempted to retain a secret lien for the purchase money, is the value of property which must be paid by an insurer under a policy stating that the loss is payable to vendor and vendee as their interests may appear, it being understood that the title is in the vendor, where the property has been turned over to the purchaser absolutely for a sum evidenced by cash and notes, which has mostly been paid so that the seller asserts no claim under its lien. Post Printing & Pub. Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. (Pa.) 272

Proofs of loss; waiver.

14. A beneficiary in a life insurance policy is not estopped by statements in the proofs of loss as to the cause of death, which were made in good faith, upon information received from the attending physician, from showing that the death resulted from another cause. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Dick (Mich.) 846

15. The waiver of proofs of loss, effected by the insurer's demand for arbitration, is not affected by the failure of the arbitrators to agree, without fault of the assured, so that such proofs can be subsequently demanded. Pretzfelder v. Merchants Ins. Co. (N. C.) 424

Interest in life insurance.

16. Children to whom a policy of insurance on their father's life is payable, if their mother be not living at his death, have a vested, though contingent, interest, and on the death of one of them before the mother's death his interest will descend to his widow and children. Voss v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 689

17. An insurance policy issued without change, except as to amount, from one which was surrendered merely for reduction, is to be construed, with reference to the interest of a beneficiary, who has died before the surrender, as of the date of the original contract. Id.

18. Courts should not concern themselves with the disposition of the proceeds of wagering policies. Exchange Bank v. Loh (Ga.) 372

19. A promise by a wife to her husband, that she will pay his debts, does not create a trust in a benefit certificate on his life of which she is the beneficiary. Fisher v. Donovan (Neb.) 383

20. A member of a fraternal beneficiary society has no interest or property in the proceeds of a certificate payable to his widow or other dependent persons, that he can impress such proceeds with a trust in favor of his creditors. Id.

44 L. R. A.

Interest in fire insurance.

21. A life tenant receiving insurance for the loss of a building by fire must hold any excess of the amount received over the value of his life interest as a trustee for the remainderman, unless the money is used to rebuild. Sampson v. Bagley (R. I.) 711

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; what constitutes.	125
On life; murder of insured.	305
On life; nature of; insurable interest of creditor.	372
On life; trust in; parol trust, change of beneficiary.	384
On life; validity of assignment of.	417
Against liability to employees; right of action on.	513
For benefit of children; rights of grandchildren.	689
Effect of change of title.	861

Conclusiveness of proofs of loss as against insured or his beneficiaries:—(I.) General rule; (II.) in life insurance: (a) in general; (b) misstatements as to dates, etc.; (c) as to condition of mind of insured; (d) as to cause of death: (1) in general; (2) coroner's inquests, suicide; (3) doctor's certificates, etc.; (III.) in fire insurance: (a) in general; (b) misstatements as to cause of fire; (c) amount of loss; (d) misstatements as to occupancy and use of premises; (e) misstatements as to ownership, etc.; (f) discrepancy as to building; (g) other insurance; (h) magistrate's certificate. 846

Condition as to furnishing proofs of loss; waiver of proofs by demands for appraisal. 425

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

The determination as to the issuance of a license by a judge of the circuit court under Md. act 1894, chap. 6, § 7, upon an application by the clerk, when an objection has been filed, is required to be made upon notice to the applicant and objector and after hearing the evidence, and is, therefore, judicial in its nature, and not the exercise of a purely executive or administrative function which cannot be imposed upon the court. McCrea v. Roberts (Md.) 485

JAILS.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4.

JEOPARDY.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

JOINDER.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 6.

JUDGES.

See COURTS.

JUDGMENT.

See also CONTRACTS, 12; EVIDENCE, 2; GARNISHMENT, 1.

1. Entering separate judgments in favor of principal and sureties who separately answered, and in whose favor separate verdicts were rendered, is not improper, when it does not injure the plaintiff. Western Twine Co. v. Wright (S. D.) 438

2. A decree pro confesso entered on default of defendant to a bill in chancery concludes him only as to the averments of the bill, and not as to the sufficiency of the bill itself, or the averments contained in it to justify the decree. North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ackley (Ill.) 177

3. A judgment by confession entered in another state in conformity to the terms of a warrant of attorney executed in that state, by a person who was at the time a resident thereof, must be given full faith and credit as a judgment rendered by consent, although it was rendered without any personal service on the defendant. Van Norman v. Gordon (Mass.) 840

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; of courts of other states; effect of. 101

Power of attorney to satisfy. 168

Rendered without jurisdiction on merely substituted service. 802

JUDICIAL SALE.

A judgment creditor who, in good faith, buys land at a proper execution sale, on his own valid judgment, does not take the land subject to prior secret equities. Pugh v. Highley (Ind.) 302

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judicial sale; bona fide purchase at. 392

JURISDICTION.

See COURTS; GARNISHMENT; WILLS.

JURY.

Questions for, see TRIAL.

See also STATUTES, 4, 5.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. The lease of a building which has a door opening at considerable height into space, and unprovided with bars and guards, does not render the landlord liable to a person who is injured in consequence of the failure of the lessee or other person during the lease to keep the door properly fastened. Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming (Tex.) 279

2. A lessor who removes the platform from a well in order to put it in proper condition as required by his lease, and leaves the well open and unguarded at a distance of about 3 feet from the kitchen door near a path that leads to a privy, is liable to a guest of the lessee who falls into the well in the night while attempting to go to the privy without knowing that the platform has been taken off from the well. Barman v. Spencer (Ind.) 815

3. The collection of rents from a subtenant does not operate by law as a cancellation of the original lease and an assumption of 44 L. R. A.

the possession of the property by the lessor. Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming (Tex.) 279

4. The retention of one room in a leased building for fifteen days after the expiration of the lease, because it is occupied by a member of the tenant's family, who is too ill to be safely moved, is not such a holding over, where prior notice of intention to surrender the premises has been given, and the usual notice to let has been placed on the building by the landlord, as will create an implied contract or duty imposed by law on the tenant to pay rent for the remainder of a new term after the premises are completely surrendered. Herter v. Mullen (N. Y.) 703

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord's liability to third persons injured on premises. 280

Unavoidable holding over by tenant. 703

LATERAL SUPPORT.

The employment of an independent contractor to make an excavation upon a lot in near proximity to a neighbor's house, in a populous city, and to the depth of several feet below the level of the foundation of that house, does not relieve the proprietor from the obligation either to see that the contractor in doing the work protects the neighbor's wall by the exercise of due care, or to give the neighbor timely notice of the nature and extent of the intended excavation that he may take due precautions for the protection of his own wall. Bonaparte v. Wiseman (Md.) 482

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lateral support; right to. 482

LAW.

See EVIDENCE, 1.

LAW OF PLACE.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

LAW OF THE CASE.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 32.

LEASE.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT; MINES; RAILROADS, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LEGISLATURE.

1. The legislature may fix the commencement of the term of office of its members, when the Constitution fixes the term, but does not expressly provide when the term shall begin. Farrelly v. Cole (Kan.) 464

2. The apportionment of a state into representative districts, repealing all prior acts in conflict with the new law, does not terminate the existence of the legislature which passes the act, or shorten the term of office of its members. 1d.

3. The question of the existence of an extraordinary occasion of sufficient gravity to justify a call for an extra session of the legislature is to be determined by the gov-error alone in the exercise of his discretion as a sworn officer, which is not subject to challenge or review by the courts. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Legislature; special session of; changing terms of members of. 466

LETTER.

See EVIDENCE, 11.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

A nonresident may claim an exemption of household furniture from attachment under Hill's (Or.) Ann. Laws, § 282, subd. 4, providing that household furniture to a specified value shall be exempt from execution if owned by a householder and in actual use or kept for use by and for his family, or when being removed from one habitation to another on a change of residence. Bond v. Martin (Or.) 430

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy; right of nonresidents to claim exemptions. 430

LICENSE.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 3; HIGHWAYS, 2; INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License; by ordinance; revocability. 409

LIENS.

1. The lien of an innkeeper or keeper of live stock is not lost by his levying an attachment upon the property. Lambert v. Nicklas (W. Va.) 561

2. One who keeps a horse or other live stock for compensation has a lien thereon for such compensation, under W. Va. Code 1891, chap. 100, § 15. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lien; of bailee of animal; waiver of. 561

LIFE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

LIFE TENANTS.

See also INSURANCE, 21.

1. The mere acceptance by a life tenant of a devise of real estate, containing a direction to keep in repair, does not impose upon him the duty to rebuild in case of the accidental destruction of buildings by fire. Sampson v. Bagley (R. I.) 711

2. The liability of a tenant for life for loss by an accidental fire, as established by the English statute of 6 Edw. I., chap. 5, known as the statute of Gloucester, does not exist in Rhode Island, as that statute, though in force except as modified, is practically superseded by the Rhode Island statutes. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Life tenants; liability to repair or rebuild. 711

44 L. R. A.

LIGHTS.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

A statute will be construed as a limitation law if it can be upheld by such construction while a literal construction of it would destroy vested rights. People, Deane, v. Simon (Ill.) 801

LIS PENDENS.

More than twenty years' delay in proceeding with a foreclosure after it has been begun will relieve a purchaser of the property from the effect of the lis pendens as notice, if there is no satisfactory excuse or explanation of the delay. Taylor v. Carroll (Md.) 479

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lis pendens; effect of. 480

LIVE STOCK.

See CARRIERS, 12-17.

LYNCHING.

See COUNTIES, 2; MOB, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

See TRIAL, 11.

MANDAMUS.

See also PLEADING, 3.

1. A writ of mandamus does not lie to control judicial discretion. McCrea v. Roberts (Md.) 485

2. A writ of mandate cannot be issued to compel the board of dental examiners to indorse a diploma on the ground that it was issued by a reputable dental college, when the board has decided to the contrary, under Cal. Stat. 1885, p. 110, § 5, requiring the board to indorse such diploma "when satisfied of the character of such institution." Van Vleck v. Board of Dental Examiners (Cal.) 635

3. The operation of a line of street railway which has been abandoned cannot be specially enjoined as a legal duty by writ of mandate, where the right of the corporation to use the streets was given by ordinance granting it the franchise and easement of maintaining its railway in the street, subject to forfeiture for failure to operate it, and there is no express provision requiring the maintenance or operation of the line. State, Knight, v. Helena Power & L. Co. (Mont.) 692

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; to compel action by officers. 495

To compel operation of street railway. 692

MARK.

See EVIDENCE, 33, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MARRIAGE.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

See also ASSAULT; CONFLICT OF LAWS; CONTRACTS, 10; LATERAL SUPPORT.

1. The release of the liability of a railroad company by an employee's election to accept the benefits of a relief fund in lieu of his right of action for damages, is not prohibited by S. C. Const. 1895, art. 9, § 15, giving such employees the same rights and remedies allowed to persons who are not employees in certain cases, and providing that any waiver of the benefit of that section shall be null and void. Johnson v. Charleston & S. R. Co. (S. C.) 645

2. A servant is held to the same degree of care in the performance of whatever is intrusted to him by the master to do that the law would hold the master to were he acting for himself. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. (Mont.) 508

3. An employee who is suddenly called on by the foreman in a mill to take the place of an absent workman, in a position that is dangerous, of the duties of which he has no knowledge and concerning which he is not instructed, may recover for an injury sustained by him and due to his inexperience. James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 33

4. The violation of an ordinance regulating speed and signals of trains is not a risk assumed by a railroad employee, but obedience to the ordinance is a duty owing by the railroad company to its employees. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

5. Continuing negligence of an employer, such as the failure to furnish safe appliances in general use, which would have prevented the possibility of injury, precludes the defense of contributory negligence. Troxler v. Southern R. Co. (N. C.) 313

6. Failure to furnish proper and safe appliances, whereby a servant is injured, cannot be attributed to the negligence of a fellow servant. Id.

7. Failure to furnish automatic car couplers in common use for freight cars is negligence per se, which renders a railroad company liable to an employee for injuries received in attempting to couple cars having skeleton drawheads of unequal height. Id.

8. The master is liable for injury done by the wanton, wilful, and malicious act of an employee within the scope and in the discharge of his duties. Pierce v. North Carolina R. Co. 316

9. The tortious act of a brakeman in throwing coal at a boy on the tender of an engine, by which he knocks him off or frightens him so that he jumps off, causing him to be run over and killed by the engine, renders the railroad company liable. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

The duty of a master to instruct and warn his servants as to the perils of the employment:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) actual knowledge of servant, existence of duty to instruct negatived by; (III.) constructive 44 L. R. A.

knowledge of servant as bearing upon the duty of the master to instruct him: (a) generally; (b) ordinary perils of an employment, no duty to instruct as to; (c) extraordinary risks of employment; (d) fact that danger was or was not discoverable by ordinary care; (IV.) experience of servant as a special factor bearing upon the master's duty of instruction: (a) generally; (b) circumstances under which no instruction is necessary; (c) circumstances under which instruction is necessary; (V.) minority of servant as a special factor bearing upon the master's duty of instruction: (a) general principles stated; (b) minor employees usually on the same footing as adults, after proper instruction has been given; (c) constructive knowledge of dangers, when a bar to an action by minor servants; (d) circumstances to be considered in determining whether knowledge of a danger is to be imputed to a minor; (e) illustrative cases in regard to the constructive knowledge of minor servants; (VI.) what knowledge of scientific facts is imputed to servants (adults and minors): (a) in case of adults; (b) in case of minors; (VII.) duty to warn servant against transitory and sporadic dangers: (a) introductory; (b) cases involving customary methods of doing business and departure from such methods; (c) perils due to transitory changes in the condition of the place of work; (d) perils due to the recurrent movements of railway cars and other heavy bodies; (VIII.) what instruction and warning will be sufficient: (a) in the case of adults; (b) in the case of infants; (c) as to sporadic and transitory dangers; (IX.) no recovery by servant unless failure to instruct was efficient cause of injury; (X.) duty of instruction considered with reference to the doctrine of common employment. 33

Contracts to limit master's liability.

639

Duty of master as to safe appliances. 313

Liability for wanton and malicious act of employee. 316

Liability for act of independent contractor. 482

MAXIMS.

1. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Blagen v. Smith (Or.) 522

2. Noscitur a sociis. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 449
Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 579

MEANDER LINE.

See BOUNDARIES.

MEMORANDUM.

See CONTRACTS, 5.

MINES.

1. A lease for the purpose of operating for oil and gas, without other consideration than prospective oil royalty and gas rental, is voidable, if not void, at the pleasure of either party, where it does not bind the lessee to diligent search for oil and gas. Steel-smith v. Gartlan (W. Va.) 107

2. A lease for the purpose of operating for oil and gas for five years and as much longer as oil or gas is found in paying quantities, without other consideration than prospective oil royalty and gas rental, vests no present title in the lessee except the mere right of exploration, but the title remains inchoate and contingent on the finding under explorations provided for in such lease of oil and gas in paying quantities, and the completion of a nonproductive well, even though at great expense, vests no title in such lessee. Id.

3. A lease for the purpose of operating for oil and gas for five years and as much longer as oil or gas is found in paying quantities, without other consideration than prospective oil royalty and gas rental, becomes invalid and of no binding force as to any of its provisions, after an unsuccessful attempt to bore a well is abandoned, where there is no provision contained therein for the boring of a second well if the first well proves nonproductive. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; oil lease; effect of; forfeiture of. 107

MISFEASANCE.

See CORPORATIONS, 8.

MOB.

See also COUNTIES, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mobs; liability of county or municipality for damage by. 734

MONOPOLY.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3; WATERS.

MORTGAGE.

See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; LIS PENDENS; NOTICE, 2.

1. The English doctrine of an equitable mortgage by a deposit of title deeds does not obtain in Nebraska, since it contravenes the object and purpose of the statute of frauds and also the recording acts. Bloomfield State Bank v. Miller (Neb.) 387

2. A court of equity cannot enforce a mortgage by deposit of title deeds because the loan which the deposit was made to secure has been actually received by the depositor. Id.

3. The right of possession of property sold under foreclosure of a mortgage, during the year allowed by statute for redemption, is in the purchaser, where the mortgage transfers the title, leaving only an equity of redemption in the mortgagor, and the statute is silent as to the right of possession after sale. Danehower v. Dawson (Ark.) 193

4. The right of redemption from a sale under foreclosure of a mortgage is given by the Arkansas statute in every case, and is not limited to sales at a second offering required by the statute because a bid of two thirds the appraised value of the property is not received at the first offering. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; effect of; redemption from. 194
Equitable; by deposit of title deeds. 387

MOTION.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4; PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

MOTIVE.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 6; APPEAL AND ERROR, 18; BONDS, 1, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 6; CREDITORS' BILL; DISORDERLY HOUSES, 2; ESTOPPEL; EXPLOSIVES; HIGHWAYS, 1; PARLIAMENTARY LAW; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS; WATERS.

1. The offer of a reward for testimony that shall secure the conviction of persons who set fire to buildings within city limits is within the general power to make regulations for the safety and general welfare of the inhabitants. People, Maynard, v. Holly (Mich.) 677

2. Water and lights are not in themselves such necessary expenses of a town, within the meaning of N. C. Const. art. 7, § 7, that an unusual levy of tax may be made or a debt incurred without proper legislative authority and the approval of the popular vote. Thrift v. Elizabeth City (N. C.) 427

3. A city is liable for the damages caused by the erection of a pest house near the residence of a person, notwithstanding the fact that it is erected within a mile of the city, contrary to a statute which expressly makes the officers liable therefor, without declaring the city liable. Clayton v. Henderson (Ky.) 474

4. A municipal corporation is not liable, in an action for false imprisonment, for damages occasioned by imprisonment for violation of an ordinance under a judgment of a municipal court, although it may have been irregular, erroneous, or even void. Bartlett v. Columbus (Ga.) 795

5. A municipal corporation is not liable in damages for the negligent operation of a ferry operated and controlled by the common council in the name of the city, without any lawful authority. Hoggard v. Monroe (La.) 477

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Municipal corporation; power to establish waterworks or light plants. 427
Right to offer reward. 677

Liability of municipal corporations for false imprisonment and unlawful arrest:—
(I.) Introduction; (II.) general rule stated; (III.) application of the maxim re-spondeat superior; (IV.) liability as affected by ratification; (V.) reasons for the rule; (VI.) English and Canadian decisions. 795

Liability for acts of agents; for running of ferry. 478

MURDER.

See INSURANCE, 12.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES.

See COURTS, 31; INSURANCE, 7, 8.

NAME.

See also CORPORATIONS, 2.

A man who, as agent for a corporation using his name, has negotiated a sale of the property, business, and goodwill of the company, is estopped from asserting that the name is not rightfully used by the purchaser. Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb Glove & M. Co. (Mich.) 841

NATURAL GAS.

See GAS.

NEGLIGENCE.

See also ASSAULT; CARRIERS; EVIDENCE, 8, 9; GAS; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1, 2; MASTER AND SERVANT, 5; PROXIMATE CAUSE; TRIAL, 4-8.

1. Dangerous machinery on private grounds, when attractive to children and unprotected from their visits, which the owner knows to be frequent, renders him liable in damages to the next of kin of a boy fourteen years old who was caught and killed by such machinery. Biggs v. Consolidated Bar-Wire Co. (Kan.) 655

2. A guest at a private residence is not guilty of negligence in attempting to go from the house to the privy after dark, without inquiring as to the safety of the way or requesting a light, where at the time of a previous visit the way was safe, and no knowledge on her part of a change in condition exists. Barman v. Spencer (Ind.) 815

3. Permitting a shivered pane of glass to remain in a window above a street where pedestrians are frequently passing, when there is an apparent danger of the pieces falling or being shaken out by the wind or otherwise, is such negligence as will create a liability to a person who is struck by a piece of the glass while on a sidewalk below the window. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

4. The act of a locomotive engineer in throwing steam and water upon a trespasser standing upon the footboard between the engine and a flat car, in order to make him get off, must be deemed to be wilful so that the negligence of the trespasser in placing himself there cannot deprive him of the right to recover for an injury received in attempting to get off. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zantzinger (Tex.) 553

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; continuing; contributory.

As to dangerous premises; contributory. 816

Liability for dangerous premises; injuries to trespassing children. 656

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

NEWSPAPER.

See CONTEMPT.

NEW TRIAL.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

A new trial may be made dependent upon a refusal to remit a portion of the verdict for unliquidated damages. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

NONFEASANCE.

See CORPORATIONS, 8.

NONRESIDENT.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE.

NOTARIES.

See also BANKS, 14.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notaries as independent officers. 133

NOTICE.

See also CARRIERS, 17; REAL PROPERTY, 4.

1. The location of a canal and the open enjoyment of rights and privileges appurtenant thereto constitute notice of such rights to subsequent purchasers of property affected thereby. Case v. Hoffman (Wis.) 728

2. Notice to trustees in a deed of trust of the existence of a prior encumbrance is not ineffectual to subordinate the second deed to the first because of the fact that they did not know of the intent to make the later deed to them or of its record at the time it was made. Merchants' Bank v. Ballou (Va.) 306

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notice; imputed to cestui que trust. 307

To agent. 442

NUISANCES.

See CORPORATIONS, 6-8; INJUNCTION, 2.

OBITER DICTA.

See COURTS, 8.

OFFICERS.

See also HOSPITAL, 2; PUBLIC MONIES; QUO WARRANTO; REWARD, 1; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 1; WRIT AND PROCESS, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also WRIT AND PROCESS.

Officers; effect of ineligibility of majority candidate. 446

OIL.

See MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

OPINIONS.

See EVIDENCE, 16, 17.

ORDINANCE.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 3; DISORDERLY HOUSES, 1; HIGHWAYS, 4; MASTER AND SERVANT, 4; WATERS.

PARENT AND CHILD.

See APPRENTICES; INFANTS; SEDUCTION.

PARKS.

See TAXES, 3.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

A vote of a city board over which it is the mayor's duty to preside, on a motion which the mayor has declared out of order and declined to put, but which is thereupon put by a member of the board and declared by him to be carried, without the mayor's request or any appeal from the mayor's decision, or any request by him to put the motion, is wholly void, although four of the five members entitled to vote have cast their votes in the affirmative. State, Southey, v. Lashar (Conn.) 197

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parliamentary law; functions of presiding officer; right of member to put motion. 199

PARTIES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 7, 8; BONDS, 8.

PARTNERSHIP.

See CORPORATIONS, 12-14, 17; EVIDENCE, 27.

PAVEMENT.

See BONDS, 1, 2; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

PAYMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Payment; agent taking something other than money. 505

PENALTY.

See also CARRIERS, 18; COURTS, 5.

A statutory penalty will not be imposed except when the case is brought within the strict letter of the law. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Oppenheimer (Ark.) 353

PERPETUITIES.

See WATERS.

PEST HOUSE.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 6; HOSPITAL; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3.

PLEADING.

Filing of Petition, see TIME.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 26, 27, 29.

1. To avail one's self of the plea that a contract was champertous it must be pleaded. Croco v. Oregon Short-Line R. Co. (Utah) 285

44 L. R. A.

2. A petition in an action against an indorser of a bill of exchange which is annexed thereto need not aver protest of the bill or waiver of protest, where the bill has the words "No protest" indorsed on its face. Citizens' Bank v. Millett (Ky.) 664

3. Allegations that a certain institution was a reputable college, and that sufficient evidence of that fact was at the command of a board of examiners to whom a diploma from that college was presented, and that the petitioner furnished evidence satisfactory to the board, are not sufficient to show that the board found those facts so as to make a petition for mandamus good on demurrer. Van Vleck v. Board of Dental Examiners (Cal.) 635

4. An averment that a railroad yard and telegraph office were maintained "at" a certain city, in which there was an ordinance in force regulating speed and signals of trains, and that a telegraph operator was killed while passing from his office to deliver an order to a train, in consequence of negligence in running a train in violation of the ordinance, sufficiently shows that the place of injury was within the corporate limits of the city. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 638

5. A petition against a railroad company for failure to rescue a passenger who fell, or was thrown, from a train, is not sufficient, when it does not allege that the train could have been stopped to rescue him without risk of collision with other trains, or that there was any means by which the trainmen could have procured others to rescue him. Reed v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 823

6. Plaintiff in an action for personal injuries need not specially plead damages which are the natural and proximate consequences of, or are traceable to, and necessarily result from, the injury; but such damages may be recovered under the general allegation of the complaint, and only the damages which are not the probable and necessary result of the injury are required to be specially pleaded. Croco v. Oregon Short-Line R. Co. (Utah) 285

PLEDGE.

See BILLS AND NOTES, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS; CORPORATIONS, 11.

POISON.

See also DRUGGISTS; PROXIMATE CAUSE, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Poisons; liability for negligence as to. 548

POLES.

See HIGHWAYS, 5; INJUNCTION, 4.

POLICE.

Death caused by accident is not from natural causes, within the meaning of Cal. act March 4, 1889, § 7, providing an insurance fund for the families of policemen who die from natural causes. Stevin v. Board of Police Pension Fund Comrs. (Cal.) 114

POWER.

See WRIT AND PROCESS, 2.

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

See CONTRACTS, 1.

PREFERRED STOCK.

See BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 1, 2.

PRESUMPTION.

See EVIDENCE, 1-10.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

See BROKERS; CARRIERS, 10; WRIT AND PROCESS, 1.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See also HOSPITAL, 1.

A surety who has been obliged to pay the obligation can prove the entire debt against the insolvent estate of his cosurety, and receive dividends upon the entire debt until reimbursed that half of the common burden belonging to the cosurety. Pace v. Pace (Va.) 459

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

See EVIDENCE, 19.

PROCESS.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

PRO CONFESSO.

See JUDGMENT, 2.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

PROSTITUTION.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6; DISORDERLY HOUSES.

PROTEST.

See BANKS, 14.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

See also TRESPASS.

1. An injury which is the natural consequence of negligence, and might have been foreseen and reasonably anticipated as the result, is due to that negligence as the proximate or direct cause, in the absence of intervening negligence. Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co. (W. Va.) 92

2. The explosion, and not the act of one in drawing another in front of him to act as a shield when an explosion of dynamite by a third person is impending, is the proximate cause of such other's injuries which are not shown to have been increased by such act. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

3. Negligence in failing to put on a bottle a label marked "Poison" is the proximate cause of the death of an irresponsible child who gets the bottle from a mantel where its mother had left it, not knowing of its dangerous character, and drinks the contents. Wise v. Morgan (Tenn.) 548

4. An ordinary wind which blows broken glass out of a window is not the proximate cause of an injury caused by the fall of the glass, when there was negligence in leaving the window in such condition that the glass was liable to fall out. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause; what is; rule of. 217, 548

PUBLICATION.

See CONTEMPT.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

See also BONDS, 1, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3; CONTRACTS, 11.

1. When a special assessment is levied for the pavement laid under a contract, containing a guaranty for five years and a provision for repaving, property owners may show that the price nominally charged for paving was really charged in part for the guaranty and the repaving, and thus may keep the assessment within the fair value of the paving itself, beyond which they are not chargeable. State, Wilson, v. Trenton (N. J. Err. & App.) 540

2. It is not unlawful for municipal authorities contracting for paving a street, to embody in the same contract provisions binding the contractor to guarantee the durability of the pavement for five years, and to repave at a stated price all openings made in the street during the same time. Id.

3. The use of a concrete foundation on which a cedar-block pavement has been laid for a vitrified brick pavement does not make the improvement a case of ordinary repairs, instead of a repavement, under a statute requiring the repairs to be made by the city. Robertson v. Omaha (Neb.) 534

4. A paving contract which provides that all repairs which may become necessary within ten years from any imperfection in the work or material shall be at the expense of the contractor is not in violation of Neb. Comp. Stat. 1891, chap. 12a, § 69, which provides that ordinary repairs must be paid for by the city. Id.

5. A street-railway company is included in the general procedure provided by the Houston (Tex.) city charter, §§ 23c et seq., for the enforcement of assessments for street paving, although some of the provisions are strictly applicable only to abutting property, since the charter expressly creates a liability of the street-railway company to assessment, and there is no distinct procedure provided for enforcing it. Storrie v. Houston City Street R. Co. (Tex.) 716

6. A legislative grant to municipal corporations of the right to improve public highways at the cost of adjacent property supposed to be benefited thereby is not prohibited by Tex. Const. art. 3, § 48, providing that the legislature shall not levy taxes or impose burdens upon the people except to raise revenue sufficient for the economical administration of the government, as that refers to taxes and burdens imposed by the legislature itself with a view to the administration of the state government. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; power of city to bind contractor to repair pavement which he makes:—(I.) When the question arises; (II.) agreements including repairs; (III.) agreements constituting mere guaranty; (IV.) single agreements for construction and repair; (V.) separable agreements; (VI.) express statutory authority. 527

Assessments on street railways; necessity of benefits. 717

PUBLIC MONEY.

See also BANKS, 16.

A deposit of public moneys by a treasurer of a board of fire and water commissioners, under direction of the board, in a bank of which he was a partner, is in violation of Mich. Pub. acts 1875, p. 158 (1 How. Ann. Stat. §§ 424, 427), prohibiting an officer to mingle public money with that of himself or any other person, or to receive, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary or valuable consideration as an inducement for the deposit thereof. Marquette Fire & W. Comrs. v. Wilkinson (Mich.) 493

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public money; deposit of, in bank. 493

PUBLIC PURPOSE.

See TAXES, 3.

QUO WARRANTO.

An information in the nature of a quo warranto against a respondent for exercising the functions of an office to which he has not been duly elected rests in sound judicial discretion and may be denied if the office is of small importance or to continue for a short time only, but not when the office is that of an alderman in a large city and is to continue for nearly two years. State, Goodell, v. McGeary (Vt.) 446

RAILROAD RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

See also CONTRACTS, 9, 10; MASTER AND SERVANT, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Railroad relief association; validity of contracts of. 639, 645

RAILROADS.

See also BONDS, 3; CARRIERS; INJUNCTION, 6; MASTER AND SERVANT, 7, 9; NEGLIGENCE, 4.

1. A decree requiring the operation of a leased railroad may include a branch road owned by the lessee, which is essential to the operation of the other. Southern R. Co. v. Franklin & P. R. Co. (Va.) 297

2. The obligation of the lessee of a railroad to maintain and operate the road during the term of the lease is a necessary implication, where the road was built with the aid of county subscriptions to give railroad 44 L. R. A.

connection to the county seat and with the expectation of making the lease, while the lease provides for equipping the road as may be necessary to its use and enjoyment, and that the receipts shall be applied to the annual expenses of running the road and keeping it in repair, then to reimburse the lessee for the annual rent, etc., although there is no express covenant requiring the operation of the road. Id.

3. The lessor of a railroad is not liable to third persons for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the line by the lessee, where the lease is general in its terms, giving an exclusive right to operate the road, without reserving any control over it, and is authorized by statute. Caruthers v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (Kan.) 737

4. A provision of an ordinance of a constitutional convention, that all counties subscribing to stock of railroads shall do so subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions set forth in the charter of a particular company; confers no affirmative authority to make such subscriptions. Wilkes County v. Call (N. C.) 252

5. A general provision of an ordinance of a constitutional convention, that capital stock of a railroad company may be created by subscriptions on the part of counties, will not of itself authorize a subscription by a particular county. Id.

6. Mere legislative authority given a railroad to receive subscriptions to stock from municipal corporations, for which no consideration is given and which there has been no attempt to exercise, is not a contract, but may be revoked at any time. Id.

7. A crossing by a street railway of the tracks of a steam railroad at grade should not be permitted under a statute forbidding it when it is reasonably practicable to avoid it, where an overhead crossing would cost only $150,000 to $200,000, although the capital of the street railway is only $500,000, if it expects to carry 3,000,000 passengers annually, and passenger trains on the railroad average one in fourteen minutes. Chester Traction Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Pa.) 269

8. An imperious necessity for an additional crossing by a street railway of the tracks of a steam railroad at grade is not shown by the fact that traffic has so increased that its present crossings are not sufficient to enable it quickly to move its cars. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INJUNCTION.

Railroads; compelling operation of. 297

Liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using the road under a lease, license, or other contract:—(I.) General principles as to; (II.) under railway leases: (a) the general rule; (b) application to particular subjects; (c) authority to lease construction; (d) effect of authority: (1) conflict of opinion; (2) rule requiring special statutory exemption; (3) rule that general authority to lease is sufficient; (4) necessity of entire control by lessee; (5) limited to injuries in operation of road; (6) operation and charter duties distinguished; (III.) under running privileges or arrangements; (IV.) under contracts for construction or otherwise; (V.) under ineffectual attempt to consolidate; (VI.) occupation must be authorized; (VII.) injuries to employees; (VIII.) provisions for joint liability; (IX.) effect of lease or other contract upon failure of duty to fence. 737

RAPE.

1. A husband cannot himself be guilty of an actual rape upon his wife, on account of the matrimonial consent which she has given, and which she cannot retract. State v. Haines (La.) 837

2. A man jointly indicted with another for rape of the wife of the former cannot be convicted after the other has been acquitted, although he is indicted as a principal in the offense, since he could be guilty only as an aider and abettor. Id.

REAL ESTATE BROKER.

See BROKERS.

REAL PROPERTY.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; COURTS, 4.

1. A statute permitting a registrar of deeds to record a transfer of land held in trust, upon the written opinion of two examiners that the transfer is in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the trust, which registration shall be conclusive in favor of the grantee, merely abrogates the rule which requires the purchaser of trust property to see to the application of the purchase money, and does not confer judicial power upon the registrar. People, Deneen, v. Simon (Ill.) 801

2. A statute making a judicial determination of title to land forever binding and conclusive upon all persons after the lapse of two years may be given effect against parties to the proceeding and persons who must bring legal proceedings to establish their rights, although it would be void in favor of persons in possession of all they claim who were parties to the proceeding. Id.

3. A statute providing for the registration of land titles after they are established in a court of equity may be upheld as against all upon whom service of process is properly made, although it contains a void provision permitting judgment against a resident of the state notified only by publication. Id.

4. The rule of law as to the notice afforded by the registration of a transfer of property which is subject to a condition or trust may be changed by the legislature. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; reliance on recording acts in purchase at judicial sale. 393
44 L. R. A.

REARGUMENT.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 31.

RECEIVERS.

See also CORPORATIONS, 16; TAXES, 8, 9.

1. A receiver of the assets of a foreign corporation within the jurisdiction of the court cannot be appointed merely because the corporation is insolvent, if the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the proceeding. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (Md.) 149

2. A person employed to cut merchantable timber by a contract which provides for a settlement each month, but for the retention of 25 per cent of the amount due until the sum of $500 shall be held as a forfeiture for the satisfactory completion of the job, is a contractor, and not an employee or person in the employ of the owner of the timber, within the meaning of Md. act 1878, chap. 108, providing for a receiver of an employer who fails to pay employees as required by the act. Clark v. Renninger (Md.) 413

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receivers; right of action in other states. 261

RECITALS.

See BONDS, 5.

RECORD.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 4-9.

REDEMPTION.

See MORTGAGE, 4.

REFORMATORY.

See INFANTS, 3.

REGISTRAR.

See COURTS, 4; REAL PROPERTY, 1.

REINSTATEMENT.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 9.

RELEASE.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 1.

REMITTITUR.

See NEW TRIAL; TRIAL, 10.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 9.

RENT.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REPLEVIN.

See also WRIT AND PROCESS, 4, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

An action of replevin will not lie for a corpse, under statutes requiring an affidavit in replevin to state the unlawful taking or detention of "personal goods and chattels," and providing that a judgment for defendant shall be for a return of the property or for its value. Keyes v. Konkel (Mich.) 242

RÉSUMÉ.

For résumé of contents of book, see 865

REWARD.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1.

1. A sheriff cannot claim a reward for making an arrest, within his county, of a resident thereof for a felony committed therein, which it was his official duty to make. Hogan v. Stophlet (Ill.) 809

2. Extraordinary efforts and the incurring of expense not covered by legal fees will not entitle an officer to a reward for making an arrest which it was his legal duty to make. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Reward; offered by municipality. 677

RIVER.

See BOUNDARIES.

SALE.

See DAMAGES, 1.

SALT.

See CARRIERS, 16, 17.

SAVINGS BANK.

See GIFT; TRUSTS, 2.

SEALED VERDICT.

See TRIAL, 12.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

See CONTRACTS, 1.

SEDUCTION.

The common-law rule that an action by a parent for the seduction of a daughter must be brought in the capacity of a master for the loss of her services as a servant, although permitting a recovery for injury sustained in the parental relation, was the rule of a legal fiction which is abrogated by the Kansas Code, which abolishes fictions in pleading and requires a statement of the actual facts in controversy. Anthony v. Norton (Kan.) 757

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Seduction; parent's right of action for. 757

SEPARATION.

See ABANDONMENT.

SHAREHOLDERS.

See CORPORATIONS, 11.

SHERIFF.

See REWARD, 1.

SHIELD.

See TRESPASS.

SHIPPING.

See CARRIERS, 4, 5.

SIDEWALK.

See HIGHWAYS.

44 L. R. A.

SIGNATURE.

See EVIDENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SITUS.

See GARNISHMENT, 2.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

See also INJUNCTION, 6, 7.

Hardship will not prevent specific performance of a contract which was fairly and justly made, when it results from miscalculation or from contingencies which might have been foreseen, and for which the complainant is not in fault. Southern R. Co. v. Franklin & P. R. Co. (Va.) 297

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Specific performance; of contract to operate railroad. 297

SPECIFIC TAX.

See TAXES, 1.

STATE.

See also COUNTIES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

State; estoppel of, as to organization of county. 122

STATE INSTITUTION.

1. A bequest to the State University is subject to Cal. Civ. Code, § 1313, limiting charitable gifts to one third of the distributable estate. Re Royer's Estate (Cal.) 364

2. The University of California, created by the act of 1868, and continued and declared to be a public trust by the state Constitution of 1879, is an entity capable of taking by bequest, although the regents are by law made the governing body under a separate incorporation, and the organic act, providing in terms that grants and gifts may be made to the regents of the state, does not in terms provide that they may be made to the university. Id.

STATE UNIVERSITIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

State universities; as quasi corporations. 365

STATUTES.

See also LEGISLATURE, 3; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; REAL PROPERTY, 3.

1. A bill in which the enacting clause is not inserted by the legislature is void under a constitutional provision requiring it to contain such clause. People v. Dettenthaler (Mich.) 164

2. The clerk of one branch of the legislature has no power to amend a bill which has been sent over from the other house, so as to add an enacting clause, without definite action by the legislative branch upon the matter. Id.

3. A constitutional requirement that no bills of a certain kind shall be passed unless the yeas and nays on the second and third reading shall have been entered on the journal is mandatory, and invalidates all statutes of the kind referred to not so passed. Wilkes County v. Call (N. C.) 252

4. A statute affecting the right of trial by jury is general legislation which must be uniform throughout the state, under Ohio Const. art. 2, § 26. Silberman v. Hey (Ohio) 264

5. A statute providing that the right of trial by jury shall be deemed waived, unless, a certain time before the term at which the issues are required to be made up, a demand for a jury is made, attended with a deposit of money for the jury fund, is one which affects the right of trial by jury, and must therefore be uniform in its operation, under Ohio Const. art. 2, § 26. Id.

6. Statutes procured by a railroad company for its own benefit will be strictly construed against it. Wilkes County v. Call (N. C.) 252

7. The maxim noscitur a sociis has no application to a statute which is too plain to admit of construction. Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 579

8. That a statute is to take effect only after a favorable vote by counties does not make it void as an attempt to delegate legislative power or as making the law a special one. People, Deneen, v. Simon (Ill.) 801

9. Things apparently within the words of a statute are outside of its purview if there was no intent to include them. Condon v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (Md.) 149

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; rule of construction of.	125
Construction of; penal laws.	353
Constitutional provisions as to enactment.	165
Valid in part only.	803
Special, as to jury trial.	264

STEAMER.

See ABANDONMENT, 5.

STOCK.

See BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS, 1, 2.

STOCKHOLDERS.

See CORPORATIONS, 11.

STREET RAILWAYS.

See also CARRIERS, 1, 3; CONTRACTS, 11; MANDAMUS, 3; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 5; RAILROADS, 7, 8; TRIAL, 5.

The gripman of a cable street-car is not guilty of negligence in failing to stop or slacken speed upon seeing boys standing near the curb, 12 feet from the track, in the street, in front of the car, so as to render the company liable for injury to one who suddenly starts to run across the track after the car has reached a point where it cannot be stopped before striking him. Rack v. Chicago City R. Co. (Ill.) 127
44 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; ratification of consent to.	269
Compelling operation of.	692

STREETS.

See HIGHWAYS.

SUBSCRIPTION.

See RAILROADS, 4-6.

SUNDAY.

See TIME.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

See EXECUTION.

SURETIES.

See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

SURVIVAL.

See DEATH, 2.

TAXES.

See also CORPORATIONS, 3, 16.

1. Specific taxes within the meaning of the Michigan Constitution, which appropriates them to educational funds and excepts property paying such taxes from the rule of uniformity, do not include an ad valorem tax on property such as a tax on telegraph and telephone lines levied by a state board in lieu of all other taxes. Pingree v. Dix (Mich.) 679

2. A tax on telegraph and telephone lines under Mich. Pub. Acts 1881, No. 168 which is levied by the state board at the average rate of taxes (general, municipal, and local) levied throughout the state during the previous year, in lieu of all other taxes, violates the rule of uniformity imposed by Mich. Const. art. 14, § 11, as the rate of taxation is determined in a different way and is different in amount from that imposed upon other property. Id.

3. Public parks maintained at public expense, and buildings and appliances necessary to meet the demands of the fire department of a city, are within the terms of a constitutional provision exempting from taxation public property used for public purposes. Owensboro v. Com., Stone (Ky.) 202

4. National banks doing business in a state are subject to have the same tax imposed upon their shares of stock as are imposed upon the shares of stock in state banks whose charters were passed after the adoption of a statute making the charters subject to amendment, although there are in the state banks not subject to such taxation because of irrevocable exemptions in their charters. Deposit Bank v. Davies County (Ky.) 825

5. The acceptance by a bank of the provisions of a statute fixing its taxes at a certain amount which shall be in lieu of all other taxes, which statute is made subject to amendment at the pleasure of the legislature, is a waiver of tax exemptions in its charter; and it will thereafter be subject to such taxation as the legislature sees fit to impose upon it; and a repeal of the new statute will not restore the provisions of the old one.

Id.

6. Consent in writing by banks to be governed by the provisions of a statute fixing the rate of taxation which the state agrees shall be in lieu of all other taxation upon the banks does not effect an irrevocable contract, where the statute expressly provides that it shall be subject to the provisions of another law making all grants to corporations subject to amendment at the pleasure of the legislature.

Id.

7. A proviso to a statute making privileges and franchises granted to corporations subject to amendment, that no amendment shall impair other rights previously vested, does not include an exemption from taxation, since that is a franchise and as such subject to amendment, and not a vested right.

Id.

8. Taxes against the real estate of a corporation will be entitled to preference in payment, in case the corporation goes into the hands of a receiver. Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. (Conn.) 786

9. Real estate of a corporation which has passed into the hands of a receiver is properly listed for taxation in the name of the corporation, where the right of possession only, and not the title, vests in the receiver.

Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; exemption of public parks.	202
On national banks; exemptions; repeal of exemptions.	826
Specific; ad valorem; uniformity.	679
Preferred claims for.	787

TELEGRAPHS.

See EVIDENCE, 6, 7, 12; INJUNCTION, NOTES AND BRIEFS; TAXES, 2.

TELEPHONES.

See HIGHWAYS, 5; INJUNCTION, 4, NOTES AND BRIEFS; TAXES, 2.

TIME.

The Sundays are to be counted in computing the number of days preceding a term of court within which a petition must be filed to make it returnable to that term. Heard v. Phillips (Ga.) 369

TITLE.

See REAL PROPERTY.

TITLE DEEDS.

See MORTGAGE, 1, 2.

TOKEN.

See FALSE PRETENSES.

TORRENS LAW.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; COURTS, 4; REAL PROPERTY.

44 L. R. A.

TRADENAME.

See also CORPORATIONS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tradename; protection of; transfer of, with goodwill of business. 841

TREASURER.

See PUBLIC MONETARY.

TRESPASS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2; EVIDENCE, 22; WRIT AND PROCESS, 4.

One who draws another in front of him to serve as a shield from an impending explosion cannot be held liable for injuries received by the latter from the explosion, if it is not shown that the injuries were increased by such act. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

TRIAL.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 10; STATUTES, 4, 5.

1. An action for injuries caused by being drawn in front of another to serve as a shield from an impending explosion should not be submitted to the jury in the absence of any evidence beyond mere conjecture, tending to show that plaintiff's injuries were thereby increased. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

2. For the purpose of showing that a person's act in the face of an impending explosion was voluntary, his admission that everything he did was intentional cannot be submitted to the jury without his qualifying statements denying the commission of the act with which he is charged. Id.

3. It is within the discretion of the trial court to admit a portion of a deposition in chief and the remainder in rebuttal. Hoadley v. Savings Bank of Danbury (Conn.) 321

Questions for court or jury.

4. The question of negligence in leaving cracked windows above a sidewalk is for the jury, where the testimony tends to show a dangerous condition of the windows. Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. (Mich.) 500

5. The question whether or not a person riding on the front platform of an electric street-car took such precautions to avoid injury as the obvious and usual dangers of his position required is for the jury, where the facts are disputed or are susceptible of more than one conclusion. Watson v. Portland & C. E. R. Co. (Me.) 157

6. The safety and suitability of a platform used by a railroad company for unloading horses from a car is a question for the jury, when the evidence is conflicting. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 449

7. Negligence in maintaining machinery in a dangerous condition by allowing a set-screw, which projected 4 or 5 inches from a beam and revolved so rapidly that the screw could not be seen, to remain unprotected, with notice that the structure was used by boys and men as a fishing platform,—is a question for the jury. Biggs v. Consolidated Barb-Wire Co. (Kan.) 655

8. Whether a boy fourteen years old has sufficient intelligence to render him capable of contributory negligence is a question for the jury, where he was injured by being caught by a set-screw projecting 5 or 6 inches from a beam which was revolving so fast that the screw could not be seen. Id.

Instructions.

9. An instruction as to the recovery of damages for future pain and suffering is improper in the absence of any evidence to warrant it. Wheeler v. Boone (Iowa) 821

Verdict.

10. A trial court may permit the filing of a remittitur of part of the verdict, and enter judgment for the balance. Tucker v. Hyatt (Ind.) 129

11. To authorize a judgment for plaintiff upon a special verdict in an action for malicious prosecution, the verdict need not state that the prosecution was without probable cause, since that is a question for the court. Id.

12. The dissent from a sealed verdict by one juror when the jury is polled, after sealing a verdict and separating, on the ground that he did not agree to it except because he thought he was obliged to, makes it necessary to discharge the jury, and, if they are sent out again and render a verdict, it will not be sustained. Kramer v. Kister (Pa.) 432

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; rule as to submitting case to jury. 217

By jury; special law as to. 264

Correction of verdict; polling jury on sealed verdict. 432

TRICYCLE.

See BICYCLE; HIGHWAYS, 3, 4.

TROLLEY.

See CARRIERS, 1; EVIDENCE, 9.

TRUSTS.

See also BANKS, 15, 16; GIFT; INSURANCE, 19-21.

1. The statute of uses is not a part of the law of Nebraska. Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Jensen (Neb.) 861

2. A deposit in a savings bank in trust for the owner of the money and another person as joint owners, subject to the order of either, and the balance at the death of either to belong to the survivor, constitutes a valid declaration of trust, which transfers to the trustee the legal title for the benefit of the survivor as to the balance of the fund remaining in bank at the death of either, even though the settlor retains possession of the bank book. Milholland v. Whalen (Md.) 205

3. A trust deed prompted by intemperate and improvident habits of the grantor, creating a trust to pay the income to him during life and at his death to convey to certain persons, without reserving any power of revocation, makes an irrevocable trust. Wilson v. Anderson (Pa.) 542

4. An intent to revoke a trust created by deed is not shown by a will which does not mention it but revokes "all other wills," where the testator has for years treated the deed as in full force, and has other real and personal estate not covered by the deed on which the will operates. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; how created. 205

Created by parol; in policy of insurance. 384

Trustee as debtor; following trust funds. 494

Effect of statute of uses. 861

UNBORN CHILDREN.

See DEEDS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

UNIVERSITIES.

See STATE INSTITUTION; STATE UNIVERSITIES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

USAGE.

See EVIDENCE, 4.

USES.

See TRUSTS, 1.

VERDICT.

See TRIAL, 10-12, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

VICE.

See DISORDERLY HOUSES, 2.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See also OFFICERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The ineligibility of a person who received the majority of the votes cast for an office does not entitle the minority candidate to the office,—at least when those who voted for the former did not know of his ineligibility. State, Goodell, v. McGear (Vt.) 446

2. Building and furnishing a new house, with the purpose of living in it, does not render the owner an inhabitant of the ward in which it is situated, for the purpose of becoming an elector therein, so long as he continues, with his wife, the actual occupancy of leased premises in another ward. Id.

WAGER.

See INSURANCE, 18.

WAGES.

See RECEIVERS, 2.

WAIVER.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 1.

WARRANTY.

See DAMAGES, 1.

WASTE.

See LIFE TENANTS.

WATERS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; BOUNDARIES; CANALS; CONTRACTS, 7; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2; NOTICE, 1.

An ordinance granting the exclusive privilege to construct and maintain water-works within the corporate limits of the town, and the exclusive use of its streets, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, streams, and bridges, is within the condemnation of N. C. Const. art. 1, § 31, declaring that "perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free state and ought not to be allowed." Thrift v. Elizabeth City (N. C.) 427

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; what constitutes a natural water-course; rule as to surface water. 729

WELL.

See HIGHWAYS, 1, 2.

WILFUL INJURY.

See NEGLIGENCE, 4.

WILFULNESS.

See DAMAGES, 2.

WILLS.

See also STATE INSTITUTION, 1; TRUSTS, 4.

A county court has no jurisdiction, after the end of the term at which it has admitted a will to probate, to admit a codicil which is entirely inconsistent with the original will, where the statutes provide for vacating, reversing, or annulling a decree probating a will only by appeal to the circuit court, or application to equity to impeach the judgment. Couchman v. Couchman (Ky.) 136

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; probate of, as an entirety; separate probate of codicil. 137

Nature of testamentary instrument. 542

WIND.

See PROXIMATE CAUSE, 4.

WINDOWS.

See NEGLIGENCE, 3; TRIAL, 4.

WITNESSES.

See also EXECUTION.

1. One holding a deed of real estate and suing for possession thereof is not an indorsee, assignee, or transferee of a bond for titles given by a person since deceased to his 44 L. R. A.

grantors, within the meaning of a statute forbidding testimony by the opposite party as to transactions with deceased in suits by such indorsees, assignees, and transferees. Heard v. Phillips (Ga.) 369

2. One accused of holding another in front of him as a shield from an impending explosion cannot, on cross-examination in a suit for damages for the injuries, be shown not to have exhibited proper sympathy or paid proper attention to plaintiff after the injury. Laidlaw v. Sage (N. Y.) 216

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wife as witness against husband. 311

WRIT AND PROCESS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5; CONTRACTS, 1.

1. An agent of a foreign life insurance company, who comes into the state to examine the conditions under which a death occurred, and who submits a proposition to compromise the claim, is an agent on whom service of process may be made, under Shannon's (Tenn.) New Code, §§ 4543, 4546. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley (Tenn.) 442

2. The existence of a power of attorney by which a foreign insurance company authorized service of process to be made on the secretary of state does not preclude service on an agent as authorized by Tenn. act 1887. Id.

3. The service on a foreign insurance company as garnishee is governed by 18 Del. Laws, chap. 681, providing for garnishment of a corporation by service upon the president, treasurer, cashier, or paying clerk, and not by 16 Del. Laws, chap. 140, providing for the appointment by a foreign insurance company of a person or agent upon whom service of process may be made. National Bank v. Furtick (Del.) 115

4. To break and enter a dwelling house for the purpose of serving a writ of replevin, after admittance has been demanded and refused, constitutes the officer a trespasser. Kelley v. Schuyler (R. I.) 435

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ; right to break and enter doors to serve. 435

Service on foreign corporation. 115

Substituted service to give jurisdiction. 442

YEAS AND NAYS.

See STATUTES, 3.

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 44 L. R. A.

44 L. R. A. 33, JAMES v. RAPIDES LUMBER CO. 50 La. Ann. 717, 23 So. 469.

Master's duty to warn servant of dangers.

Cited in Daly v. Kiel, 106 La. 173, 30 So. 254, holding master liable for insufficiently warned servant injured while working in gravel pit, by caving in of earth.

Cited in footnotes to Ribich v. Lake Superior Smelting Co. 48 L. R. A. 649, which holds master required to instruct employee as to nature, force, and probable effect of explosion of molten metal on contact with water; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Gray, 50 L. R. A. 47, which sustains railroad company's duty to instruct employees or promulgate rules as to operation of automatic switches; McLaine v. Head & D. Co. 58 L. R. A. 462, which denies master's duty to warn workman in trench before dumping in dirt.

Cited in notes (48 L. R. A. 97) on right of servant to recover for injuries caused by projecting screws in shaft and other moving machinery; (48 L. R. A. 377) on duty of master as to employment of his servants; (48 L. R. A. 544) on effect of assurance of safety given by master or coservant; (46 L. R. A. 47, 75) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties; (47 L. R. A. 162, 165) on volenti non fit injuria, as defense to actions by injured servants.

Distinguished in Jenkins v. Maginnis Cotton Mills, 51 La. Ann. 1018, 25 So. 643, holding master not responsible for injury to servant who voluntarily assumed a dangerous method of operating machine.

Annotation in 44 L. R. A. 33, referred to with approval in North Birmingham Street R. Co. v. Wright, 130 Ala. 425, 30 So. 360, holding superintendent of railroad not negligent in failing to warn engineer of location of telegraph poles, plainly visible, along track.

Injuries to servants obeying orders.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 753) on servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command.

Risks of employment.

Cited in Adolff v. Columbia Pretzel & Baking Co. 100 Mo. App. 208, 73 S. W. 321, holding it question for jury whether one ordered to perform a known dangerous service assumes risk thereof.

Cited in footnote to Cudahy Packing Co. v. Marcan, 54 L. R. A. 258, which holds risk of block on which minor employee works, slipping on greasy floor, assumed.

Doctrine of vice principalship.

Cited in notes (51 L. R. A. 518, 550, 557) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant; (54 L. R. A. 96) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

44 L. R. A. 90, L'HOTE v. NEW ORLEANS, 51 La. Ann. 93, 24 So. 608.

Municipal powers with reference to houses of ill fame.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Chauvet, 51 L. R. A. 630, which holds covered wagon moving from place to place a house within prohibition against houses of ill fame; Ogden v. Madison, 55 L. R. A. 506, which sustains city's power to impose penalty for keeping house of ill fame, though misdemeanor under state statute.

44 L. R. A. 92, BARRICKMAN v. MARION OIL CO. 45 W. Va. 634, 32 S. E. 327.

Liability for escape and explosion of dangerous substances.

Cited in Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Long, 27 Ind. App. 227, 59 N. E. 410, holding natural gas company liable for damages caused through negligent increase in pressure of gas furnished customers; Paden v. Van Blarcom, 100 Mo. App. 197, 74 S. W. 124, holding it question for jury whether house owner was negligent in not testing valves in range before turning on gas.

Cited in footnotes to McKenna v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 47 L. R. A. 790, which denies gas company's liability for explosion due to blundering act of employee of other company; Purdy v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 51 L. R. A. 881, which holds use of barrels formerly containing explosive substance, for shipping iron, not render one liable for injury to employee by explosion.

Degree of care required to prevent accident.

Cited in McVey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 115, 32 S. E. 1012, holding fact that pedestrians are accustomed to travel on railroad at particular place imposes duty of greater precaution in operation of trains there.

44 L. R. A. 101, STEWART v. NORTHERN ASSUR. CO. 45 W. Va. 734, 32 S. E. 218.

Garnishment.

Cited in footnotes to Strause Bros. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 48 L. R. A. 452, which holds debt of insurance company for loss in another state, without situs where company has agent, for garnishment purposes, in third state; Hawley v. Hurd, 52 L. R. A. 195, which sustains discrimination between banks in and out of state as to attachment of negotiable paper by trustee process; Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L. R. A. 120, which holds right to garnish debtor not limited to situs of chose in action; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Rogers, 62 L. R. A. 178, which holds nonresident summoned as garnishee while temporarily within state not subject to further proceedings unless he has property within state.

Common-law disability of married woman.

Cited in Mynes v. Mynes, 47 W. Va. 698, 35 S. E. 935, concurring opinion by Dent, J., who holds common-law disability of husband and wife to enter into valid contracts with each other during coverture not abrogated.

44 L. R. A. 107, STEELSMITH v. GARTLAN, 45 W. Va. 27, 29 S. E. 978.

Oil and gas leases.

Cited in Eclipse Oil Co. v. South Penn Oil Co. 47 W. Va. 106, 34 S. E. 923, holding former lessee's payment of commutation money for a past term not consideration for future royalty as against lessor; Lawson v. Kirchner, 50 W. Va. 348, 40 S. E. 344, holding lease of tract of land for oil and gas purposes, contingent and conditional sale of the oil and gas in place; Foster v. Elk Fork Oil & Gas Co. 32 C. C. A. 563, 61 U. S. App. 576, 90 Fed. 181, holding lease in consideration of share of oil produced, work being abandoned after completion of dry well within stipulated time, inoperative; Huggins v. Daley, 48 L. R. A. 324, footnote p. 320, 40 C. C. A. 18, 99 Fed. 612, holding oil and gas lease forfeited by failure to bore well within time specified; Barnsdall v. Boley, 119 Fed. 200, holding oil lease not perpetuated by drilling, within stipulated time, of well producing small quantity of oil, under stipulation for continuation as long as oil or gas is produced in paying quantities; Urpman v. Lowther Oil Co. 53 W. Va. 505, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027, 44 S. E. 433, canceling oil lease where facts showed intent on part of lessee to abandon; Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 224, 44 S. E. 533, dissenting opinion by Dent, J., who holds that oil lessee has no property in the oil in place.

Cited in footnotes to Parish Fork Oil Co. v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 59 L. R. A. 566, which holds vested interest in oil not vested in lessees by mere drilling of well and discovery of oil; Gadbury v. Ohio & I. Consol. Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. 62 L. R. A. 895, which holds forfeiture of gas lease for breach of condition subsequent sufficiently shown to give equity jurisdiction by failure for long time, without apparent excuse, to develop the property.

Distinguished in Harness v. Eastern Oil Co. 49 W. Va. 243, 38 S. E. 662, holding lease of two contiguous tracts owned by husband and wife, proceeds payable to both lessors with royalty to joint credit, joint lease as between lessors and lessees; Parish Fork Oil Co. v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 51 W. Va. 589, 59 L. R. A. 569, 42 S. E. 655, upholding lessor's right to lease to another after lessee's abandonment of well for eighteen months; Henne v. South Penn Oil Co. 52 W. Va. 199, 43 S. E. 147, holding lessee drilling "dry hole" and then taking away machinery entitled to reasonable time to return and continue operations under lease.

44 L. R. A. 114, SLEVIN v. POLICE PENSION FUND COMRS. 123 Cal. 130, 55 Pac. 785.

44 L. R. A. 115, NATIONAL BANK v. FURTICK, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99, 42 Atl. 479.

Rights of nonresident debtors and garnishees.

Cited in Smith v. Armour, 1 Penn. (Del.) 365, 40 Atl. 720, holding that foreign attachment will not lie under statute for action sounding in tort; McKinney v. Mills, 80 Minn. 481, 81 Am. St. Rep. 278, 83 N. W. 452, directing discharge of garnishee process served on nonresident garnishee while temporarily in state, plaintiff and defendants also being nonresidents; Gilbert v. Hewetson, 79 Minn.

336, 79 Am. St. Rep. 486, 82 N. W. 655, holding that causes of action against nonresident pass to receiver of creditor appointed by court of state of creditor's residence; Strause Bros. v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 126 N. C. 230, 48 L. R. A. 454, footnote p. 452, 35 S. E. 471, holding debt of insurance company for loss in another state, without situs where company has agent, for garnishment purposes, in third state; Boyle v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 88 Minn. 462, 97 Am. St. Rep. 538, 93 N. W. 520, holding that execution on judgment against nonresident will not be stayed pending determination of foreign attachment suit.

Cited in footnotes to Balk v. Harris, 45 L. R. A. 257, which holds debtor garnished outside of state not protected in paying debt after returning to domicile; Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L. R. A. 120, which holds right to garnish debtor not limited to situs of chose in action.

44 L. R. A. 122, PEOPLE ex rel. ATTY. GEN. v. ALTURAS COUNTY, 6 Idaho, 418, 55 Pac. 1067.

When court will decline to examine constitutional questions.

Cited in McGinness v. Davis, 7 Idaho, 668, 65 Pac. 364, refusing to consider question of constitutionality of revenue act, record failing to show any injustice done complainant; Holmberg v. Jones, 7 Idaho, 759, 65 Pac. 563, raising, but not deciding, question whether constitutional amendment adopted by people is open to attack on ground that submission was not legally authorized by legislature.

Estoppel as applied to municipalities.

Cited in Simpson v. Stoddard County, 173 Mo. 465, holding county estopped from asserting irregularities in private sale of swamp lands after acquiescence therein for thirty years.

44 L. R. A. 124, PEOPLE ex rel. KASSON v. ROSE, 174 Ill. 310, 51 N. E. 246.

Construction of ordinances and contracts.

Cited in People's Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Hale, 94 Ill. App. 420, holding that courts will not go beyond plain and explicit words of ordinance in construing it.

Cited in footnotes to Re Hogan, 45 L. R. A. 160, which holds contract guaranteeing a certain revenue per acre from crops, insurance; Holmes v. Phenix Ins. Co. 47 L. R. A. 308, which holds damage by hail accompanied by wind storm not covered by policy against wind storms.

44 L. R. A. 127, RACK v. CHICAGO CITY R. CO. 173 Ill. 289, 50 N. E. 668.

Care required in running cars in streets.

Cited in Springfield Consol. R. Co. v. Puntenney, 200 Ill. 16, 65 N. E. 442, Affirming 101 Ill. App. 98, holding question to car driver whether he had used due care to prevent collision properly excluded; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Schwartz, 93 Ill. App. 396, holding that motorman seeing seven-year-old boy approaching track has right to assume he will stop before crossing; Elwood Electric Street R. Co. v. Ross, 26 Ind. App. 262, 58 N. E. 535, holding ten-mile speed of street car along city street not of itself negligence; Chicago City R. Co. v. Fennimore, 99 Ill. App. 175, holding rate of speed, although not of itself negligent, may be considered by jury with other evidence tending to establish negligent operation of cars; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Browdy, 206 Ill. 618, 69 N. E. 570, and Chicago City R. Co. v. Ahler, 107 Ill. App. 404, holding street car company not liable for unavoidable collision due to sudden turning of wagon in front of car.

Cited in footnote to Sample v. Consolidated Light & R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 186, which requires high degree of care from motorman to prevent injury to small children.

Distinguished in Chicago City R. Co. v. Tuohy, 196 Ill. 410, 58 L. R. A. 272, footnote p. 270, 63 N. E. 997, holding question for jury whether motorman kept proper lookout for child slowly approaching track.

Rule as to taking case from jury.

Cited in Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition, 175 Ill. 475, 51 N. E. 651, holding "scintilla rule of evidence" not in force in Illinois; Marshall v. John Grosse Clothing Co. 184 Ill. 425, 75 Am. St. Rep. 181, 56 N. E. 807, holding that where there was no evidence tending to support any defense to action for rent, jury was properly instructed to find for plaintiff; Groszewski v. Chicago Sugar Ref. Co. 84 Ill. App. 586; Barnes v. Western Wheel Works, 84 Ill. App. 653; Gravadahl v. Chicago Ref. Co. 85 Ill. App. 345; Roberts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 78 Ill. App. 530,—holding case should have been submitted to jury where there was evidence tending to prove plaintiff's case; Swift v. Zerwick, 88 Ill. App. 562; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Stonecipher, 90 Ill. App. 512; Norton Bros. v. Nadebok, 92 Ill. App. 545; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Hoffart, 82 Ill. App. 541,—holding case properly submitted to jury, where evidence of plaintiff tended to prove defendant's negligence; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Batson, 81 Ill. App. 154, sustaining instruction to find for defendant where there was no evidence tending to show person killed by railroad train used due care to prevent accident; Cohen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Ill. App. 322, holding case improperly taken from jury where evidence showed omission to ring bell or blow whistle, and other omissions alleged to have been negligent; Nolan v. Morris, 108 Ill. App. 263, holding case properly taken from jury where evidence merely showed that injured person was struck by omnibus, and did not show negligence of driver; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Standard Fashion Co. 106 Ill. App. 139, holding case properly taken from jury where stranger pried open elevator door, pulled cable, and was in some unknown manner killed by the ascending car.

44 L. R. A. 129, TUCKER v. HYATT, 151 Ind. 332, 51 N. E. 460.

Remittitur of part of verdict.

Cited in Efroymsen v. Smith, 29 Ind. App. 455, 63 N. E. 328, holding instruction cured by remittitur of amount jury erroneously told to include in damages.

Cited in footnote to Central R. Co. v. Perkerson, 53 L. R. A. 210, which denies trial judge's power to order remittitur as condition of refusing new trial.

Distinguished in Nickey v. Zonker, 22 Ind. App. 218, 53 N. E. 478, holding verdict rendered on theory contrary to law not cured by remittitur of portion thereof.

Review of errors.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hawks, 154 Ind. 549, 55 N. E. 258, holding assignments of error waived by failure to discuss same in briefs; Kelley v. Houts, 30 Ind. App. 477, 66 N. E. 408, holding right to object to judgment as defective in certain particulars not available where made for first time on appeal.

- 44 L. R. A. 131, FIRST NAT. BANK v. MARSHALLTOWN STATE BANK, 107 Iowa, 327, 77 N. W. 1045.

Recovery of money paid on forged paper.

Cited in Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Bingham, 30 Wash. 492, 60 L. R. A. 958, footnote p. 955, 71 Pac. 43, sustaining drawee's right to recover amount of forged check payable to fictitious person, from one cashing same on indorsement purporting to be payee's, without requiring identification.

Cited in footnote to Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 57 L. R. A. 530, which holds bank paying plainly altered check to clerk of drawer without asking explanation liable for loss from subsequent payment of similar checks.

Distinguished in Citizens' Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 111 Iowa, 215, 82 N. W. 464, holding money paid by drawee of check to an indorsee, who acquired it on a forged indorsement of payee, recoverable; Woods v. Colony Bank, 114 Ga. 685, 56 L. R. A. 931, 40 S. E. 720, holding money paid by drawee on forged signature recoverable from holder, whose negligence contributed to the fraud and tended to mislead drawee.

- 44 L. R. A. 133, FIRST NAT. BANK v. GERMAN BANK, 107 Iowa, 543, 70 Am. St. Rep. 216, 78 N. W. 195.

Liability for negligence of notary.

Cited in footnote to Williams v. Parks, 56 L. R. A. 759, which sustains notary's liability on bond for neglecting to give notice of dishonor.

Liability for negligence in sale of drugs.

Distinguished in Burgess v. Sims Drug Co. 114 Iowa, 277, 54 L. R. A. 365, 89 Am. St. Rep. 359, 86 N. W. 307, holding druggist firm liable for negligence of skilled and duly registered pharmacist in their employ.

- 44 L. R. A. 135, FIGG v. THOMPSON, 105 Ky. 509, 49 S. W. 202.

License for business of contracting for public work.

Cited in Richardson v. Mehler, 111 Ky. 430, 63 S. W. 957, holding objection to ordinance requiring bidders for public improvements to be licensed, as unconstitutional, too late after work accepted and apportionment made.

- 44 L. R. A. 136, COUCHMAN v. COUCHMAN, 104 Ky. 680, 47 S. W. 858.

- 44 L. R. A. 141, BITZER v. THOMPSON, 105 Ky. 514, 49 S. W. 199.

- 44 L. R. A. 142, WIENECKE v. ARBIN, 88 Md. 182, 40 Atl. 709.

Proof of will and signature by mark.

Cited in footnotes to Re Thompson, 45 L. R. A. 682, which holds probate of will not prevented by witness's failure to remember facts stated in attestation clause; Finley v. Prescott, 47 L. R. A. 695, which holds good, unattested signature by mark for purpose of identifying maker as party.

- 44 L. R. A. 149, CONDON v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSO. 89 Md. 99, 73 Am. St. Rep. 169, 42 Atl. 944.

Interference by court with management of foreign corporations.

Cited in Stockley v. Thomas, 89 Md. 668, 43 Atl. 766, dismissing bill asking appointment of receiver of foreign insolvent corporation, where assets in state not collectible except by involving management of internal affairs of foreign corporation; Taylor v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 97 Va. 67, 45 L. R. A. 626, footnote p. 621, 33 S. E. 375, denying right to enjoin foreign assessment company from having membership certificate declared forfeited for nonpayment of alleged illegal assessment; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 125 N. C. 54, 45 L. R. A. 856, footnote p. 853, 34 S. E. 199, denying right to enjoin levying of assessments on resident member of foreign insurance company; Howard v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. 125 N. C. 54, 45 L. R. A. 857, 34 S. E. 199, refusing to enjoin alleged illegal assessments of foreign corporation.

Construction of foreign contracts.

Cited in McKean v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 459, holding stockholder's contract with foreign building and loan association is to be construed according to law of foreign state.

Constitution and by-laws as part of insurance contract.

Cited in Dale v. Brumbly, 96 Md. 677, 54 Atl. 655, holding assignment of benefit certificate to creditor, contrary to by-laws of society, void as to beneficiaries.

Cited in footnote to McLendon v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 52 L. R. A. 444, which holds reasonable delay in delivering benefit certificate gives no right to recover on certificate delivered after death of insured.

44 L. R. A. 157, WATSON v. PORTLAND & C. E. R. CO. 91 Me. 584, 64 Am. St. Rep. 268, 40 Atl. 699.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Call v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. 69 N. H. 565, 45 Atl. 405, holding it question for jury whether plaintiff was negligent in accidentally stepping into open ditch in attempt to board car; Scott v. Bergen County Traction Co. 63 N. J. L. 410, 43 Atl. 1060, holding it question for jury as to what is ordinary care in case of passenger standing on platform of car preparing to alight while car is slowing down; Nieboer v. Detroit Electric R. Co. 128 Mich. 493, 87 N. W. 626 (dissenting opinion), majority holding person riding on bumper of electric car guilty of contributory negligence; Seller v. Market-Street R. Co. 130 Cal. 272, 72 Pac. 1006, holding riding upon platform of electric car not negligence, as matter of law.

Cited in footnote to Third Ave. R. Co. v. Barton, 52 L. R. A. 471, which denies right of passenger on running board of street car to recover for injuries by contact with pillar near track, while passing around conductor, also on such board.

44 L. R. A. 159, TELEGRAM NEWSPAPER CO. v. COM. 172 Mass. 294, 70 Am. St. Rep. 280, 52 N. E. 445.

Contempt by newspaper publications.

Cited in footnote to State v. Bee Pub. Co. 50 L. R. A. 195, which sustains punishment for contempt of newspaper publishing articles threatening judges with public odium if they decide pending cause in certain way.

44 L. R. A. 163, MAY v. CLELAND, 117 Mich. 45, 75 N. W. 129.

44 L. R. A. 164, PEOPLE v. DETTENTHALER, 118 Mich. 505, 75 N. W. 129.

44 L. R. A. 167, BELIVEAU v. AMOSKEAG MFG. CO. 68 N. H. 225, 73 Am. St. Rep. 577, 40 Atl. 734.

Who may compromise action.

Disapproved in effect in Fletcher v. Parker, 53 W. Va. 425, 97 Am. St. Rep. 991, 44 S. E. 422, holding that next friend of infant cannot compromise judgment obtained by him in name of infant.

44 L. R. A. 170, BUCHANAN v. TILDEN, 158 N. Y. 109, 70 Am. St. Rep. 454, 52 N. E. 724.

Contracts for benefit of third persons.

Cited in Bouton v. Welch, 170 N. Y. 557, 63 N. E. 539, Affirming 48 App. Div. 388, 63 N. Y. Supp. 80, holding oral agreement to assign mortgage, made between mortgagor and mortgagee for benefit of mortgagor's wife, adequate consideration having been given by mortgagor, enforceable by wife; Priester v. Hohloch, 70 App. Div. 260, 75 N. Y. Supp. 405, holding agreement in lease to pay rent to widow of lessor, in case of lessor's death before expiration of lease, not enforceable by widow; Huggins v. Lewis, 31 Misc. 293, 64 N. Y. Supp. 355, refusing to require trustee to sell portion of estate for benefit of testator's child, will giving testator's widow life use of estate and permitting her to use a portion of principal in case of need, for assisting children remaindermen; Opper v. Hirsh, 33 Misc. 561, 68 N. Y. Supp. 879, holding mother a proper party plaintiff in action by her son to enforce contract by which latter agreed to perform services for her judgment creditor in consideration for not entering judgment, although such contract not enforceable by the mother; Flagg v. Fisk, 93 App. Div. 173, 87 N. Y. Supp. 530, holding contract with surviving partner by widow of deceased partner for payment of partnership debt owed her mother, enforceable on behalf of latter; Rosseau v. Rouss, 91 App. Div. 234, 86 N. Y. Supp. 497, holding that illegitimate child may have enforced in its behalf, contract between his mother and putative father for its support; Wait v. Wilson, 86 App. Div. 487, 83 N. Y. Supp. 834, holding agreement by wife with husband to will, after his death, so much of his estate as not used by her, to her stepson, not enforceable by latter.

Cited in footnotes to Morgan v. Randolph-Clowes Co. 51 L. R. A. 653, which denies right of firm creditor to sue corporation assuming firm debts; Ferris v. American Brewing Co. 52 L. R. A. 305, which sustains right of action of one for whose benefit stipulation in lease was made, against sale on premises of other person's beer; Capital Traction Co. v. Offutt, 53 L. R. A. 390, which denies liability of street railway company for debts of other company whose property and franchises bought; Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 53 L. R. A. 609, which denies right of action of one furnishing materials to contractor to sue on bond by latter to city, conditioned on turning over building free of claims for materials; Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 796, which denies right of action against railroad company carrying mail under contract with government, by sender of registered mail destroyed through negligence of its employees; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 61 L. R. A. 509, which sustains right of third person to enforce contract made for his benefit.

Distinguished in Borland v. Welch, 102 N. Y. 110, 56 N. E. 556, holding antenuptial settlement by wife, with provision for her collateral heirs in certain contingency, not enforceable by such collaterals so far as property acquired after termination of coverture is concerned; Glauatz v. People's Guaranty Search Co. 49 App. Div. 469, 63 N. Y. Supp. 691, holding action not maintainable on guaranty of accuracy of search made to purchaser of property by a subsequent grantee, to whom abstract of title was delivered; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 161 N. Y. 557, 56 N. E. 116, holding deposit made payable by order of depositor to herself, or in case of death to a niece, not a contract enforceable against bank by niece after depositor's death; Everdell v. Hill, 58 App. Div. 158, 68 N. Y. Supp. 719, holding contract between three persons to will their property to their survivors, the last survivor of them to will to certain nieces, not enforceable by latter.

44 L. R. A. 177, NORTH CHICAGO STREET R. CO. v. ACKLEY, 171 Ill. 100, 49 N. E. 222.

Appeal from judgment pro confesso.

Cited in Monarch Brewing Co. v. Wolford, 179 Ill. 255, 53 N. E. 583, upholding right of defendant where default and decree pro confesso have been entered, to contest sufficiency of bill itself on appeal.

Real party in interest.

Cited in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Murowski, 78 Ill. App. 662, holding objection that real plaintiff had no interest in cause of action, raised for first time in reply brief, waived; Chicago General R. Co. v. Capek, 82 Ill. App. 170, holding judgment awarding damages for personal injuries to person injured, for use of assignee, erroneous; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Lundahl, 82 Ill. App. 556, holding words "for use of" assignee, surplusage, in action for personal injuries brought in name of injured person.

Distinguished in Williams v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 199 Ill. 61, 64 N. E. 1024, upholding validity of assignment of judgment for personal injuries, signed and acknowledged before judgment was entered.

Contracts against public policy.

Followed without comment in Geer v. Frank, 79 Ill. App. 195.

Cited in Cameron v. Boeger, 200 Ill. 92, 93 Am. St. Rep. 165, 65 N. E. 690, denying right of attorney, in absence of contract, to lien on judgment for fees; London Guarantee & Acci. Co. v. Horn, 101 Ill. App. 363, holding agreement between insurer against accidents to employees, and assured, which would deprive latter of right to settle without consent of former, void; Davis v. Webber, 66 Ark. 197, 45 L. R. A. 199, 74 Am. St. Rep. 81, 49 S. W. 822, holding stipulation in contract with attorney for services, depriving client of right to settle suit without consent of attorney, void; Ritchie v. Krueger, 102 Ill. App. 654, upholding lien for fees and right of client to dismiss suit when he will; Maires's Disbarment, 189 Pa. 108, 41 Atl. 938, Affirming 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 77, holding agreement by attorney to conduct suit for client for half of amount recovered, after deducting expenses, champertous; Potter v. Ajax Min. Co. 19 Utah, 436, 57 Pac. 270 (dissenting opinion), majority denying right of client having agreement with attorney to conduct suit for contingent fee, to settle action in fraud of attorney's rights; Rose v. Fretz, 109 Fed. 812, upholding right of defendant to settle suit with complainant for infringement of patent, although he had knowledge that complainant's attorney was to receive half of proceeds for services; Davis v. Chase, 159 Ind. 244, 95 Am. St. Rep. 294, 64 N. E. 88, holding contract by which attorney agrees to prosecute suit for percentage fee, and client agrees not to settle without attorney's consent, void.

Cited in footnote to Tompkins v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 340, which sustains plaintiff's right to dismiss suit, notwithstanding lien of attorney.

When bill sufficient to support decree.

Cited in Winnetka v. Chicago & M. Electric R. Co. 107 Ill. App. 122, holding allegation in bill that trestle work was authorized by ordinance, broad enough to sustain injunction against interference with it, granted on ground of acquiescence by village in the construction, although ordinance void.

44 L. R. A. 193, DANEHOWER v. DAWSON, 65 Ark. 129, 46 S. W. 131.

Right of purchaser at foreclosure to possession during redemption period.

Followed in Vaughan v. Walton, 66 Ark. 573, 52 S. W. 437, holding purchaser at foreclosure sale entitled to possession during period allowed for redemption.

44 L. R. A. 197, STATE ex rel. SOUTHEY v. LASHAR, 71 Conn. 540, 42 Atl. 636.

44 L. R. A. 202, OWENSBORO v. COM. 105 Ky. 344, 49 S. W. 320.

Public property exempt from taxation.

Cited in footnote to Gate City Guards v. Atlanta, 54 L. R. A. 806, which denies exemption, as public property, to armory owned by volunteer military force.

Franchise tax as to municipal corporations.

Cited in Newport v. Com. 106 Ky. 441, 45 L. R. A. 520, 50 S. W. 845, holding municipal corporation owning waterworks plant, subject to franchise tax.

44 L. R. A. 205, MILHOLLAND v. WHALEN, 89 Md. 212, 43 Atl. 43.

Trusts and gifts.

Cited in Snader v. Slingluff, 95 Md. 366, 52 Atl. 510, holding trust established by written declaration of trustee as to its terms at about date of delivery of property to him, and letters of settler showing intention to create such trust; De Grange v. De Grange, 96 Md. 615, 54 Atl. 663, holding promissory note delivered to payee as gift not enforceable against maker's estate.

Cited in footnote to Whalen v. Milholland, 44 L. R. A. 208, which holds valid gift not made by deposit in savings bank in name of donor and donee as joint owners, payable to order of either or survivor, where donor retains pass book.

44 L. R. A. 208, WHALEN v. MILHOLLAND, 89 Md. 199, 43 Atl. 45.

Trusts and gifts inter vivos.

Cited in Denigan v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 127 Cal. 150, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35, 59 Pac. 390, and Denigan v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 127 Cal. 141, 59 Pac. 389, holding gift not established by placing of bank account of separate property of wife in alternative names of husband and wife, latter retaining right to withdraw whole fund; Main's Appeal, 73 Conn. 642, 48 Atl. 965, holding invalid as gift, deposit in name of owner of money and daughters, intended to operate to transfer title of fund in bank to daughters after death of donor; Re Bauernschmidt, 97 Md. 59, 54 Atl. 637, holding rental of safe deposit box in joint names of husband and wife, husband delivering one key to wife and keeping one himself, not gift of securities contained in box.

Cited in footnotes to Milholland v. Whalen, 44 L. R. A. 205, which holds valid trust created by deposit in savings bank in trust for owner and another, payable to order of either, with balance to survivor; Murphy v. Bordwell, 52 L. R. A. 849, which holds gift of bank deposit consummated by power of attorney to donee, giving right to draw in donor's name; Lord v. New York L. Ins. Co. 56 L. R. A. 597, which sustains gift of policy found among papers of insured at his death, on proof of his declarations that it was donee's.

Ownership by the entirety.

Distinguished in Brewer v. Bowersox, 92 Md. 570, 48 Atl. 1060, holding that certificate of deposit acknowledged to have been received from husband or wife, interest payable "to them or their order," creates ownership by the entirety.

44 L. R. A. 213, TRENTON PASS. R. CO. v. GUARANTORS' LIABILITY INDEMNITY CO. 60 N. J. L. 246, 37 Atl. 609.

Validity of contracts of indemnity.

Cited in Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Southern R. News Co. 151 Mo. 386, 45 L. R. A. 385, 74 Am. St. Rep. 545, 52 S. W. 205, upholding contract in which news company, for valid consideration, agreed to indemnify carrier for loss sustained by injury to news company's agents through carrier's negligence; Illinois C. R. Co. v. J. L. Fulton Co. 108 Ill. App. 239, upholding contract between railroad company and contractor performing work for it, relieving former from liability for injury to contractor's employees.

Construction of contracts.

Cited in footnotes to Holmes v. Phenix Ins. Co. 47 L. R. A. 306, which holds damage by hail accompanied by wind storm not covered by policy against wind storms; Re Hogan, 45 L. R. A. 166, which holds contract guaranteeing a certain revenue per acre from crops, insurance; People ex rel. Kasson v. Rose, 44 L. R. A. 124, which holds guaranteeing fidelity of officers and performance of contracts, insurance.

44 L. R. A. 216, LAIDLAW v. SAGE, 158 N. Y. 73, 52 N. E. 679.

Evidence insufficient to support finding or verdict.

Cited in Jefferson County Nat. Bank v. Townley, 159 N. Y. 496, 54 N. E. 74, holding finding that assignment was made to evade statute not supported by mere scintilla of evidence on the question; Shotwell v. Dixon, 163 N. Y. 53, 57 N. E. 178, holding mere conjecture or surmise that creditor knew of contemplated general assignment of debtor not sufficient to justify finding that such knowledge existed; Lopez v. Campbell, 163 N. Y. 348, 57 N. E. 501, holding evidence which might justify court in suspecting that corporation suffered judgments against it for purpose of granting illegal preference, insufficient to warrant setting such judgments aside; Cassidy v. Uhlmann, 170 N. Y. 534, 63 N. E. 554, dissenting opinion by Martin, J., who holds evidence in case as to fraud of bank director in permitting receipt of deposits after insolvency, merely conjectural; Weidinger v. Third Ave. R. Co. 40 App. Div. 199, 57 N. Y. Supp. 851, holding it error to submit question to jury as to fracture of plaintiff's leg, where there was no evidence upon the point; Albring v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 46 App. Div. 465, 61 N. Y. Supp. 763, holding evidence that brakeman's head might have passed through opening in defective telltales not sufficient to render carrier liable for killing of brakeman by being struck by overhead bridge; Connor v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 48 App. Div. 584, 63 N. Y. Supp. 509, denying liability of street railroad company for injury due to running away of horse struck and frightened by flying piece of snow which driver testified came from direction of defendant's street sweeper; Grockie v. Hirshfield, 50 App. Div. 91, 63 N. Y. Supp. 365, holding direction of verdict in favor of defendant not warranted where evidence did not so preponderate in his favor that court would have been justified in setting aside verdict for plaintiff; McAllister v. Ferguson, 50 App. Div. 530, 64 N. Y. Supp. 197, holding question whether there was any evidence of permanent injury in negligence action improperly submitted to jury; Craig v. Laffin & R. Powder Co. 55 App. Div. 54, 67 N. Y. Supp. 74, denying right of recovery where plaintiff's intestate was killed as result of two explosions, second being the one on which negligence was based, and evidence being conjectural as to which caused death; Casper v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 56 App. Div. 375, 67 N. Y. Supp. 805, holding mere presumption of negligence arising from fact that pedestrian caught foot in loose rail rebutted by evidence of due diligence in spiking same upon discovery by inspector; Nelson v. Masonic Mut. Life Asso. 57 App. Div. 217, 68 N. Y. Supp. 290, holding evidence that insured's clothes were found in bathing house and that he had asked two friends to go swimming with him insufficient to go to jury upon theory of drowning; Maimone v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 58 App. Div. 387, 68 N. Y. Supp. 1073, holding testimony of physician that plaintiff's condition might be result of constitutional ailment, or might be result of injury complained of, too speculative to afford basis of award by jury; McConnell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 63 App. Div. 548, 71 N. Y. Supp. 616, holding verdict for plaintiff, where intestate was killed by being struck by piece of coal falling from passing locomotive tender, not supported by evidence of one witness that coal was piled 3 feet above edges of tender; Marshall v. Buffalo, 63 App. Div. 606, 71 N. Y. Supp. 719, holding disputed questions of fact must be submitted to jury, although verdict for plaintiff would not be permitted to stand; Walters v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 64 App. Div. 155, 71 N. Y. Supp. 853, holding uncorroborated evidence of plaintiff that he received shock from live wire while riding rubber-tired bicycle on dry asphalt pavement insufficient to support verdict where defendant's testimony showed that wire was dead, and that rubber and dry asphalt were nonconductors; Hoyt v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 73 App. Div. 256, 76 N. Y. Supp. 832 (dissenting opinion), majority holding evidence that plaintiff suffered fracture of skull, destruction of ear, paralysis on one side, deafness, loss of eyesight, memory, sexual power, and was rendered mildly insane, sufficient to warrant damages for permanent injury, although receiving same wages after as before accident; Johnson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 173 N. Y. 83, 65 N. E. 946, reversing verdict in favor of trespasser claiming to have been injured by being kicked off train, where there was no evidence that he was thus assaulted by any of carrier's servants; Gray v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 39 App. Div. 542, 57 N. Y. Supp. 587 (dissenting opinion), majority holding evidence sufficient to warrant jury in finding that plaintiff was injured by being crowded off platform of car by act of conductor in attempting to board same; Monahan v. Eidlitz, 59 App. Div. 229, 69 N. Y. Supp. 335 (dissenting opinion), as to insufficiency of mere scintilla of proof to sustain claim of party upon whom burden of proof rests; Taylor v. Commercial Bank, 174 N. Y. 192, 62 L. R. A. 788, 95 Am. St. Rep. 564, 66 N. E. 726, holding mere conjecture that false representation was made with fraudulent purpose, not sufficient to support finding to that effect; Carter v. Nunda, 55 App. Div. 507, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1059, holding mere evidence that one is still suffering from shock of fall insufficient to support recovery on basis of permanent injury; White v. Lewiston & Y. Frontier R. Co. 94 App. Div. 7, 87 N. Y. Supp. 901, holding verdict for personal injuries not supported by evidence that carrier employed incompetent motorman, who intrusted power to another, whose negligence caused accident.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. IV.—60.

Distinguished in Ivey v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 63 App. Div. 315, 71 N. Y. Supp. 633, upholding refusal of court to recall jury and charge them that there was no question of permanent injury in case, where there was evidence that plaintiff's disabilities would continue for some time to come.

Proximate cause.

Cited in Schoepflin v. Coffey, 162 N. Y. 18, 56 N. E. 502, holding speaking of slanderous words in presence of newspaper reporters not proximate cause of damage resulting from subsequent publication of same; Seifter v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 169 N. Y. 258, 62 N. E. 349, holding fractured bone not proximate cause of death four months later from septic pneumonia, there being no proof of septic condition at point of fracture after bone had united; Rider v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co. 171 N. Y. 161, 58 L. R. A. 133, 63 N. E. 836, dissenting opinion by Vann, J., who holds failure to stop car after striking wagon, proximate cause of resulting injury; Hutchinson v. Charles F. Parker & Co. 39 App. Div. 138, 57 N. Y. Supp. 168, denying right of injured servant to recover from master for injury from explosion of dynamite proximately caused by negligence of coemployee; Marks v. Rochester R. Co. 41 App. Div. 76, 58 N. Y. Supp. 210, holding act of conductor in attempting to drive boys from platform of car not proximate cause of injury to another boy, on platform by conductor's invitation, who was pushed off platform by boys seeking to escape conductor; Rusk v. Manhattan R. Co. 46 App. Div. 104, 61 N. Y. Supp. 384, holding depression in platform covered with ice not proximate cause of injury to person who slipped thereon and fell; Thomson v. Seaman, 67 App. Div. 63, 73 N. Y. Supp. 488, holding instruction that if defendants' witnesses were believed, verdict must be for defendant, erroneous where evidence presented questions whether contributory negligence proximate cause of injury; Hoey v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 70 App. Div. 63, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1113, holding death from acute pulmonary tuberculosis not proximately caused by injuries due to collision; Koch v. Fox, 71 App. Div. 295, 75 N. Y. Supp. 913, holding failure to erect covering over sidewalk by owner of property not proximate cause of injury caused by negligence of employee of contractor in letting brick fall; Koch v. Zimmermann, 85 App. Div. 375, 83 N. Y. Supp. 339, holding blow on head from brick not proximate cause of death three months later from pneumonia, due to wetting received by jumping into river; Lersner v. McDonald, 38 Misc. 735, 78 N. Y. Supp. 1125, holding blast breaking water main is proximate cause of damages caused by water flowing from broken pipe; Southern P. Co. v. Yeargin, 48 C. C. A. 506, 109 Fed. 445, holding question whether proximate cause of collision was failure of engineer to understand despatch, or failure to equip tender with proper light, for jury; Leeds v. New York Teleph. Co. 178 N. Y. 121, 70 N. E. 219, Reversing 79 App. Div. 124, 80 N. Y. Supp. 114 (former appeal in 64 App. Div. 489, 72 N. Y. Supp. 250, Which Affirmed 32 Misc. 672, 66 N. Y. Supp. 457), holding injury due to falling bricks proximately caused by derrick striking wire, which pulled down chimney; Suse v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 80 App. Div. 28, 80 N. Y. Supp. 513, condemning instruction that negligence on the part of defendant's motorman might render it liable for plaintiff's injury, even though such negligence did not contribute to the accident which caused the injury; Roedecker v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 87 App. Div. 229, 84 N. Y. Supp. 300, holding fall of street car horse not proximate cause of kicking of passenger by it while trying to get up; Murphy v. New York, 89 App. Div. 98, 85 N. Y. Supp. 445, holding break in gas main not proximate cause of death of one suffocated by gas while entering manhole to rescue workman overcome while looking for the leak; Wheeler v. Norton, 92 App. Div. 373, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1095, holding breaking of pipe by blasting, proximate cause of injury from resulting escape of water; Berman v. Schultz, 40 Misc. 213, 81 N. Y. Supp. 647, holding owner of electric delivery wagon not liable for injuries resulting from collision proximately caused by starting of wagon by boys, while chauffeur was away; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L. R. A. 423, 59 C. C. A. 601, 124 Fed. 121, holding opening of door to elevator well by strange boy, proximate cause of injury to one stepping through and falling into shaft.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 91) on rule of proximate cause in case of malicious torts.

Objection to evidence available on appeal.

Cited in Jarvis v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 65 App. Div. 492, 72 N. Y. Supp. 829, holding objection to evidence offered to perfect hypothetical question must be made before, and renewed after, to be available on appeal.

Dismissal of complaint by court.

Cited in Peggo v. Dinan, 72 App. Div. 437, 76 N. Y. Supp. 565 (dissenting opinion), majority denying power of court at close of defendant's evidence to dismiss complaint "upon the merits."

Master's duty to furnish safe machinery.

Cited in Whitney v. Queen City Ice Co. 49 App. Div. 493, 63 N. Y. Supp. 535, sustaining judgment for plaintiff hurt by slipping between slats of ice conveyor, which could not be stopped in time because of defective clutch.

44 L. R. A. 227, UNION INS. CO. v. CENTRAL TRUST CO. 157 N. Y. 633, 52 N. E. 671.

Revocation of arbitration agreement.

Cited in Magoun v. Magoun, 84 App. Div. 234, 82 N. Y. Supp. 820, holding code remedy for recovery of damages for revocation of arbitration agreement not exclusive.

44 L. R. A. 236, KERSHAW v. LADD, 34 Or. 375, 56 Pac. 402.

Sending of commercial paper by collecting bank directly to drawee bank.

Cited in footnotes to Minneapolis Sash & Door Co. v. Metropolitan Bank, 44 L. R. A. 504, which denies bank's right to send check for collection directly to drawee, notwithstanding custom; Givan v. Bank of Alexandria, 47 L. R. A. 270, which holds sending check directly to drawee bank for collection, negligence;

First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 48 L. R. A. 583, which holds collecting bank impliedly instructed to send certificate of deposit directly to bank making it, which is only bank in place; Second Nat. Bank v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 55 L. R. A. 273, which holds bank negligent in sending note for collection to bank whose cashier is treasurer of corporation maker, without hearing from similar note previously sent.

44 L. R. A. 242, KEYES v. KONKEL, 119 Mich. 550, 75 Am. St. Rep. 423, 78 N. W. 649.

Rights as to disposal and burial of dead body.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hull, 113 Ky. 569, 57 L. R. A. 773, 68 S. W. 433, holding that mental suffering may be considered as element of damages in action against carrier for breach of contract to transport corpse.

Cited in footnotes to Enos v. Snyder, 53 L. R. A. 221, which holds next of kin entitled to decedent's body for burial, as against disposition by will; Wright v. Hollywood Cemetery Corp. 52 L. R. A. 621, which sustains right of grandmother of orphan child living with her, to determine place of burial; Thompson v. State, 51 L. R. A. 883, which holds attempt to make unauthorized sale of dead body of human being a misdemeanor; Doxtator v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 45 L. R. A. 535, which denies employer's liability for cremation, according to custom of hospital, of fragments amputated in unsuccessful attempt to save employee's life.

44 L. R. A. 243, YELLOWSTONE NAT. BANK v. GAGNON, 19 Mont. 402, 61 Am. St. Rep. 520, 48 Pac. 762.

Report of later appeal in 25 Mont. 270, 64 Pac. 664.

Bona fide holder for value.

Cited in Lewis v. Lindley, 19 Mont. 441, 48 Pac. 765, holding burden upon wife purchasing real estate from her husband to show bona fides and lack of notice of equitable lien; Commercial Bank v. Toklas, 21 Wash. 40, 56 Pac. 927, holding bank bona fide holder of note given in payment of prior note and wrongfully pledged by payee, at least to extent of indebtedness secured.

44 L. R. A. 252, WILKES COUNTY v. CALL, 123 N. C. 308, 31 S. E. 481.

Estoppel by recitals in bonds.

Cited in Uncas Nat. Bank v. Superior, 115 Wis. 351, 91 N. W. 1004, holding city not estopped by recitals in bonds from defense of utter lack of power to issue same.

Cited in footnotes to Independent School District v. Rew, 55 L. R. A. 364, which holds municipal corporation estopped to deny truth of recitals in bonds held by innocent purchaser; Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 49 L. R. A. 534, which holds city estopped by recitals in bonds as to purpose of issuance.

County aid to railroads.

Cited in Graves v. Moore County, 135 N. C. 54, 47 S. E. 134, holding power given to counties by Code to subscribe stock to aid in completion of railroad not to include power to subscribe for purpose of "construction" and equipment of railroad; Henderson County v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 63 C. C. A. 474, 128 Fed. 824, holding bonds in aid of railroad, valid under prior decisions of state courts, not invalidated by later decisions reversing former rulings.

Formalities required in passage of legislative bills.

Followed in Wilkes County v. Coler, 180 U. S. 515, 45 L. ed. 649, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 458, Same case in Circuit Court of Appeals in 51 C. C. A. 400, 113 Fed. 726; Stanly County v. Coler, 37 C. C. A. 490, 96 Fed. 290, holding that Federal court must follow decisions of state courts as to whether provisions of state Constitution respecting passage of statute are mandatory.

Cited in Smathers v. Madison County, 125 N. C. 486, 34 S. E. 554, and Debnam v. Chitty, 131 N. C. 678, 43 S. E. 3, holding provision of Constitution as to recording of yeas and nays, mandatory; Glenn v. Wray, 126 N. C. 732, 36 S. E. 167, holding act not invalid because immaterial amendment was inserted on third reading, where constitutional requirement as to recording of yeas and nays had been complied with; New Hanover County v. De Rosset, 129 N. C. 280, 40 S. E. 43, holding judgment sustaining validity of bonds purported to have been authorized by legislative act, erroneous, record merely showing number of yeas and nays; Rodman-Heath Cotton Mills v. Waxhaw, 130 N. C. 294, 41 S. E. 483, holding town charter not passed in constitutional manner confers no power of taxation.

Correctness of legislative journals.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Brickman v. Wilson, 45 L. R. A. 772, which denies right of clerk of House of Representatives to expunge false entries from journal after delivery to Secretary of State.

44 L. R. A. 261, HALE v. CAIRNS, 8 N. D. 145, 73 Am. St. Rep. 746, 77 N. W. 1010.

Credits to be allowed borrowing members of insolvent loan association.

Cited in Clarke v. Olson, 9 N. D. 366, 83 N. W. 519, holding that in action by receiver of insolvent building and loan association to foreclose mortgage, monthly dues should be deducted from amount agreed to be paid; Hale v. Gullick, 13 S. D. 645, 84 N. W. 196, holding that in winding up building association, where there is no finding of insolvency, stockholder should be permitted to offset amount paid as dues on stock against balance due on loan; Hale v. Phillips, 68 Ark. 389, 59 S. W. 35, holding that borrowing member of insolvent building and loan association should be credited with interest and premiums, but not with dues; Hale v. Kline, 113 Iowa, 527, 85 N. W. 814; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 121 Mich. 355, 80 N. W. 120, denying right of stockholder of insolvent savings and loan association to offset amount paid as dues on unmatured stock against balance due on loan; Reddick v. United States Bldg. & L. Asso. 106 Ky. 112, 49 S. W. 1075, denying right of borrowing member of insolvent building and loan association to be credited with value of stock, unless such value is shown with reasonable certainty; Coltrane v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 305, holding borrowing member of insolvent building and loan association entitled to be credited with all premiums paid, and interest; People's Bldg. & L. Asso. v. McPhillamy, 81 Miss. 84, 59 L. R. A. 746, footnote p. 743, 95 Am. St. Rep. 693, 32 So. 1001, requiring stock payments of borrowing member to share losses and expenses of winding up loan association; Georgia State Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Shannon, 80 Miss. 643, 31 So. 900, holding question whether foreign loan is usurious to be determined by law of state where mortgaged land situated and debt to be paid; Anselme v. American Sav. & L. Asso. 63 Neb. 529, 88 N. W. 665, holding borrowing member of insolvent building association to be credited with payments of interest, or premiums and interest thereon, but not with dues.

44 L. R. A. 264, SILBERMAN v. HEY, 59 Ohio St. 582, 53 N. E. 258.

Constitutional requirement as to uniformity of general laws.

Cited in Watkins v. Schlechter, 7 Ohio N. P. 44, holding act relating to jurisdiction of justices of peace, not of uniform application, unconstitutional; State v. Spellmire, 67 Ohio St. 82, 65 N. E. 619, declaring act creating special school district unconstitutional.

44 L. R. A. 266, STATE v. RENICK, 33 Or. 584, 72 Am. St. Rep. 758, 56 Pac. 275.

Obtaining money by false representations as to marriage.

Cited in footnote to Leffler v. State, 45 L. R. A. 424, which holds obtaining money on false representation by man that he is unmarried, indictable false pretense.

44 L. R. A. 269, CHESTER TRACTION CO. v. PHILADELPHIA, W. & B. R. CO. 188 Pa. 105, 41 Atl. 449.

Followed on similar state of facts in Union R. Co. v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 188 Pa. 115, 41 Atl. 1119.

Grade crossings.

Cited in Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. v. Lawrence County, 198 Pa. 7, 47 Atl. 955, enjoining construction of county bridge where plan of construction would necessitate grade crossings of railroad tracks; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Butler Pass. R. Co. 207 Pa. 417, 56 Atl. 959, refusing to permit grade crossing of street railway over steam railway tracks on busy street and at point where many trains pass daily.

44 L. R. A. 272, POST PRINTING & PUB. CO. v. INSURANCE CO. OF N. A. 189 Pa. 300, 42 Atl. 192.

44 L. R. A. 273, ADAMS v. UNION R. CO. 21 R. I. 134, 42 Atl. 515.

Ejection from street car for refusal to pay fare.

Cited in footnotes to Nashville Street R. Co. v. Griffin, 49 L. R. A. 451, which denies authority to eject passenger who, after paying fare inside station, enters car which has stopped just outside station; Kiley v. Chicago City R. Co. 52 L. R. A. 626, which denies recovery for injuries in resisting ejection from street car by one having incorrect transfer given him by former conductor; Southern R. Co. v. Wood, 55 L. R. A. 536, which holds carrier liable for ejection of passenger whose round-trip ticket unstamped from inability to find agent.

44 L. R. A. 277, ANDERSON v. YOUNG, 54 S. C. 388, 32 S. E. 448.

Right to custody and services of minors.

Cited in State v. Rhody, 67 S. C. 288, 45 S. E. 205, holding that a father may, by contract, transfer his rights to minor child's service.

Cited in footnotes to Hibbette v. Bains, 51 L. R. A. 839, which sustains father's right to custody of child, notwithstanding assent to wife's deathbed contract to give custody to her relatives; Stapleton v. Poynter, 53 L. R. A. 784, which upholds taking of custody of child against its will from wealthy grandparent and giving to parent of moral habits; State ex rel. Lasserre v. Michel, 54 L. R. A. 927, which denies father's absolute right to custody of minor child; Fletcher v. Hickman, 55 L. R. A. 896, which holds father bound by agreement intrusting custody of infant child to another.

44 L. R. A. 279, TEXAS LOAN AGENCY v. FLEMING, 92 Tex. 458, 49 S. W. 1039.

Followed on subsequent appeal in 24 Tex. Civ. App. 203, 58 S. W. 971.

Liability of landlord for defective condition of leased premises.

Cited in footnotes to Towne v. Thompson, 46 L. R. A. 748, which denies boarding-house lessee's liability to tenant's boarders for illness from unsanitary condition of premises; Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 772, which denies landlord's liability for injury to subtenant's child from defective balustrade on porch; Brady v. Klein, 62 L. R. A. 909, which denies right of action by licensee of tenant on landlord's covenant to repair, for injury due to defective condition of premises; Langenbaugh v. Anderson, 62 L. R. A. 948, which denies liability of lessor of lot for production of oil or gas therefrom, for injury to adjoining owner's property through escape of oil by lessee's negligence.

Insufficient evidence to take case to jury.

Cited in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ball, 96 Tex. 625, 75 S. W. 4, holding mere scintilla of evidence not sufficient to take case to jury on question whether engineer saw trespasser on track in time to have avoided hitting him.

44 L. R. A. 285, CROCO v. OREGON SHORT-LINE R. CO. 18 Utah, 311, 54 Pac. 985.

Jurisdiction of supreme court on appeal.

Cited in Kennedy v. Oregon Short-Line R. Co. 18 Utah, 329, 54 Pac. 988, holding court without jurisdiction to consider alleged error in amount of verdict for causing death of plaintiff's husband; Burt v. Utah Light & P. Co. 26 Utah, 161, 72 Pac. 497, holding that supreme court cannot review facts in case at law, except so far as may be necessary to determine questions of law.

Damages provable under general allegations of complaint.

Cited in North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. 23 Utah, 200, 63 Pac. 812, holding plaintiff entitled, under general allegation of damage, to recover all damages which are natural and proximate result of act complained of; Youngblood v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. 60 S. C. 15, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824, 38 S. E. 232, holding direct effects of injury charged to have been caused by defendant's negligence provable without being specially alleged; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 90, 41 C. C. A. 42, 100 Fed. 758, holding aggravation of plaintiff's injuries due to fright, the proximate effect of collision, provable under general allegation as to bodily injury.

ChamPERTY; contingent fee contracts of attorneys.

Cited in Re Evans, 22 Utah, 380, 53 L. R. A. 958, 83 Am. St. Rep. 794, 62 Pac. 913, and Nelson v. Evans, 21 Utah, 205, 60 Pac. 557, holding contract by which attorney agrees to pay expenses of litigation in consideration of payment of half of amount recovered, champertous; Potter v. Ajax Min. Co. 22 Utah, 293, 61 Pac. 999, upholding right of attorney, agreeing to prosecute plaintiff's case for half of recovery, to prosecute same, after compromise by plaintiff without attorney's consent; Potter v. Ajax Min. Co. 19 Utah, 436, 57 Pac. 270, holding that satisfaction and dismissal of action in fraud of attorney for plaintiff, whose compensation is contingent upon recovery, may be set aside by court.

Cited in footnotes to Geer v. Frank, 45 L. R. A. 110, which holds champertous, agreement by attorney to pay costs and expenses of litigation; Davis v. Webber, 45 L. R. A. 196, which sustains agreement to give statutory penalty on sheriff's bond as attorney's compensation; Newman v. Freitas, 50 L. R. A. 548, which holds void, contract to pay attorney one third of all amounts recovered in divorce suit; Irwin v. Curie, 58 L. R. A. 830, which sustains right of person placing demands in attorney's hands to recover agreed compensation, though statute forbids such agreements.

44 L. R. A. 289, HARMAN v. NORFOLK & W. R. CO. 91 Va. 601, 50 Am. St. Rep. 855, 22 S. E. 490.

Liability for injury to stock.

Cited in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank, 92 Va. 500, 44 L. R. A. 454, 1 S. E. 935, holding carrier liable for failure to provide owner with proper facilities for loading, unloading, feeding, and watering stock.

Cited in footnotes to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Harris, 48 L. R. A. 175, which holds carrier liable for communication of Texas fever by infected cars to cattle transported; Beinhorn v. Griswold, 59 L. R. A. 771, which denies liability of owner of unfenced land for death of trespassing animals by drinking poisonous liquids used in his business.

Contracts to limit liability.

Cited in footnotes to Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 558, which holds prohibition against carriers' limiting liability inapplicable to contract by domestic corporation in other state for transportation entirely outside of state; Central R. Co. v. Murphey, 53 L. R. A. 720, which holds negligent carrier liable for true value, notwithstanding arbitrary preadjustment in bill of lading assented to by shipper; Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 246, which sustains carrier's right to secure entire exemption from liability as insurer for loss not due to negligence or misfeasance; Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 884, which authorizes carrier to stipulate for exemption from liability for wet; Rosenthal v. Weir, 57 L. R. A. 527, which holds failure to comply with agreement for stoppage in transitu not within contract limiting liability to specified amount; Parker v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 827, which holds requirement that perishable freight must be carried at owner's risk, void where no other terms offered by carrier.

Statutes regulating duties of carriers of live stock.

Cited in footnote to Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Campbell, 48 L. R. A. 251, which holds void, statute for free transportation of shippers of stock.

44 L. R. A. 297, SOUTHERN R. CO. v. FRANKLIN & P. R. CO. 96 Va. 693, 32 S. E. 485.

Contracts enforceable in equity.

Cited in Pacific States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Green, 59 C. C. A. 170, 123 Fed. 46, holding contract between loan association and borrowing member, in absence of fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, mistake, or undue influence, enforceable in equity.

44 L. R. A. 305, NEW YORK L. INS. CO. v. DAVIS, 96 Va. 737, 32 S. E. 475.
Right of assignee of policy to proceeds.

Cited in Tate v. Commercial Bldg. Asso. 97 Va. 78, 45 L. R. A. 245, 75 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 S. E. 382, denying right of assignee of life insurance policy, without insurable interest, to more than reimbursement from proceeds for premiums paid, expenses, and interest; First Nat. Bank v. Terry, 99 Va. 196, 37 S. E. 843, holding assignee creditor's interest in proceeds of life insurance policy limited to amount of liability together with premiums paid and interest.

Effect of killing or suicide of insured upon payment of policy.

Cited in footnotes to Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 51 L. R. A. 141, which sustains right of estate of insured, murdered by beneficiary, to recover insurance; Lanier v. Box, 64 L. R. A. 458, which sustains right of wife's distributees to proceeds of policy on husband's life, payable to wife if she survived husband, although latter murdered her and afterwards took his own life.

Forfeiture of policy.

Cited in Ley v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 120 Iowa, 209, 94 N. W. 568, holding fraudulent concealment by insured of fact that he had suffered hemorrhage of stomach not clearly enough established by evidence to warrant forfeiture of policy.

44 L. R. A. 306, MERCHANTS' BANK v. BALLOU, 98 Va. 112, 81 Am. St. Rep. 715, 32 S. E. 481.

Retroactive statutes.

Cited in Cassard v. Tracy, 52 La. Ann. 848, 49 L. R. A. 277, 27 So. 368, holding provisions of Constitution of 1898 conferring jurisdiction upon appellate courts of law and fact not retroactive; Evans-Snyder-Buel Co. v. McFadden, 105 Fed. 304, 44 C. C. A. 505, 58 L. R. A. 906, upholding act validating certain prior mortgages of personal property, in suit by creditor attaching property before passage of curative act.

44 L. R. A. 311, FRANKENTHAL v. SOLOMONSON, 20 Wash. 460, 72 Am. St. Rep. 116, 55 Pac. 754.

Competency of wife as witness against husband.

Cited in Re Jefferson, 96 Fed. 827, denying right to compel wife in bankruptcy proceedings to disclose communications made by her husband concerning his property or income.

Cited in footnote to State v. Kodat, 51 L. R. A. 509, which holds that divorce does not make wife competent witness against husband as to crime previously committed.

44 L. R. A. 313, TROXLER v. SOUTHERN R. CO. 124 N. C. 189, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 32 S. E. 550.

Duty of master to furnish safe places and appliances.

Followed in Elmore v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 130 N. C. 506, 41 S. E. 786, holding railroad company liable for injury to employee due to defective coupling.

Cited in Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 362, 35 S. E. 611, holding master only bound to furnish such safety devices as are in general use; Harden v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 355, 55 L. R. A. 785, 85 Am. St. Rep. 747, 40 S. E. 184, holding failure of railroad company to equip cars with automatic couplers, negligence per se; Wright v. Southern R. Co. 127 N. C. 227, 37 S. E. 221, holding question whether train was equipped with proper brakes to prevent derailment, for jury; Elmore v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 875, 44 S. E. 620, on Second Rehearing, Reversing First Rehearing 131 N. C. 573, 42 S. E. 989, Affirming Original Opinion, 130 N. C. 506, 41 S. E. 786, and holding that where law requires railroad to use automatic coupler, allowing same to be out of repair for unreasonable time is continuing negligence, and cuts off defense of contributory negligence; Orr v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 693, 44 S. E. 401, holding master liable for injury resulting from failure to furnish safe tools for taking down telegraph poles; Walker v. Carolina C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 741, 47 S. E. 675, holding carrier liable for injuries due to defective sand-drier; McGinn v. McCormick, 109 La. 402, 33 So. 382, holding master liable for injury partly due to failure to furnish safe spring for hand car; Fleming v. Southern R. Co. 131 N. C. 481, 42 S. E. 905, holding negligence of master in not providing automatic coupler not excused by contributory negligence of servant making coupling.

Vice principalship.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 71) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Assumed risks of employment.

Cited in Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 128 N. C. 537, 129 N. C. 415, 57 L. R. A. 824, 843, 39 S. E. 43, 40 S. E. 195, holding rule as to assumed risks no longer applicable under special statutes; Ausley v. American Tobacco Co. 130 N. C. 40, 40 S. E. 819 (dissenting opinion), majority holding machinist employed to run machinery assumes risks incident to master's failure to handle or fix cogwheels.

44 L. R. A. 316, PIERCE v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO. 124 N. C. 83, 32 S. E. 399.

Liability of master for acts of servant within apparent scope of authority.

Cited in Cook v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925, holding railroad company liable for acts of flagman and brakeman assaulting person, who was forced to jump from train and was thereby injured; Dorsey v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 104 La. 481, 52 L. R. A. 94, footnote p. 92, 29 So. 177, holding carrier liable for death of trespasser falling under wheels in escaping from rocks thrown by brakeman; McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 721, 67 L. R. A. 229, 47 S. E. 765 (dissenting opinion), Reversing on Rehearing 132 N. C. 514, 95 Am. St. Rep. 641, 44 S. E. 34, majority holding that one riding on pass, contrary to law, may recover damages for injuries due to carrier's negligence; Lewis v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 132 N. C. 387, 43 S. E. 919, holding carrier liable for injury to trespasser, knocked off moving train by brakeman.

Cited in footnotes to Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zantzing, 44 L. R. A. 553, which sustains right to recover from company for engineer throwing steam and water on trespasser negligently standing on footboard between engine and flat car; Nelson Business College Co. v. Lloyd, 46 L. R. A. 314, which holds employer liable for servant's wilful or malicious acts in course of employment; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Zantzing, 47 L. R. A. 282, which sustains liability for injuries from engineer's ejection of trespasser from footboard of engine; Enright v. Pittsburgh Junction R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 330, which denies right to eject or frighten ten-year-old boy from rapidly moving train; Lamb v. Littman, 53 L. R. A. 852, which holds employer liable for assault by cruel overseer on minor employee; Lynch v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 810, which denies company's liability for assault by station agent as result of personal quarrel; Guille v. Campbell, 55 L. R. A. 111, which denies master's liability for injury to bystander by slipping of hook from servant's hand while pretending to throw at boys playing on cotton bales; Alsever v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 748, which sustains liability for injuries by engineer operating blow-off cock to frighten children; Palmisano v. New Orleans City R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 405, which denies master's liability for injury to boy running blindly against moving car after release by employee, who had caught and lectured him; Southern R. Co. v. James, 63 L. R. A. 257, which holds master liable for injury by night watchman shooting trespasser while running away after being arrested by him.

Distinguished in Adams v. Southern R. Co. 125 N. C. 566, 34 S. E. 642, holding carrier not liable for services of physicians employed by its conductor to treat injured trespassers; Palmer v. Winston-Salem R. & Electric Co. 131 N. C. 252, 42 S. E. 604, holding carrier not liable for assault by motorman upon passenger after latter had left car at termination of his passage; Julian v. Central Trust Co. 193 U. S. 108, 48 L. ed. 637, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399, holding that corporation property does not continue liable for debts of corporation accruing after foreclosure sale.

Liability of lessor of railroad for negligence of lessee.

Cited in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 83, 41 C. C. A. 30, 100 Fed. 746; Harden v. North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 359, 55 L. R. A. 786, 85 Am. St. Rep. 747, 40 S. E. 184; Perry v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 335, 40 S. E. 191, — holding railroad company leasing its road liable for negligence of lessee in operation of road.

44 L. R. A. 319, HALL v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 173 Mass. 16, 73 Am. St. Rep. 255, 53 N. E. 154.

Oral agreements relating to negotiable paper.

Cited in Equitable Marine Ins. Co. v. Adams, 173 Mass. 438, 53 N. E. 883, denying right of defendant to prove that when he indorsed promissory note, he understood it was merely in his representative character as assignee of insolvent; Henry Wood's Sons Co. v. Schaefer, 173 Mass. 445, 73 Am. St. Rep. 305, 53 N. E. 881, denying right of maker of promissory note to prove agreement made at delivery of note by payee not to enforce it according to its tenor; Kelley v. Thompson, 175 Mass. 429, 56 N. E. 713, denying right of maker of promissory note to prove oral agreement as to discount to be made by payee upon payment of note.

44 L. R. A. 321, HOADLEY v. SAVINGS BANK, 71 Conn. 599, 42 Atl. 667.

Sale of real estate through inducement of brokers.

Cited in Hartman v. Warner, 75 Conn. 200, 52 Atl. 719, holding real estate broker, in absence of agreement fixing amount, entitled to customary commissions or to reasonable compensation, where customary rate not established; Adams v. McLaughlin, 159 Ind. 25, 64 N. E. 462, holding broker's right to commissions on finding purchaser not affected by fact that another broker was also employed for same purpose; and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 321.

Cited in footnotes to Cadigan v. Crabtree, 55 L. R. A. 77, which denies broker's right to commissions for procuring offer of lease, subsequently accepted and contract executed through other broker; Livermore v. Crane, 57 L. R. A. 402, which holds purchaser refusing to complete purchase liable to broker for loss of commissions from seller.

Cited in notes (43 L. R. A. 606) on real estate broker's commissions as affected by negligence, fraud, or default of principal, and a defective title; (44 L. R. A. 593, 600, 608, 611) on performance by real estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property; (45 L. R. A. 33) on fraud and secret dealings or interest of real estate brokers as affecting their commissions; (53 L. R. A. 243) on duty of broker to disclose identity of purchaser to his principal.

Findings of fact by trial court.

Cited in Post v. Hartford Street R. Co. 72 Conn. 365, 44 Atl. 547, refusing to review assignments of alleged error in finding, or to find certain facts from conflicting evidence; Fox v. Kinney, 72 Conn. 406, 44 Atl. 745, refusing to correct finding when fact relied on was not admitted or undisputed or necessary to present a question of law decided adversely to appellant; Duncan v. Kearney, 72 Conn. 586, 45 Atl. 358, refusing to disturb finding of fact that plaintiff was procuring cause of sale of real estate; Morris v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 73 Conn. 686, 49 Atl. 180, holding finding by trial court of facts upon which judgment was based, accompanying judgment file, where no other findings were made, should be treated as part of judgment record; Hyde v. Mendel, 75 Conn. 142, 52 Atl. 744, refusing to consider claim that trial court erred in weighing the evidence supporting facts on which its judgment was founded; Williams v. Clowes, 75 Conn. 160, 52 Atl. 820, holding findings of trial court upon facts, conclusive, where not shown to have been unreasonable.

Cited in footnote to Corbett v. Matz, 48 L. R. A. 217, which denies power of court to make part of record, finding of facts made after term expires.

Statement of conditions of admissibility of evidence.

Cited in Standard Cement Co. v. Windham Nat. Bank, 71 Conn. 680, 42 Atl. 1006, holding that where record contains full statement of conditions as to admissibility of certain evidence, certified by judge, recital in finding may be read in the light of that statement.

44 L. R. A. 353, LITTLE ROCK & FT. S. R. CO. v. OPPENHEIMER, 64 Ark. 271, 43 S. W. 150.

Construction of penal statutes.

Cited in State v. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. 70 Ark. 331, 67 S. W. 1011, denying liability of ferryman for penalty for failure to post rates, where clerk failed to give him copy of rates, as required by statute.

44 L. R. A. 364, Re ROYER, 123 Cal. 614, 56 Pac. 461.

Status of public institutions.

Cited in People ex rel. Stone v. Jefferds, 126 Cal. 301, 58 Pac. 704, holding irrigation district not sovereign so as to be relieved from imputation of laches.

Cited in footnote to Watson Seminary v. County Court, 45 L. R. A. 675, which holds charter provisions of educational corporation changeable at will of legislature.

Charitable trusts.

Cited in Fay v. Howe, 136 Cal. 603, 69 Pac. 423, holding gift of fund to trustee "in aid of deserving, aged, native-born" inhabitants in specified town, needing such aid, to be used as in his judgment he may think best, valid trust.

Construction of statutes as affecting state.

Cited in Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Sacramento County, 134 Cal. 480, 66 Pac. 668, holding state not bound by general words in Code upon subject of taxation.

44 L. R. A. 369, HEARD v. PHILLIPS, 101 Ga. 691, 31 S. E. 216.

Computation of time.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 221) on rule as to first and last days in computation of time.

Competency of witness to testify to transaction with deceased person.

Cited in Boynton v. Reese, 112 Ga. 358, 37 S. E. 437, holding grantee of deed sought to be canceled by heir at law of grantor not disqualified to testify to transactions and communications between deceased and witness.

Sale by administrator of land in adverse possession of another.

Cited in Lowe v. Bivins, 112 Ga. 342, 37 S. E. 374, and Hanesley v. Bagley, 109 Ga. 348, 34 S. E. 584, holding title not acquired by administrator's sale of land in possession of another holding adversely to him; Davitte v. Southern R. Co. 108 Ga. 668, 34 S. E. 327, holding that administrator must first obtain possession before he can sell property of his intestate held adversely.

44 L. R. A. 372, EXCHANGE BANK v. LOH, 104 Ga. 446, 31 S. E. 459.

Followed without comment in West v. Sanders, 104 Ga. 728, 31 S. E. 619.

Rights of creditors and representatives of insured to proceeds of policy.

Cited in Morris v. Dodd, 110 Ga. 611, 50 L. R. A. 43, 78 Am. St. Rep. 129, 36 S. E. 83, holding that insurance policy on life of bankrupt, not having cash surrender value, does not vest in trustee as assets; Morris v. Georgia Loan, Sav. & Bkg. Co. 109 Ga. 18, 46 L. R. A. 510, footnote p. 506, 34 S. E. 378, holding creditor taking assignment of policy entitled to retain from proceeds sufficient to pay debt and advances only; Strode v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. 101 Mo. App. 635, 74 S. W. 379, holding that creditor receiving proceeds of policy must account to estate of insured for amount above that necessary for his reimbursement.

Cited in footnotes to Fisher v. Donovan, 44 L. R. A. 383, which denies insured's right to impress with trust in creditors' favor proceeds of certificate payable to widow; Tate v. Commercial Bldg. Asso. 45 L. R. A. 243, which holds void, policy on life of member of loan association assigned to secure loan.

Nature of insurance contract.

Cited in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Pekor, 106 Ga. 10, 31 S. E. 779, upholding stipulation in policy requiring insured to carry insurance to extent of 75 per cent of value of property or be considered coinsurer to extent of deficiency.

Contract of assignment and indorsement.

Cited in Sanders Mfg. Co. v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 110 Ga. 563, 35 S. E. 777, holding fact that indorsement was made with secret intention merely to pass title cannot affect rights of indorsee with knowledge of such intent.

44 L. R. A. 383, FISHER v. DONOVAN, 57 Neb. 361, 77 N. W. 778.

Nature of interest of insured in benefit certificate.

Cited in Warner v. Modern Woodmen (Neb.) 61 L. R. A. 606, 93 N. W. 397, holding that estate of insured has no property interest in certificate of benefit association upon failure of beneficiaries.

Insurable interest.

Cited in footnotes to Exchange Bank v. Loh, 44 L. R. A. 372, which holds creditor's insurable interest limited to amount of indebtedness; Morris v. Georgia Loan, Sav. & Bkg. Co. 46 L. R. A. 506, which holds creditor taking assignment of policy entitled to retain from proceeds sufficient to pay debt and advances only; Sternberg v. Levy, 53 L. R. A. 438, which sustains right as against creditors, to procure with exempt wages insurance for sister and her children, constituting family.

Presumption as to law of sister state.

Cited in footnote to Aslanian v. Dostumian, 47 L. R. A. 495, which denies presumption that law merchant as to protest of draft prevails in Asiatic Turkey.

Parol promise to answer for debt or default of another.

Cited in footnote to Hartley v. Sandford, 55 L. R. A. 206, which holds void, father's oral promise to reimburse surety for son if latter fails to pay debt.

44 L. R. A. 387, BLOOMFIELD STATE BANK v. MILLER, 55 Neb. 243, 70 Am. St. Rep. 381, 75 N. W. 569.

Statute of frauds.

Cited in Kendall v. Garneau, 55 Neb. 408, 75 N. W. 852, holding grantee in deed bound by covenant to pay encumbrances not due for more than year from delivery of deed, although deed not subscribed by him.

44 L. R. A. 392, PUGH v. HIGHLEY, 152 Ind. 252, 71 Am. St. Rep. 327, 53 N. E. 171.

Prior equities as affecting purchaser at judicial sale.

Cited in Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Dodds, 155 Ind. 368, 58 N. E. 258, holding judgment creditor purchasing at sheriff's sale, on same footing as stranger as to unrecorded titles and secret claims; Dodds v. Winslow, 28 Ind. App. 656, 60 N. E. 458, holding purchaser at judicial sale, buying in good faith and without notice, protected against prior equities and unrecorded deeds; Blumenthal v. Tibbits, 160 Ind. 72, 66 N. E. 159, holding purchaser at sheriff's sale without notice not affected by prior equity.

Cited in footnote to Johnson v. Equitable Securities Co. 56 L. R. A. 933, which holds bona fide purchaser paying purchase money protected from unknown equities.

Subordination of judgment lien to inchoate right of dower.

Cited in Higgins v. Ormsby, 156 Ind. 86, 59 N. E. 321, denying lien of judgment against husband on land conveyed to wife in consideration of release of dower in other land.

Rights of purchaser without notice of unrecorded assignment of mortgage.

Cited in Artz v. Yeager, 30 Ind. App. 681, 66 N. E. 917, holding purchaser of real estate from assignee of mortgage of record takes same free from lien of unrecorded assignment of mortgage.

44 L. R. A. 397, HAMLIN v. SIMPSON, 105 Iowa, 125, 74 N. W. 906.

Prompt presentment of checks and drafts for collection.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. German Bank, 107 Iowa, 544, 44 L. R. A. 134, 70 Am. St. Rep. 216, 78 N. W. 195, denying liability of bank to which draft had been delivered for collection, for negligence of its cashier while acting in capacity of notary.

Cited in footnote to Edminsten v. Herpolsheimer, 59 L. R. A. 934, which requires check to be presented not later than day after receipt to hold drawer.

44 L. R. A. 400, GOWDY v. JOHNSON, 104 Ky. 648, 47 S. W. 624.

Effect of loss of family on homestead right.

Cited in footnote to Lyons v. Andry, 55 L. R. A. 724, which holds eighteen-year-old daughter working for father, dependent person within homestead law.

44 L. R. A. 405, ADDYSTON PIPE & STEEL CO. v. CHICAGO, 170 Ill. 580, 48 N. E. 967.

Subjection of moneys owing by municipality to payment of debts.

Cited in Chicago v. People, 98 Ill. App. 521, holding assignment by police officer of unearned salary to creditor, void; Geist v. St. Louis, 156 Mo. 649, 79 Am. St. Rep. 545, 57 S. W. 766, denying right of creditor to compel city to pay officer's salary in satisfaction of judgment, after return of execution unsatisfied; Clarksdale Compress Co. v. Caldwell Co. 80 Miss. 348, 31 So. 790, denying right of creditor to garnish municipality as debtor of nonresident creditor.

Cited in footnote to Portsmouth Gas Co. v. Sanford, 45 L. R. A. 246, which authorizes garnishment of city for money due nonresident contractor.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 574) on exemption of officer's salary from claims of his creditors.

Proceedings against executors for debt.

Cited in Williams v. Smith, 117 Wis. 146, 93 N. W. 464, holding that creditors' suits on supplementary proceedings cannot be maintained against executors of debtor's estate.

44 L. R. A. 407, SNYDER v. MT. PULASKI, 176 Ill. 397, 52 N. E. 62.

Control of municipality over its streets.

Cited in McGann v. People, 194 Ill. 539, 62 N. E. 941, denying right of common council to permit individual to lay railroad tracks in street without petition of property owners; Macon Consol. Street R. Co. v. Macon, 112 Ga. 787, 38 S. E. 60, denying right of city to contract so as to divest itself of discretionary power as to location of railway tracks in street; People ex rel. Kocourek v. Chicago, 193 Ill. 565, 62 N. E. 187 (dissenting opinion), majority refusing to take original jurisdiction of suit for writ of mandamus to compel city to remove bridge over an alley connecting mercantile buildings; Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 254, 91 N. W. 1081, holding no rights in streets acquired by grant of franchise by city which it was without power to grant; Ashland v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 Wis. 219, 96 N. W. 688 (dissenting opinion), majority holding city not estopped from claiming streets not vacated after passage of ordinance not complying with statutory requirements, vacating same; Winnetka v. Chicago & M. Electric R. Co. 107 Ill. App. 125, restraining village from interfering with railroad trestlework constructed in part of highway, under void ordinance but with consent of municipality; People ex rel. Faulkner v. Harris, 203 Ill. 282, 96 Am. St. Rep. 304, 67 N. E. 785, denying power of city to authorize bay window extending 18 inches into street.

44 L. R. A. 410, CHICAGO & E. I. R. CO. v. ROUSE, 178 Ill. 132, 52 N. E. 951.

Conflict of laws relating to liability for negligence.

Cited in footnotes to Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Becker, 46 L. R. A. 814, which holds servant's assumption of risks from fellow servant's negligence governed by laws of state where injury occurs; Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 640, which holds statute of state where railroad employee injured, as to presumptive evidence of employer's knowledge of defect in appliance, not govern in action in another state; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Read, 56 L. R. A. 468, which denies right to recover in another state for injury from fellow servant's negligence in state where no remedy given.

Cited in note (56 L. R. A. 196, 204, 220) on conflict of laws as to action for death or bodily injury.

44 L. R. A. 413, CLARK v. RENNINGER, 89 Md. 66, 42 Atl. 928.

44 L. R. A. 415, RUDELL v. OGDENSBURG TRANSIT CO. 117 Mich. 568, 76 N. W. 380.

Contracts of shipment between shipper and agent of carrier.

Cited in Stoner v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 554, 80 N. W. 569, holding railroad company bound by contract of agent within apparent scope of authority, for delivery of car at specified place within specified time.

L. R. A. AU.—VOL. IV.—61.

Cited in footnote to Seasongood v. Tennessee & O. River Transp. Co. 49 L. R. A. 270, which holds carrier bound by act of person permitted to act as its agent.

44 L. R. A. 417, STEINBACK v. DIEPENBROCK, 158 N. Y. 24, 70 Am. St. Rep. 424, 52 N. E. 662.

Assignment of life insurance policies.

Cited in Morschauser v. Pierce, 64 App. Div. 559, 72 N. Y. Supp. 328, holding that policy of life insurance assigned by husband to wife passes, on latter's death intestate, to her administrator; Dannhauser v. Wallenstein, 28 Misc. 693, 60 N. Y. Supp. 50, upholding validity of assignment of policy by wife, although without written consent of husband, where latter induced her to assign it for his own benefit; McDonough v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 38 Misc. 628, 78 N. Y. Supp. 217, upholding right of insured to assign life policy to one having no insurable interest; Maynard v. Life Ins. Co. 132 N. C. 714, 44 S. E. 405, denying right of intervener claiming proceeds of policy as against assignee thereof, to assail validity of policy.

Cited in footnotes to Chamberlain v. Butler, 54 L. R. A. 338, which sustains right to assign policy on own life to one without insurable interest; McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 56 L. R. A. 233, which sustains right to provide that assigned policy shall be void as to all above debt due assignee; Steele v. Gatlin, 59 L. R. A. 129, which holds complete gift not made by verbal assignment of life policy, accompanied with words indicating intent to give, and delivery of policy; Opitz v. Karel, 62 L. R. A. 982, which sustains right of one taking policy on his own life to make valid gift of proceeds by mere delivery of policy; American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bertram, 64 L. R. A. 935, which sustains right of assignee, without knowledge of facts, of policy void because taken out without consent of insured by one having no insurable interest, to recover from company premiums paid by him.

Insurable interest.

Cited in Mechanics Nat. Bank v. Comins, 72 N. H. 17, 101 Am. St. Rep. 650, 55 Atl. 191, holding that one furnishing money to carry on business of corporation has insurable interest in life of its manager.

44 L. R. A. 420, PEOPLE ex rel. PUBLIC CHARITIES & C. COMRS. v. CULLEN, 153 N. Y. 629, 47 N. E. 894.

Jurisdiction of court of appeals.

Cited in People v. Malone, 169 N. Y. 570, 62 N. E. 665, holding reversal by appellate division of conviction under Pen. Code, § 292, not appealable; People v. Helmer, 154 N. Y. 616, 49 N. E. 249 (dissenting opinion), majority holding questions of fact or sufficiency of evidence not reviewable by court of appeals on appeal from conviction for exhibiting false books to bank examiner.

Penal prosecution for abandonment.

Cited in People ex rel. Feeney v. Dershem, 78 App. Div. 626, 79 N. Y. Supp. 612, holding offer in good faith of home and maintenance, good defense to penal proceeding against husband for abandonment; People v. Crouse, 86 App. Div. 354, 83 N. Y. Supp. 812, holding refusal of husband in New York to support wife after separation in another state not desertion in New York.

Provisions by court for maintenance and expense of wife on separation or divorce.

Cited in Hauscheld v. Hauscheld, 33 App. Div. 299, 53 N. Y. Supp. 831, upholding order of court granting alimony where judgment for absolute divorce ten years before, reserved question for future consideration of court; Livingston v. Livingston, 74 App. Div. 264, 77 N. Y. Supp. 476, holding judgment of divorce providing for alimony, court not reserving power to modify its provisions, fixed obligation of husband not changeable by court or legislature; Cullen v. Cullen, 23 Misc. 81, 50 N. Y. Supp. 433, granting alimony upon application of wife under right reserved in decree of separation; Naumer v. Gray, 28 App. Div. 534, 51 N. Y. Supp. 222, holding action maintainable for legal services against husband by attorney for wife suing for separation because of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Protection of courts against legislative changes.

Cited in footnote to Love v. Liddle, 62 L. R. A. 482, which denies power to regulate jurisdiction of justices of peace by classification of cities in which they reside.

44 L. R. A. 424, PRETZFELDER v. MERCHANTS INS. CO. 123 N. C. 164, 31 S. E. 470.

Submission of issues to jury.

Cited in Vanderbilt v. Brown, 128 N. C. 499, 39 S. E. 36, and Kendrick v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 124 N. C. 321, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592, 32 S. E. 728, upholding refusal to submit other issues where, under issue submitted by court, every phase of defendant's contention was presented without prejudice; Bradley v. Ohio River & C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 739, 36 S. E. 181, holding that when issues submitted arise on pleadings, and every phase of contentions of parties can be presented thereunder, they are not subject to review; Hatcher v. Dabbs, 133 N. C. 241, 45 S. E. 562, holding submission of issue "what damages, if any," plaintiff entitled to recover, in action for services rendered decedent, erroneous; Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 893, 44 S. E. 652, holding issue submitted whether purchase money furnished equally by husband and wife, sufficient, in ejectment by husband and wife for land sold under execution against husband.

Rule as to reconsideration of issues determined on appeal.

Cited in Hendon v. North Carolina R. Co. 127 N. C. 112, 37 S. E. 155, denying right of defendant on second appeal to attack act decided to be valid on first appeal; Kramer v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 270, 38 S. E. 872, and Wright v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 79, 38 S. E. 283, denying right on second appeal to review point decided on first appeal; Setzer v. Setzer, 129 N. C. 207, 40 S. E. 62, and Jones v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 131 N. C. 135, 42 S. E. 559, holding that questions adjudicated on appeal cannot be readjudicated except on rehearing; Perry v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 129 N. C. 334, 40 S. E. 191, and Carter v. White, 134 N. C. 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 853, 46 S. E. 983, holding questions decided on appeal cannot be again heard under form of a second appeal.

Records not complying with rules.

Cited in Sigman v. Southern R. Co. 135 N. C. 182, 47 S. E. 420, holding that appeal will be dismissed where record without index or marginal references.

44 L. R. A. 427, THRIFT v. ELIZABETH CITY, 122 N. C. 31, 30 S. E. 349.

Municipal water supply.

Cited in Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 118 Iowa, 241, 91 N. W. 1081, holding grant of franchise beyond statutory period void for period in excess of time allowed by statute.

Cited in footnotes to Skaneateles Waterworks Co. v. Skaneateles, 46 L. R. A. 687, which denies power of village establishing own waterworks as against existing water company to impose rates for fire protection on property where village works not used; Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 63 L. R. A. 870, which sustains municipality's power to incur expense of owning and operating water and electric light plants without submitting proposition to voters; Westminster Water Co. v. Westminster, 64 L. R. A. 630, which denies city's power to contract to pay water company specified percentage of assessed valuation in perpetuity for water supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 34, 81) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

Mandatory provisions of Constitution.

Cited in Rodman-Heath Cotton Mills v. Waxhaw, 130 N. C. 294, 41 S. E. 488, holding power of taxation not authorized by portion of charter not passed in compliance with constitutional requirement as to reading and recording of yeas and nays.

Necessary expenses of municipality.

Cited in Wadsworth v. Concord, 133 N. C. 592, 45 S. E. 948, raising, but not deciding, question whether providing lights for city is necessary expense.

44 L. R. A. 430, BOND v. MARTIN, 33 Or. 551, 54 Pac. 158.

44 L. R. A. 432, KRAMER v. KISTER, 187 Pa. 227, 42 W. N. C. 392, 40 Atl. 1008.

Acts affecting validity of verdicts in criminal causes.

Cited in Hechter v. State, 94 Md. 444, 56 L. R. A. 461, footnote p. 457, 50 Atl. 1041, holding sealed verdict of guilty on some counts of indictment not invalidated by adding not guilty as to others, before recording.

Distinguished in Com. v. Price, 10 Kulp, 42, holding right to new trial waived by defendant not objecting to resubmission to jury after one juror had disagreed upon coming into court after jury had separated.

44 L. R. A. 435, KELLEY v. SCHUYLER, 20 R. I. 29, 78 Am. St. Rep. 887, 39 Atl. 893.

Invasion of dwelling house.

Cited in Gusdorff v. Duncan, 94 Md. 169, 50 Atl. 574, holding officer not authorized by writ of replevin to enter house of stranger against his will, where goods covered by writ are not located there; Hillman v. Edwards, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 309, 66 S. W. 788, holding levy on piano in dwelling house entered by officer climbing through window, void.

44 L. R. A. 438, WESTERN TWINE CO. v. WRIGHT, 11 S. D. 521, 78 N. W. 942.

Proof of contents of telegram.

Distinguished in Distad v. Shanklin, 15 S. D. 512, 90 N. W. 151, holding copy of telegram admissible where copy had been received without objection on former trial and letter to plaintiff acknowledged a telegram reading same as copy.

Evidence as to quality of binding twine.

Cited in Standard Rope & Twine Co. v. Olmen, 13 S. D. 301, 83 N. W. 271, holding evidence that quality of binding twine rendered it susceptible to action of crickets, which destroyed it after grain was bound, admissible on behalf of defendant in action for price of twine.

44 L. R. A. 442, CONNECTICUT MUT. L. INS. CO. v. SPRATLEY, 99 Tenn. 322, 42 S. W. 145.

Affirmed in 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308.

Due service of process.

Cited in Guthrie v. Connecticut Indemnity Asso. 101 Tenn. 651, 49 S. W. 829, holding jurisdiction of foreign corporation after withdrawal from business in state not acquired by service of process on former local agent.

Cited in footnotes to Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Boyer, 50 L. R. A. 538, which denies right to serve process on state officer designated by foreign insurance company which has ceased to do business in state; Abbeville Electric Light & P. Co. v. Western Electrical Supply Co. 55 L. R. A. 146, which authorizes service on traveling salesman of foreign corporation sent to investigate controversy out of which cause of action arose; Buie v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 861, which authorizes service of railroad company by serving in other state, officers of company organized to construct extension of system.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 590, 594) on what service of process is sufficient to constitute due process of law.

What constitutes doing business within state by foreign corporation.

Distinguished in State v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 106 Tenn. 288, 61 S. W. 75, holding receipt of premiums by foreign insurance company which has ceased to solicit new insurance and has withdrawn agents, not "doing business" within state so as to render it liable to payment of privilege tax.

44 L. R. A. 446, STATE ex rel. GOODELL v. McGEARY, 69 Vt. 461, 38 Atl. 165.

44 L. R. A. 449, CHESAPEAKE & O. R. CO. v. AMERICAN EXCH. BANK, 92 Va. 495, 23 S. E. 935.

Pleadings.

Cited in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rison, 99 Va. 28, 37 S. E. 320, holding that special replication should be rejected after filing of general replication not withdrawn.

Transportation of live stock and caretakers.

Cited in Brockway v. American Exp. Co. 168 Mass. 259, 47 N. E. 87, holding express company liable for negligence in keeping horses in car without food and drink for forty-nine hours; Burns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Wis.

655, 80 N. W. 927, holding failure to perform statutory duty of unloading, feeding, and watering stock actionable negligence.

Cited in footnotes to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Harris, 48 L. R. A. 175, which holds carrier liable for communication of Texas fever by infected cars to cattle transported; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Campbell, 48 L. R. A. 251, which holds void, statute for free transportation of shippers of stock; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Williams, 55 L. R. A. 289, which holds carrier liable for failure to properly provide for live stock knowingly taken without caretaker.

Cited in notes (44 L. R. A. 295) on duties of carriers of live stock as to pens or yards at station; (48 L. R. A. 34) on administration of Federal laws in state courts, as to transportation of live stock.

44 L. R. A. 459, PACE v. PACE, 95 Va. 792, 30 S. E. 361.

Contribution between co-obligors.

Cited in Sands v. Durham, 99 Va. 269, 54 L. R. A. 624, 86 Am. St. Rep. 884, 38 S. E. 145, holding partner, upon payment of firm debts after dissolution of partnership out of his individual means, entitled to subrogation to creditor's rights as against remaining partners.

44 L. R. A. 464, FARRELLY v. COLE, 60 Kan. 356, 56 Pac. 492.

Constitutional law.

Cited in People ex rel. State Harbor v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 222, 64 Pac. 299, holding act providing for establishment of board of state harbor commissioners for bay of San Diego not abuse of discretion as to enactment of local and special law.

44 L. R. A. 474, CLAYTON v. HENDERSON, 103 Ky. 228, 44 S. W. 667.

Report of second appeal in 22 Ky. L. Rep. 283, 53 L. R. A. 146, 57 S. W. 1.

Liability for acts of municipal officials done to prevent spread of disease.

Cited in footnotes to Frazer v. Chicago, 51 L. R. A. 306, which holds establishment of smallpox hospital not taking or damaging of adjoining property; Nicholson v. Detroit, 56 L. R. A. 601, which denies city's liability for death of unwarned employee from smallpox contracted in tearing down smallpox hospital; Henderson v. O'Halaran, 59 L. R. A. 718, which holds city liable for contraction of smallpox by guest from inmate of house contracting disease from unlawful location of pesthouse near.

Distinguished in Twyman v. Frankfort (Ky.) 64 L. R. A. 573, 78 S. W. 446, holding municipal corporation not liable for death caused by removal of smallpox patient to overcrowded pesthouse; Arnold v. Stanford, 113 Ky. 855, 69 S. W. 726, holding city of fifth class not liable for injury to property by erection of pesthouse within city limits.

Disapproved in White v. San Antonio, 94 Tex. 316, 60 S. W. 426, holding city not liable for acts of its officers in taking possession of plaintiff's hotel and detaining guests suspected of having been exposed to infection from yellow fever.

Liability of sureties for wrongful acts of municipal officials.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. McLauren v. McDaniel, 50 L. R. A. 118, which holds sureties on mayor's bond liable for his causing arrest without warrant, and trying and sentencing for offense not punishable by city ordinance.

Joinder of parties.

Cited in footnote to Howe v. Northern P. R. Co. 60 L. R. A. 950, which authorizes joinder of master and negligent servant in action for injuries to other servant.

44 L. R. A. 477, HOGGARD v. MONROE, 51 La. Ann. 683, 25 So. 349.

44 L. R. A. 479, TAYLOR v. CARROLL, 89 Md. 32, 42 Atl. 920.

Laches in prosecution of claim.

Cited in Hadaway v. Hynson, 89 Md. 314, 43 Atl. 806, holding delay of fifteen years in asserting claim on behalf of estate against trustee, followed by abandonment of claim until after trustee's death, fatal to recovery.

Cited in footnote to Robinson v. Bierce, 47 L. R. A. 275, which holds lien for taxes defeated by eight years' unexplained delay in prosecuting suits for same.

44 L. R. A. 482, BONAPARTE v. WISEMAN, 89 Md. 12, 42 Atl. 918.

Liability of landlord or owner for defects in buildings or premises.

Cited in Hearn v. Quillen, 94 Md. 44, 50 Atl. 402, holding defendant owners cannot escape liability for injury caused by fall of roof on ground that they employed experienced and competent carpenter to erect it; Davis v. Summerfield, 133 N. C. 330, 63 L. R. A. 496, footnote p. 493, 45 S. E. 654, holding lot owner liable for injury to adjoining owner through negligent excavation of such depth that injury might reasonably be anticipated, though work was done by independent contractor.

Cited in footnote to Pittsfield Cottonwear Mfg. Co. v. Pittsfield Shoe Co. 60 L. R. A. 116, which holds landlord liable to tenants of lower floor for injury from freezing of automatic fire extinguisher in portion retained by former, though building heated by independent contractor.

— For acts of independent contractors.

Cited in footnotes to Boomer v. Wilbur, 53 L. R. A. 172, which denies owner's liability for injury by fall of bricks through negligence of independent contractor repairing chimney; Peerless Mfg. Co. v. Bagley, 53 L. R. A. 285, which holds landlord liable for independent contractor's negligence in putting in automatic fire extinguisher; Hoff v. Shockley, 64 L. R. A. 538, which holds property owner not liable for injuries to traveler by obstructions placed in street, without danger signals, by independent contractor for construction of building.

44 L. R. A. 485, McCREA v. ROBERTS, 89 Md. 238, 43 Atl. 39.

Mandamus to compel issuance of liquor license.

Cited in McCrea v. Billingslea, 89 Md. 767, 43 Atl. 42, upholding dismissal of petition for mandamus to compel clerk of circuit court of county to issue liquor license.

Limitation of judicial powers to judicial functions.

Cited in Beasley v. Ridout, 94 Md. 659, 52 Atl. 61, holding provisions of act requiring visitors of county jail to be appointed by judges, unconstitutional;

Cited in footnotes to Fenton v. Fidelity & C. Co. 48 L. R. A. 770, which holds indemnity against liability for injuries to employees assignable, though employer insolvent; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 59 L. R. A. 444, which denies right of injured employee to enforce employer's liability insurance against insurer after employer's insolvency; Morgan v. Randolph-Clowes Co. 51 L. R. A. 653, which denies right of firm creditor to sue corporation assuming firm debts; Ferris v. American Brewing Co. 52 L. R. A. 305, which sustains right of action of one for whose benefit stipulation in lease was made, against sale on premises of other person's beer; Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 53 L. R. A. 609, which denies right of action of one furnishing materials to contractor to sue on bond by latter to city, conditioned on turning over building free of claims for materials; Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 796, which denies right of action against railroad company carrying mail under contract with government, by sender of registered mail destroyed through negligence of its employees; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 61 L. R. A. 509, which sustains right of third person to enforce contract made for his benefit.

Distinguished in Traver v. Snyder, 35 Misc. 266, 71 N. Y. Supp. 761, Affirming 34 Misc. 407, 69 N. Y. Supp. 750, holding grantees under receiver's sale, stipulating to pay expense of accounting and discharge of receiver, liable in action by receiver's attorney for compensation allowed by court.

44 L. R. A. 515, MITCHELL v. CAROLINA C. R. CO. 124 N. C. 236, 32 S. E. 671. Contracts to limit liability.

Cited in Gardner v. Southern R. Co. 127 N. C. 296, 37 S. E. 328, denying right of carrier to exempt itself by contract from liability for loss due to its negligence; Gwyn-Harper Mfg. Co. v. Carolina C. R. Co. 128 N. C. 283, 83 Am. St. Rep. 675, 38 S. E. 894, holding stipulation in bill of lading requiring notice in writing of loss to carrier within thirty days after time for delivery, unreasonable; Bank of Tarboro v. Fidelity & D. Co. 128 N. C. 373, 83 Am. St. Rep. 682, 38 S. E. 908, holding that cashier's bond of fidelity and guaranty insurance company should be construed most strongly against company; Parker v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 133 N. C. 341, 63 L. R. A. 830, 45 S. E. 658, holding liability of carrier for negligence not limited by indorsing words "subject to delay" on bill of lading.

Burden of proof and circumstantial evidence.

Cited in Hinkle v. Southern R. Co. 126 N. C. 937, 78 Am. St. Rep. 685, 36 S. E. 348, holding burden upon carrier to prove facts exempting it from liability for injury to live stock under contract limiting liability; Gwyn-Harper Mfg. Co. v. Carolina C. R. Co. 128 N. C. 284, 83 Am. St. Rep. 675, 38 S. E. 894, holding burden upon carrier in whose hands damaged goods are found, to rebut presumption that damage was caused by it; Williams v. Southern R. Co. 130 N. C. 124, 40 S. E. 979, dissenting opinion by Douglas, J., who holds negligence of railway in maintenance of spark arrester provable by circumstantial evidence; Parker v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 133 N. C. 339, 63 L. R. A. 829, 45 S. E. 658, holding burden of proving due diligence in carrying and delivering melons, upon carrier; Raleigh Hosiery Co. v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 131 N. C. 240, 42 S. E. 602, holding burden upon carrier to rebut presumption of negligence where fire shown to have been caused by sparks from locomotive.

Cited in footnote to Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 884, which holds carrier has burden of proving that delivery of goods in wet condition was not due to its negligence.

Submission of issues.

Cited in Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 893, 44 S. E. 652, holding issue submitted whether purchase money furnished equally by husband and wife, sufficient in ejectment by husband and wife for land sold under execution against husband.

44 L. R. A. 520, BALTIMORE & O. R. CO. v. FULTON, 59 Ohio St. 575, 53 N. E. 265.

Followed without comment in Thomas v. W. J. Gawne Co. 69 Ohio St. 562, 70 N. E. 1133.

Jurisdiction of state courts after removal of causes to Federal courts.

Cited in Hickman v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 97 Fed. 120, holding that in removable cause, after certified copy of record of state court refusing removal is filed, all proceedings in state court are void.

Cited in footnote to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Benz, 58 L. R. A. 691, which holds decision on reversal and remanding of action for personal injuries, removed to Federal court, not law of case if action dismissed and new one begun.

Distinguished in Foley v. Cudaly Packing Co. 119 Iowa, 250, 93 N. W. 284, and Adams Exp. Co. v. Schofield, 111 Ky. 837, 64 S. W. 903, holding dismissal, without prejudice, of cause removed to state court not bar to maintenance of new suit in state court on same cause of action.

Disapproved in McIver v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 110 Ga. 228, 65 L. R. A. 440, 36 S. E. 775; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Reese, 93 Ill. App. 663; Krueger v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 84 Mo. App. 362; Fleming v. Southern R. Co. 128 N. C. 81, 38 S. E. 253; Hooper v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 106 Tenn. 31, 53 L. R. A. 932, footnote p. 931, 60 S. W. 607; Gassman v. Jarvis, 100 Fed. 146; Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Starnes, 128 Fed. 184,—holding that dismissal, without determination on merits, of suit removed from state to Federal court, does not bar state court from entertaining new suit on same cause of action; Swift & Co. v. Hoblawetz, 10 Kan. App. 53, 61 Pac. 969, and Rodman v. Missouri P. R. Co. 65 Kan. 648, 59 L. R. A. 705, footnote p. 704, 70 Pac. 642, sustaining right to bring action in state court after dismissal without prejudice of action removed to Federal court.

44 L. R. A. 522, BLAGEN v. SMITH, 34 Or. 394, 56 Pac. 202.

Right of private individual to enjoin public nuisance or crime.

Cited in footnotes to Weakley v. Page, 46 L. R. A. 552, which sustains right of person specially injured to have house of ill fame abated as nuisance; Griffith v. Holman, 54 L. R. A. 178, which denies private individual's right to abate public nuisance consisting of fence across navigable stream.

Distinguished in People ex rel. L'Abbe v. District Court, 26 Colo. 393, 46 L. R. A. 853, 58 Pac. 604, denying right of citizen to injunction to stop public gambling not alleged especially to injure complainant's property.

44 L. R. A. 527, PORTLAND v. PORTLAND BITUMINOUS PAVING & IMPROV. CO. 33 Or. 307, 72 Am. St. Rep. 713, 52 Pac. 28.

Provisions in contracts for street paving relating to repairs.

Cited in Alameda Macadamizing Co. v. Pringle, 130 Cal. 229, 52 L. R. A. 265, footnote p. 264, 80 Am. St. Rep. 124, 62 Pac. 394, holding street improvement contract invalidated by guaranty for year; Kansas City v. Hanson, 8 Kan. App. 293, 55 Pac. 513, holding assessment invalidated by provision in contract for street improvement, requiring contractor to keep pavement in repair for five years; Young v. Tacoma, 31 Wash. 160, 71 Pac. 742, holding it question for jury whether provision in contract for repairs for five years, was guaranty against defective work or not.

Cited in footnotes to Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 48 L. R. A. 279, which holds agreement to maintain new pavement for series of years not contract for repairs necessitating letting to lowest bidder; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. French, 54 L. R. A. 492, which sustains requirement of five years' guaranty of street paving; Blochman v. Spreckels, 57 L. R. A. 213, which denies power to assess cost of street improvement on abutters where contractor required to sustain all loss from nature of work.

Distinguished in Allen v. Portland, 35 Or. 447, 58 Pac. 509, upholding validity of provision in paving contract requiring contractor to repair defects for stated period at his own expense; State ex rel. Wheeler v. District Court, 80 Minn. 308, 83 N. W. 183, upholding validity of guaranty by contractor of pavement for period of ten years; Shank v. Smith, 157 Ind. 409, 55 L. R. A. 568, footnote p. 564, 61 N. E. 932, sustaining provision in street paving contract for keeping in good condition for term of years; People ex rel. North v. Featherstonhaugh, 172 N. Y. 121, 60 L. R. A. 771, footnote p. 768, 64 N. E. 802, sustaining provision requiring street paving contractor to maintain work during period which it ought to wear.

Estoppel of municipality.

Cited in Municipal Security Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 353, 54 Pac. 174, holding county receiving benefits not precluded from asserting invalidity of warrants for obligations in excess of constitutional limit.

44 L. R. A. 534, ROBERTSON v. OMAHA, 55 Neb. 718, 76 N. W. 442.

Contracts for repairs as guaranty of quality of street pavement.

Cited in Kansas City v. Hanson, 60 Kan. 837, 58 Pac. 474; State ex rel. Wheeler v. District Court, 80 Minn. 309, 83 N. W. 183; O'Keefe v. New York, 73 App. Div. 315, 76 N. Y. Supp. 796; Shank v. Smith, 157 Ind. 409, 55 L. R. A. 568, footnote p. 564, 61 N. E. 932; Williamsport v. Hughes, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 454,—sustaining validity of provision in street paving contract for keeping in good condition for term of years.

Cited in footnotes to Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 48 L. R. A. 279, which holds agreement to maintain new pavement for series of years not contract for repairs, necessitating letting to lowest bidder; Alameda Macadamizing Co. v. Pringle, 52 L. R. A. 264, which holds street improvement contract invalidated by guaranty for year; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. French, 54 L. R. A. 492, which sustains requirement of five years' guaranty of street paving; People ex rel. North v. Featherstonhaugh, 60 L. R. A. 768, which sustains provision requiring street paving contractor to maintain work during period which it ought to wear; Blochman v. Spreckels, 57 L. R. A. 213, which denies power to assess cost of street improvement on abutters, where contractor required to sustain all loss from nature of work.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 534) on power of city to bind contractor to repair pavement which he makes.

44 L. R. A. 540, STATE ex rel. WILSON v. TRENTON, 61 N. J. L. 599, 68 Am. St. Rep. 714, 40 Atl. 575.

Stipulations for repair in street paving contracts.

Cited in Borton v. Camden, 65 N. J. L. 516, 47 Atl. 436, holding delay in application for certiorari to review municipal ordinance and contract for paving until after performance, fatal to claim that contract was illegal because of guaranty to repair for ten years; O'Keefe v. New York, 73 App. Div. 315, 76 N. Y. Supp. 796, upholding validity of stipulation in contract requiring contractor to keep pavement in repair for fifteen years; Shank v. Smith, 157 Ind. 409, 55 L. R. A. 568, footnote p. 564, 61 N. E. 932, and Williamsport v. Hughes, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 456, sustaining provision in street paving contract for keeping in good condition for term of years; People ex rel. North v. Featherstonhaugh, 172 N. Y. 121, 60 L. R. A. 771, footnote p. 768, 64 N. E. 802, sustaining provision requiring street paving contractor to maintain work during period which it ought to wear.

Cited in footnotes to Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 48 L. R. A. 279, which holds agreement to maintain new pavement for series of years not contract for repairs, necessitating letting to lowest bidder; Alameda Macadamizing Co. v. Pringle, 52 L. R. A. 264, which holds street improvement contract invalidated by guaranty for year; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. French, 54 L. R. A. 492, which sustains requirement of five years' guaranty of street paving; Blochman v. Spreckels, 57 L. R. A. 213, which denies power to assess cost of street improvement on abutters where contractor required to sustain all loss from nature of work.

44 L. R. A. 542, WILSON v. ANDERSON, 186 Pa. 531, 40 Atl. 1096.

Deeds of trust.

Cited in Rynd v. Baker, 193 Pa. 491, 44 Atl. 551, holding title of beneficiaries under deed of trust by appointment exercised by grantor in pursuance of its terms not defeated by subsequent deed by grantor without formal revocation of deed of trust; Kraft v. Neuffer, 202 Pa. 563, 52 Atl. 100, holding voluntary deed of trust reserving life use of property to settler and wife during joint lives, containing no power of revocation, irrevocable; Potter v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 199 Pa. 365, 49 Atl. 85, holding voluntary active trust irrevocable, terms of deed expressly declaring it to be so; Fidelity Trust Co. v. New York Finance Co. 60 C. C. A. 192, 125 Fed. 278, denying right of creditor of settlor of trust, to reach the trust property, where debt arises after creation of trust.

Cited in footnotes to Neisler v. Pearsall, 52 L. R. A. 874, which holds settlement of property in trust stated to be irrevocable, not revocable without interposition of duly constituted tribunal; Murphy v. Delano, 55 L. R. A. 727, which holds income of spendthrift trust not within reach of creditors by void agreement of trustees to pay certain portion of income absolutely to beneficiary;

Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 57 L. R. A. 384, which denies power to create equitable life estate free from debts of beneficiary.

Intention of grantor.

Cited in Zeok v. Mercantile Trust Co. 194 Pa. 391, 45 Atl. 215, refusing to set aside deed executed by wife to husband on latter's deathbed, in pursuance of family settlement perfectly understood and acquiesced in by each; Carney v. Carney, 196 Pa. 37, 46 Atl. 264, refusing to set aside deed from father to son, where evidence failed to show former's mental unsoundness, or that undue influence had been used, and it appeared that grantee had supported grantor for thirteen years.

What constitutes a deed.

Cited in Nixon v. Frick Coke Co. 27 Pa. Co. Ct. 151, holding instrument conveying land to grantee, reserving portion of house to grantor, and subject to payment of $10,000 on grantor's death, a deed.

44 L. R. A. 546, KEATOR v. SCRANTON TRACTION CO. 191 Pa. 102, 44 W. N. C. 128, 71 Am. St. Rep. 758, 43 Atl. 86.

Presumption of negligence from happening of accident.

Cited in footnote to Springer v. Ford, 52 L. R. A. 930, which sustains presumption of negligence from injury to passenger by unexplained breaking of elevator appliance.

When person becomes a passenger.

Cited in footnotes to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Laloge, 62 L. R. A. 405, which holds intending passenger resorting to station unreasonable time before train's departure not entitled to protection as a passenger from assaults of strangers; Cassady v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 285, which holds ordinary burning out of fuse in electric car not prima facie evidence of carrier's negligence.

Degree of care required of railroad company toward passenger.

Cited in Austrian v. Union Traction Co. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 332, holding street car company liable for injury to person boarding car, by negligent starting thereof.

44 L. R. A. 548, WISE v. MORGAN, 101 Tenn. 273, 48 S. W. 971.

Negligence in sale or manufacture of dangerous articles.

Cited in footnotes to West v. Emanuel, 53 L. R. A. 329, which denies druggist's negligence in selling patent medicine without analyzing contents; Burgess v. Sims Drug Co. 54 L. R. A. 364, which holds druggist liable for injury by prescription negligently put up by registered pharmacist employed by him; Ives v. Welden, 54 L. R. A. 854, which holds merchant's failure to label gasoline renders him liable for injury to member of purchaser's family by explosion; Gibson v. Torbert, 56 L. R. A. 98, which denies liability of druggist for failure to instruct person of age of discretion as to safe method of handling phosphorus; Smith v. Middleton, 56 L. R. A. 484, which holds druggist liable for punitive damages for filling order for calomel tablets with morphine, without notice of fact; Peters v. Jackson, 57 L. R. A. 428, which holds one mistakenly selling poisonous drug for harmless medicine liable to third person taking it; Huset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L. R. A. 303, which holds manufacturer supplying dangerous machine to another without notice of dangerous character, liable for injury to vendee's employee; Skinn v. Reutter, 63 L. R. A. 743, which holds one selling hogs known to have dangerous and infectious disease liable for injury to life or property caused thereby.

Liability for negligence without privity of contract.

Cited in footnote to Pittsfield Cottonwear Mfg. Co. v. Pittsfield Shoe Co. 60 L. R. A. 117, which holds one contracting with owner to heat portion of building retained, liable to tenants of lower floor for injury by freezing and bursting of water pipes designed for their protection from fire.

44 L. R. A. 553, GALVESTON, H. & S. A. R. CO. v. ZANTZINGER, 92 Tex. 385, 71 Am. St. Rep. 859, 48 S. W. 563.

Liability for injury to trespassers.

Cited in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Black, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 124, 57 S. W. 330, holding that collusion between brakeman and person riding on freight car, by which latter pays brakeman for privilege, will not relieve carrier from liability for wilful act of brakeman knocking such person from train; Southern P. Co. v. Bender, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 135, 57 S. W. 574, sustaining judgment for trespasser struck on head with pistol by conductor and knocked off car.

Proximate cause.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 90) on rule of proximate cause in case of malicious torts.

Care required of injured person to lessen damages.

Cited in Arkansas River Packet Co. v. Hobbs, 105 Tenn. 45, 58 S. W. 278, upholding instruction that if plaintiff, acting on his own judgment, treated injured knee in such manner as physician of ordinary care and skill would have done, law would accept such action as full discharge of duty.

44 L. R. A. 557, SMITH v. NORTH AMERICAN TRANSP. & TRADING CO. 20 Wash. 580, 56 Pac. 372.

Followed without comment in Wheeler v. North American Transp. & Trading Co. 21 Wash. 704, 57 Pac. 1103.

When nonperformance of contract excused by impossibility.

Cited in Bullock v. White Star S. S. Co. 30 Wash. 454, 70 Pac. 1106, holding transportation company engaging to take passengers by water to specified port not excused from performance by fact harbor is icebound.

Cited in footnotes to Angus v. Scully, 49 L. R. A. 562, which sustains right to recover under contract to move building destroyed by fire before work completed; Ontario Deciduous Fruit Growers' Asso. v. Cutting Fruit Packing Co. 53 L. R. A. 681, which denies liability for failure to deliver specified quantity of fruit contracted for, from failure of crop due to unusual climatic conditions; Hughson v. Winthrop S. B. Co. 58 L. R. A. 432, which denies liability to passenger left behind by steamer, already full, leaving before advertised time.

44 L. R. A. 559, PHILADELPHIA MORTG. & T. CO. v. MILLER, 20 Wash. 607, 72 Am. St. Rep. 138, 56 Pac. 382.

What constitute fixtures.

Cited in Hall v. Law Guarantee & Trust Soc. 22 Wash. 307, 79 Am. St. Rep.

935, 60 Pac. 643, holding curtains, window screens, screen doors, gas and electric fixtures, water tank, sideboard, windmill, etc., not fixtures as between mortgagor and mortgagee; Neufelder v. Third Street & Suburban R. Co. 23 Wash. 476, 53 L. R. A. 603, 83 Am. St. Rep. 831, 63 Pac. 197, holding mill machinery attached by log screws to steady it, removable without injury to real estate, not part of real estate as between mortgagor and mortgagee; Albersen v. Elk Creek Min. Co. 39 Or. 559, 65 Pac. 978, holding personal property annexed to mine not intended to become part of real estate, personalty; Hayford v. Wentworth, 97 Me. 351, 54 Atl. 940, holding "wash-down syphon water closet," put in by tenant, removable; West v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 117 Iowa, 150, 90 N. W. 523, holding furnace and hot-water boiler in house, part of realty.

Cited in footnote to Murray v. Bender, 63 L. R. A. 783, which holds that chairs, stage, stage fixtures, and drop curtain annexed to theatre by owner of majority of stock of corporation having title to building, without agreement that they shall remain his personal property, pass as fixtures on execution sale of building.

44 L. R. A. 561, LAMBERT v. NICKLAS, 45 W. Va. 527, 72 Am. St. Rep. 828, 31 S. E. 951.

Innkeeper's lien.

Cited in footnote to McClain v. Williams, 49 L. R. A. 610, which denies innkeeper's lien on third person's property brought to inn by guest.

Waiver of lien.

Cited in Rosenbaum v. Hayes, 10 N. D. 327, 86 N. W. 973, holding factor's lien not waived by taking of additional security.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 720) on waiver of lien by attachment or execution.

44 L. R. A. 565, MARSHFIELD v. WISCONSIN TELEPH. CO. 102 Wis. 604, 78 N. W. 735.

Authorized use of streets and highways.

Cited in State ex rel. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Sheboygan, 111 Wis. 32, 86 N. W. 657, upholding right of telephone company to erect poles in streets of city under statute authorizing construction along any public highway; State ex rel. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Sheboygan, 114 Wis. 507, 90 N. W. 441, holding telephone company's right to use of streets not affected by subsequent adoption by city of statutes regulating selling of franchise; Allen v. Clausen, 114 Wis. 250, 90 N. W. 181, holding that franchises for use of streets or highways must come from state or municipality authorized by state to grant them.

Cited in footnotes to Michigan Teleph. Co. v. Benton Harbor, 47 L. R. A. 104, which holds city's consent unnecessary to use of streets by telephone companies; Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 50 L. R. A. 298, which holds telephone poles and wires additional burden on street.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 900) on prescriptive right to maintain public nuisance.

44 L. R. A. 579, BROWN v. CHICAGO & N. W. R. CO. 102 Wis. 137, 77 N. W. 748, 78 N. W. 771.

Statutory actions for wrongful killing and for injuries resulting in death.

Cited in Hubbard v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Wis. 164, 76 Am. St. Rep. 855, 80 N. W. 454, holding final settlement of estate of deceased not bar to action by personal representative to recover under statutes for his death caused by alleged negligence of defendant; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cassin, 111 Ga. 582, 50 L. R. A. 697, 36 S. E. 881, denying right of action for death by personal representative of deceased, where latter had settled in full with defendant for injury causing his death; Dolson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 128 Mich. 448, 87 N. W. 629, holding that where deceased survived injuries twelve hours, remedy for death was under survival statute, and not under act giving right of action for death; McMillan v. Spider Lake Saw Mill & Lumber Co. 115 Wis. 336, 60 L. R. A. 591, 95 Am. St. Rep. 947, 91 N. W. 979, holding statute giving action for death for benefit of next of kin of deceased not applicable where action was brought for benefit of alien mother of deceased; Schleiger v. Northern Terminal Co. 43 Or. 12, 72 Pac. 324, holding right of action given by statute to parents against one wrongfully causing death of minor child not exclusive of remedy given personal representatives of deceased minor.

Cited in footnotes to Re Meekin, 51 L. R. A. 235, which holds action for death by administrator, who is also father and sole beneficiary of deceased, survives father's death; Worcester & S. Street R. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 67 L. R. A. 629, which holds cases of instantaneous death not covered by policy insuring railroad company against loss from liability to persons sustaining "personal injuries."

Distinguished in Staeffler v. Menasha Woodenware Co. 111 Wis. 487, 87 N. W. 480, holding statute of limitations applicable to actions for personal injuries resulting in death where right of action survives under Wis. Stat. § 4253.

Questions in case that are not obiter dicta.

Cited in State v. National Acci. Asso. 103 Wis. 218, 79 N. W. 220, holding decision of court upon question of statute of limitations binding until overruled, although case was decided independent of such question; State ex rel. Atkinson v. McDonald, 108 Wis. 16, 81 Am. St. Rep. 878, 84 N. W. 171, holding naturalization judgment conclusive as to year's residence preceding judgment in state in which it was rendered; Trapp v. New Birdsall Co. 109 Wis. 555, 85 N. W. 478, holding every point in, or assumed to be in, a case considered and decided as basis for final conclusion, res judicata.

Haste in decision of cause on first hearing.

Cited in Illinois Steel Co. v. Bilot, 109 Wis. 431, 83 Am. St. Rep. 905, 85 N. W. 402, as to statements in brief of counsel as to haste by court in consideration of questions on first hearing.

44 L. R. A. 593, LUNNEY v. HEALEY, 56 Neb. 313, 76 N. W. 558.

When real estate broker is entitled to commissions.

Cited in Leupold v. Weeks, 96 Md. 289, 53 Atl. 937, holding agent procuring purchase entitled to commissions, although contract was subsequently modified through efforts of another agent, and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 593.

Cited in footnotes to Caston v. Quimby, 52 L. R. A. 785, which denies right to commissions for obtaining unaccepted offer to loan money, requiring payment in gold; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 55 L. R. A. 77, which denies broker's right to commissions for procuring offer of lease subsequently accepted and contract executed through another broker; Livermore v. Crane, 57 L. R. A. 402, which holds purchaser refusing to complete purchase liable to broker for loss of commissions from seller.

Cited in notes (43 L. R. A. 593) on real estate broker's commissions as affected by negligence, fraud, or default of principal, and defective title; (44 L. R. A. 321, 324, 340, 345) as to when real estate broker is considered as procuring cause of the sale or exchange effected; (45 L. R. A. 33) on fraud and secret dealings or interest of real estate brokers as affecting their commissions; (53 L. R. A. 243) on duty of broker to disclose identity of purchaser to principal.

44 L. R. A. 632, GRAHAM PAPER CO. v. PEMBROKE, 124 Cal. 117, 71 Am. St. Rep. 26, 56 Pac. 627.

Sale of debtor's interest in personal property before attachment.

Distinguished in Yank v. Bordeaux, 23 Mont. 211, 75 Am. St. Rep. 522, 58 Pac. 42, holding that failure to notify attaching creditors and officer making levy, of prior sale of debtor's interest in ore, will not invalidate sale as to them.

44 L. R. A. 635, VAN VLECK v. DENTAL EXAMINERS (Cal.) 48 Pac. 223.

44 L. R. A. 638, PITTSBURGH, C. C. & ST. L. R. CO. v. MOORE, 152 Ind. 345, 53 N. E. 290.

Demurrer to pleading.

Cited in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Hoff, 25 Ind. App. 243, 56 N. E. 925, and Smith v. Barber, 153 Ind. 327, 53 N. E. 1014, holding error in overruling demurrer to bad paragraph of pleading, harmless where facts found rest upon good paragraph; Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 26 Ind. App. 84, 59 N. E. 211, and Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Parker, 154 Ind. 155, 56 N. E. 86, holding defective pleading not cured by finding in special verdict or finding of omitted fact; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mikesell, 23 Ind. App. 397, 55 N. E. 488, holding allegation that train was run at specified speed in violation of ordinance not good averment that such an ordinance was in force at time accident complained of happened.

Acceptance of benefits of relief association in lieu of damages for personal injury.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hosea, 152 Ind. 416, 53 N. E. 419, holding contract by which employee is given option to accept benefits of relief association in lieu of damages not a release of liability; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Elwood, 25 Ind. App. 674, 58 N. E. 866, holding acceptance of benefits of voluntary relief association bar to action for damages for personal injury; Maine v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 269, 80 N. W. 315, holding acceptance of benefits of relief association by injured employee of railroad company under mistake in supposing injuries temporary, bar to recovery of damages where money was not returned; Beck v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 63 N. J. L. 240, 76 Am. St. Rep. 211, 43 Atl. 908, upholding validity of contract by which employee agreed that acceptance of benefits of relief association should operate as release of claims for damages against railroad company; Oyster v. Burlington Relief Department, 65 Neb. 793, 59 L. R. A. 294, footnote p. 292, 91 N. W. 699, denying right to recover on certificate of railroad relief department, after recovering full statutory penalty for employee's death; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hosea, 152 Ind. 421, 53 N. E. 419, holding acceptance of benefits of relief association by widow in lieu of damages not bar to action for use of her child; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gipe, 160 Ind. 365, 65 N. E. 1034, holding acceptance of benefit of certificate in relief association by widow, prima facie bar to claim as administratrix for benefit of children; State ex rel. Sheets v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 68 Ohio St. 42, 64 L. R. A. 413, 96 Am. St. Rep. 635, 67 N. E. 93, holding maintenance of voluntary relief association for employees by railroad corporation not against public policy; Hamilton v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 118 Fed. 95, holding contract by servant to accept voluntary relief in lieu of action for damages not affected by statute forbidding carrier to limit liability.

Cited in footnote to Johnson v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 645, which sustains contract making acceptance of benefits of relief fund operate to release company.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 506) on insurance on life of minor.

Distinguished in Tarbell v. Rutland R. Co. 73 Vt. 351, 56 L. R. A. 658, 87 Am. St. Rep. 734, 51 Atl. 6, holding contract by which next of kin releases railroad company from statutory liability for injuries to one about to be employed, void.

Violation of ordinance by railroad companies.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Martin, 157 Ind. 223, 61 N. E. 229, holding refusal of instruction that speed ordinance was enacted for benefit of public, and not for carrier's employees, proper; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Peterson, 156 Ind. 372, 59 N. E. 1044, holding failure of railroad company to comply with city ordinance providing for maintenance of watchman on rear of backing train, and ringing of bell, negligence per se; Martin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 118 Iowa, 150, 59 L. R. A. 700, 91 N. W. 1034, holding brakeman continuing work with knowledge of constant violation of speed ordinance by railroad assumes risk of such excess of speed.

Assumption of risks of employment.

Cited in American Rolling Mill Co. v. Hullinger, 161 Ind. 679, 67 N. E. 986, holding doctrine of assumed risk applicable to action under employer's liability act.

Competency of witnesses.

Cited in Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Charman, 161 Ind. 109, 67 N. E. 923, holding administrator's action under statute for wrongful death being for exclusive benefit of widow and next of kin, defendant is competent to testify.

Constitutionality of employer's liability act.

Cited in Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Rittenhouse, 28 Ind. App. 636, 62 N. E. 295, upholding constitutionality of employer's liability act.

44 L. R. A. 645, JOHNSON v. CHARLESTON & S. R. CO. 55 S. C. 152, 32 S. E. 2, 33 S. E. 174.

Report of second appeal in 58 S. C. 489, 36 S. E. 851.

Contracts with railroad relief associations.

Cited in Petty v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. 109 Ga. 672, 35 S. E. 82, upholding contract by which employee, by accepting pecuniary and other benefits, released master from all liability for injury.

Cited in footnote to Oyster v. Burlington Relief Department, 59 L. R. A. 292, which denies right to recover on certificate of railroad relief department, after recovering full statutory penalty for employee's death.

44 L. R. A. 655, BIGGS v. CONSOLIDATED BARB-WIRE CO. 60 Kan. 217, 56 Pac. 4.

Liability for injuries to child trespasser.

Cited in Consolidated Electric Light & P. Co. v. Healy, 65 Kan. 801, 70 Pac. 884, holding electric light company liable for killing of boy by wire in place known by defendant to be attractive to children; Kopplekom v. Colorado Cement Pipe Co. 16 Colo. App. 277, 54 L. R. A. 285, footnote p. 284, 64 Pac. 1047, holding owner of uninclosed city lot liable for injury to young child by toppling over of cement pipe used by children as plaything; Edgington v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Co. 116 Iowa, 421, 57 L. R. A. 566, 90 N. W. 95, holding railroad company liable for injury to child seven years and eight months old, hurt by turntable in unfenced lot near public way.

Cited in footnotes to Ryan v. Towar, 55 L. R. A. 310, which denies land owner's duty to make premises safe for attempting to rescue trespassing child caught in water wheel in unused building; Gleason v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 622, which denies liability for injury by collision with team, to twelve-year-old boy using street as playground; Uttermohlen v. Bogg's Run Min. & Mfg. Co. 55 L. R. A. 911, which denies liability of mine owner for injury to trespassing child by cable and pulleys hauling coal cars; Brinkley Car Works Mfg. Co. v. Cooper, 57 L. R. A. 724, which denies liability for injury to six-year-old boy from carelessly walking into pool of hot water; Paolino v. McKendall, 60 L. R. A. 133, which denies duty of occupier of land burning rubbish, to guard young children accustomed to play there, from fire.

Contributory negligence.

Report of second appeal in 62 Kan. 492, 63 Pac. 740, holding contributory negligence question for jury.

Distinguished in Bess v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 62 Kan. 305, 62 Pac. 996, denying right of recovery for killing of child with capacity to understand danger of situation, and who was run over by cars through his own negligence.

44 L. R. A. 659, SUMRALL v. COLUMBIA FINANCE & T. CO. 106 Ky. 260, 90 Am. St. Rep. 223, 50 S. W. 69.

Building and loan associations.

Cited in Forwood v. Eubank, 106 Ky. 293, 50 S. W. 255, denying right of holder of paid-up stock who has given withdrawal notice, to preference over holders of instalment stock on winding up of building association; Globe Bldg. & L. Co. v. Wood, 110 Ky. 11, 96 Am. St. Rep. 417, 60 S. W. 858, upholding right of insolvent building association to make general assignment; North Texas Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Hay, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 103, 56 S. W. 580, holding borrower in building association entitled to rescission of contract and adjustment of his account, upon sale of assets of association.

44 L. R. A. 664, CITIZENS' BANK v. MILLETT, 103 Ky. 1, 82 Am. St. Rep. 546, 44 S. W. 366.

44 L. R. A. 673, PALMER v. MAINE C. R. CO. 92 Me. 399, 69 Am. St. Rep. 513, 42 Atl. 800.

Arrests.

Cited in Harness v. Steele, 159 Ind. 295, 64 N. E. 875, holding sheriff detaining innocent prisoner longer than necessary to procure warrant, liable for false arrest; State v. McLeod, 97 Me. 81, 53 Atl. 878, holding it unnecessary for people to show that prisoner was subsequently convicted, in prosecution for forcibly rescuing prisoner.

Cited in footnotes to McCullough v. Greenfield, 62 L. R. A. 906, which holds that possession by officer of a warrant will not justify arrest of accused by police department of other town under direction by telephone by officer holding warrant; Markley v. Snow, 64 L. R. A. 685, which denies liability of employer for act of employee in causing arrest, long after commission of the crime, of one suspected of having set fire to building of employer.

44 L. R. A. 677, PEOPLE ex rel. MAYNARD v. HOLLY, 119 Mich. 637, 75 Am. St. Rep. 435, 78 N. W. 665.

44 L. R. A. 679, PINGREE v. DIX, 120 Mich. 95, 78 N. W. 1025.

Rule of uniformity in taxation.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 341, 364, 374) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

Distinguished in Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 490, 84 N. W. 1101, upholding constitutionality of inheritance tax law as a tax upon privilege of inheritance.

Taxation of telegraph companies.

Cited in Detroit v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 130 Mich. 475, 90 N. W. 283, holding act providing for specific tax on telegraph companies not repealed by later unconstitutional acts.

44 L. R. A. 689, VOSS v. CONNECTICUT MUT. L. INS. CO. 119 Mich. 161, 77 N. W. 697.

Report of later appeal in 131 Mich. 597, 92 N. W. 102.

Interest of children in proceeds of policies on lives of parents.

Cited in Millard v. Brayton, 177 Mass. 543, 52 L. R. A. 123, footnote p. 117, 83 Am. St. Rep. 294, 59 N. E. 436, holding that policy payable to children in case of wife's death gives children living at wife's death before insured, vested interest; Jones v. Jones, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 256, holding interest of beneficiary children under policy taken out by the mother on her own life, without reserving right to make new appointment of beneficiaries, vested; Elgar v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 113 Wis. 92, 88 N. W. 927, holding that where policy provided for payment of proceeds to insured's children if surviving, and, if not, to insured's executors, etc., surviving son took whole proceeds to exclusion of grandchild of deceased child.

Nature of beneficiary's interest in policy.

Cited in Laughlin v. Norcross, 97 Me. 34, 53 Atl. 834, holding that interest of beneficiary in policy passed by will, although policy not issued when will made.

44 L. R. A. 692, STATE ex rel. KNIGHT v. HELENA POWER & LIGHT CO. 22 Mont. 391, 56 Pac. 685.

Mandamus to compel operation of railroad.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Bridgeton v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co. 45 L. R. A. 837, which holds street railway company's duty to operate road enforceable by mandamus.

44 L. R. A. 694, UPCHURCH v. STATE, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 624, 38 S. W. 206. Former jeopardy.

Cited in Woodward v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 197, 58 S. W. 135, holding discharge of jury before verdict on account of serious illness of child of juror, and order of mistrial, not jeopardy; Bland v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 288, 59 S. W. 1119, holding that upon plea of former jeopardy involving issue of fact as to proper exercise of court's discretion in discharging juror on account of sickness of juror, court should hear evidence in order that necessity for discharge may be properly determined.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Hager, 48 L. R. A. 254, which holds discharge on plea of former jeopardy not an acquittal; Dreyer v. People, 58 L. R. A. 869, which holds discharge of jury without consent of accused, because jurors unable to agree not jeopardy.

Instructions in criminal cases.

Cited in Chapman v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 138, 57 S. W. 965, holding reading of lecture by court, ridiculing law of self-defense, to panel of jurors previous to drawing of jury in murder case, and in absence of defendant, reversible error.

Challenges to jury.

Cited in footnote to People v. Zeigler, 56 L. R. A. 882, which requires restoration to prisoner of peremptory challenges used on juror discharged for illness occurring while jury being impaneled.

44 L. R. A. 699, Re KNOWACK, 158 N. Y. 482, 53 N. E. 676.

General powers of supreme court.

Cited in Re Steinway, 159 N. Y. 258, 45 L. R. A. 472, 53 N. E. 1103, upholding power of supreme court to compel corporation to permit stockholder to inspect books.

Arrest, commitment, and custody of children.

Cited in Wood v. Wood, 61 App. Div. 99, 70 N. Y. Supp. 72, denying power of court, pending divorce proceedings, to award custody of defendant's child to his grandfather, defendant not having notice of application; People ex rel. McGrath v. Cooper, 75 App. Div. 621, 78 N. Y. Supp. 161, refusing to take orphan girl from home of persons who took her for adoption, where she was well cared for and desired to stay, on petition of maternal aunt, who worked out for a livelihood; People v. Angie, 74 App. Div. 541, 77 N. Y. Supp. 832, upholding right of police officer to arrest without a warrant, unaccompanied child under sixteen years of age, found in place where spirituous liquors are sold and drunk; People ex rel. Aikins v. State Industrial School, 33 Misc. 401, 67 N. Y. Supp. 674, dismissing certiorari proceeding to review commitment of boy to reformatory as a truant, on ground that it did not recite notice to parents, the proceeding not being taken by parent.

Distinguished in People ex rel. Stern v. New York Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 27 Misc. 458, 58 N. Y. Supp. 118, denying power of court to review commitment of infant to house of industry upon returns to writs of habeas corpus and certiorari; Re Cohn, 28 Misc. 658, 59 N. Y. Supp. 1028, denying right of parents on application to supreme court to have imprisonment of child, committed to reformatory institution on complaint of father, terminated on proof that they deem boy sufficiently reformed; People ex rel. Sampson v. New York Catholic Protectory, 93 App. Div. 197, 87 N. Y. Supp. 557, holding that child should be remanded where untraversed return shows that he was committed to institution by magistrate.

44 L. R. A. 703, HERTER v. MULLEN, 159 N. Y. 28, 70 Am. St. Rep. 517, 53 N. E. 700.

Holding over by tenants beyond term of lease.

Report of second appeal in 52 App. Div. 326, 65 N. Y. Supp. 279, holding tenant holding over on account of sickness, liable for rent until he gives landlord actual, personal notice of quitting.

Cited in Probst v. Rochester Steam Laundry Co. 171 N. Y. 588, 64 N. E. 504, holding that assignee of lessee holding over and paying rent, accepted by lessor, elects to exercise option for extension of term provided for in lease; Preiser v. Wielandt, 48 App. Div. 572, 62 N. Y. Supp. 890, holding landlord liable for damages resulting in death of tenant's wife, too ill to be removed at expiration of lease, whose condition was aggravated by tearing down of house; Sullivan v. Ringler, 59 App. Div. 185, 69 N. Y. Supp. 38, upholding right of landlord to treat holding over by subtenant as renewal of lessee's lease; Coleman v. Fitzgerald Bros. Brewing Co. 29 Misc. 350, 60 N. Y. Supp. 460, denying right of landlord, reletting to new tenant after old tenant had held over, to recover rent for period before he could relet; Macklin v. McNetton, 30 Misc. 750, 63 N. Y. Supp. 433, denying right to recover for use and occupation of premises from tenant holding over beyond term; Ketcham v. Ochs, 34 Misc. 472, 70 N. Y. Supp. 268, holding tenant not made liable by failure of mortgagees to remove certain personal property of subtenant until after expiration of term; Willis v. McKinnon, 37 Misc. 389, 75 N. Y. Supp. 770, denying right of tenant holding over, to defeat ejectment by acquiring outstanding title; Beeston v. Yale, 75 App. Div. 390, 78 N. Y. Supp. 158, holding tenants surrendering possession of premises, accepted by landlord, not liable for use and occupation because leaving boiler and two cutting machines, which he intended to abandon; German State Bank v. Herron, 111 Iowa, 27, 82 N. W. 430, holding possession of premises after termination of written lease, tenancy at will under statutes; Weber v. Rogers, 41 Misc. 665, 85 N. Y. Supp. 232, enjoining temporarily, prosecution of proceeding for summary removal of tenant on ground that removal would endanger his life.

Cited in footnotes to Byrbee v. Blake, 57 L. R. A. 222, which holds tenant liable for another month's rent, by keeping keys and remaining in possession five days to clean up rubbish; Andrews v. Marshall Creamery Co. 60 L. R. A. 399, which holds mere holding over after term expires does not show election to renew for additional term under provisions of original lease.

Impossibility as excuse for nonperformance of act.

Cited in Walden v. Jamestown, 178 N. Y. 217, 70 N. E. 466, holding charter requirement of notice within two days of accident substantially complied with by service of notice within three days, where plaintiff unable to transact business within statutory period for notice.

Distinguished in Rhodes v. Hinds, 79 App. Div. 381, 79 N. Y. Supp. 437, holding proprietor of sawmill entitled to compensation for sawing and piling lumber, destroyed by fire before delivery to owner.

44 L. R. A. 711, SAMPSON v. BAGLEY, 21 R. I. 174, 42 Atl. 712.

Proceeds of insurance on premises held by life tenant.

Cited in footnote to Green v. Green, 46 L. R. A. 525, which requires money collected on total loss under policy taken out by life tenant, to be used in rebuilding or to go to remaindermen.

44 L. R. A. 716, STORRIE v. HOUSTON CITY STREET R. CO. 92 Tex. 129, 46 S. W. 796.

Liability of street railway for paving between tracks.

Cited in Shreveport v. Prescott, 51 La. Ann. 1924, 46 L. R. A. 212, 26 So. 664, holding railway company occupying street benefited by street improvement to extent of space occupied by it, and liable for its proportionate share of cost; Lincoln Street R. Co. v. Lincoln, 61 Neb. 134, 84 N. W. 802, upholding power of legislature to require street railway to pave part of street occupied by its tracks.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 194, 202) on liability of street railway for paving assessment.

Power of legislature to alter or revoke corporate charters.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 144) on privilege of using streets as a contract within constitutional provision against impairing obligation of contracts.

44 L. R. A. 725, HOOPER v. HOOPER. 102 Wis. 598, 78 N. W. 753.

44 L. R. A. 728, CASE v. HOFFMAN, 100 Wis. 314, 72 N. W. 390, 74 N. W. 220, 75 N. W. 945.

Disqualification of members of court.

Cited in Re Nevitt, 54 C. C. A. 624, 117 Fed. 450, holding judge not disqualified to hear and determine lawsuit, because in another action between other parties involving similar questions of law or fact he was counsel for one of litigants; Deming v. McClaughry, 51 C. C. A. 361, 113 Fed. 651, holding judgment against officer of voluntary army raised under acts of 1898 and 1899, by court-marshal composed of officers of regular army, void because of disqualification of members of court; State v. Hartley, 75 Conn. 110, 52 Atl. 615, holding that action of disqualified judge in presiding at trial renders judgment erroneous only.

Doctrine of res judicata.

Cited in State v. National Acci. Soc. 103 Wis. 218, 79 N. W. 220, holding decision as to applicability of statute of limitations to foreign corporations, involved in decision of case, binding upon court until overruled; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman, 103 Wis. 303, 79 N. W. 224, holding that every question decided on appeal is binding, not only on trial court, but on supreme court on subsequent appeal; Priewe v. Wisconsin State Land & Improv. Co. 103 Wis. 549, 74 Am. St. Rep. 904, 79 N. W. 780, holding decision on former appeal binding as to all questions covered by it; Hart v. Moulton, 104 Wis. 353, 76 Am. St. Rep. 881, 80 N. W. 599, holding that judgment is as binding on privies as on parties, as to questions actually decided and upon which the judgment rests; Crouse v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Wis. 480, 80 N. W. 752, holding decision of supreme court deciding that verdict submitted was sufficient must be followed on second appeal, whether right or wrong; Rupiper v. Calloway, 105 Wis. 8, 80 N. W. 916, holding that verdict for plaintiff in ejectment for only part of land is, in effect, a judgment against him as to balance asked for in pleadings; South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. George C. Cribb Co. 105 Wis. 446, 81 N. W. 675, holding question not raised, but necessarily involved, in decision on first appeal res judicata on second appeal; Huesbschmann v. Cotzhausen, 107 Wis. 73, 82 N. W. 720, holding judgment as to legitimacy of plaintiff's grantor res judicata in subsequent suit in ejectment by plaintiffs, defendants having been parties in former proceeding; Becker v. Chester, 115 Wis. 128, 91 N. W. 87, holding every proposition upon which final conclusion rests, res judicata; Lonsdorf v. Lonstorf, 118 Wis. 161, 95 N. W. 961, refusing to overrule former decision, regardless of whether court would decide in same way were case heard for first time; Jerdee v. Furbush, 115 Wis. 282, 95 Am. St. Rep. 904, 91 N. W. 661, holding that principles of law on which decision is based are necessarily part of decision.

Cited in footnote to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Benz, 58 L. R. A. 691, which holds decision on reversal and remand of action for personal injuries removed to Federal court, not law of case if action dismissed and new one begun.

Rights in use of waters.

Cited in Huber v. Merkel, 117 Wis. 366, 62 L. R. A. 594, 98 Am. St. Rep. 933, 94 N. W. 354, upholding right of land owner to sink artesian wells and use water therefrom as he chooses, although diminishing flow from wells of his neighbors; Blohowak v. Grochoski, 119 Wis. 195, 96 N. W. 551, holding question whether natural water course exists, question for jury on conflicting evidence.

Cited in footnote to Kray v. Muggli, 45 L. R. A. 218, which denies prescriptive right of riparian owners to maintenance of dam after proprietor chooses to abandon it.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 838) on rights acquired in artificial condition of body of water.

Right of third party to sue on contract for his benefit.

Cited in footnotes to Ferris v. American Brewing Co. 52 L. R. A. 305, which sustains right of action of one for whose benefit stipulation in lease was made, against sale on premises of other person's beer; Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 53 L. R. A. 609, which denies right of action of one furnishing materials to contractor on bond given by latter to city, conditioned on turning over building free of claims for materials; Boston Ins. Co. v. Chi- cago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 796, which denies right of action against railroad company carrying mail under contract with government, by sender of registered mail destroyed through negligence of its employees; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 61 L. R. A. 509, which sustains right of third person to enforce contract made for his benefit.

44 L. R. A. 734, BROWN v. ORANGEBURG COUNTY, 55 S. C. 45, 32 S. E. 764.
Liability of municipality for acts of mob.

Cited in footnotes to Chicago v. Manhattan Cement Co. 45 L. R. A. 848, which sustains statute compelling county to pay three fourths of value of property destroyed by mob; Wallace v. Norman, 48 L. R. A. 620, which denies city's liability for acts of officers participating in conspiracy or misdeeds of mob.

44 L. R. A. 737, CARUTHERS v. KANSAS CITY, FT. S. & M. R. CO. 59 Kan. 629, 54 Pac. 673.

Liability of lessor road for negligence of another company using road.

Cited in footnotes to Sias v. Rochester R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 850, which denies liability of street railway company for death by collision with tree near track, of passenger of other company using track under traffic arrangement; Muntz v. Algiers & G. R. Co. 64 L. R. A. 222, which holds railroad company liable for negligent operation of cars on its road, whether operated by itself or lessee.

Distinguished in McCabe v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 112 Ky. 876, 66 S. W. 1054, holding lessor liable for negligence of lessee railroad company in killing pedestrian; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Breeden, 111 Ky. 748, 64 S. W. 667, holding railroad companies, parties to joint traffic agreement for use of tracks owned by one of the companies, both liable for negligence in operation of trains thereon, and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 737.

Annotation in 44 L. R. A. 737, referred to particularly in Sinkhorn v. Lexington, H. & P. Turnp. Co. 112 Ky. 211, 65 S. W. 356, holding turnpike company surrendering entire control of road to county as lessee, not liable for failure of latter to repair.

44 L. R. A. 757, ANTHONY v. NORTON, 60 Kan. 341, 62 Am. St. Rep. 360, 56 Pac. 529.

Actions for seduction.

Cited in Snider v. Newell, 132 N. C. 616, 44 S. E. 354, holding it unnecessary for father to show loss of services to maintain action for seduction of daughter.

44 L. A. A. 761, WARNER v. PENOYER, 33 C. C. A. 222, 91 Fed. 587.

Liability of corporation directors for negligence and misconduct.

Cited in Chick v. Fuller, 51 C. C. A. 649, 114 Fed. 23, holding, under facts in case, directors of manufacturing concern not liable for negligence, because they authorized payment of dividend while corporation was insolvent; Hanna v. People's Nat. Bank, 35 Misc. 521, 71 N. Y. Supp. 1076, holding directors of national bank liable to injured stockholders for losses due to negligence in permitting discount of notes; Campbell v. Watson, 62 N. J. Eq. 439, 50 Atl. 120, holding directors of bank liable for loss due to their negligent examination into condition of affairs of corporation.

Cited in footnotes to Uteley v. Hill, 49 L. R. A. 323, which denies liability of directors for deceit, for false statements in reports to secretary of state, believed to be true; Gerner v. Mosher, 46 L. R. A. 244, which holds bank directors attesting false report, liable to person purchasing stock in reliance on same.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 757, 758, 767, 768, 771, 773) on liability of corporate directors to corporation.

44 L. R. A. 766, COREY v. WADSWORTH, 118 Ala. 488, 25 So. 503.

Rights of creditors in assets of corporation.

Cited in Wilson v. Stevens, 129 Ala. 637, 87 Am. St. Rep. 87, 29 So. 678; Brady v. James McDonnell Co. 122 Ala. 651, 26 So. 1029; Anderson v. Bullock County Bank, 122 Ala. 289, 25 So. 523, — upholding right of insolvent corporation to prefer its officers in payment of their bona fide debts; Henderson v. Hall, 134 Ala. 505, 63 L. R. A. 704, 32 So. 840, holding that assets of corporation do not constitute trust fund for creditors; Hawkins v. Donnerberg, 40 Or. 107, 66 Pac. 691, denying right of creditors of corporation to compel payment of subscriptions due on stock, after right of corporation to such payments had been barred by statute.

Disapproved in James Clark Co. v. Colton, 91 Md. 212, 49 L. R. A. 704; 46 Atl. 386, denying right of corporation officers to prefer their own claims to those of other creditors; Taylor v. Mitchell, 80 Minn. 497, 83 N. W. 418, declaring mortgage by insolvent corporation to secure claims of directors, fraudulent as to other creditors.

44 L. R. A. 786, LAMKIN v. BALDWIN & L. MFG. CO. 72 Conn. 57, 43 Atl. 593.

Right of third party to sue on contract for his benefit.

Cited in Morgan v. Randolph & C. Co. 73 Conn. 398, 51 L. R. A. 654, footnote p. 653, 47 Atl. 658, denying right of creditor of copartnership to maintain action at law for his claim against corporation assuming copartnership debts; Barber v. International Co. 73 Conn. 594, 48 Atl. 758, upholding right of creditors to invoke aid of court of chancery to compel enforcement of contract between insolvent corporation and another corporation, by which latter agreed to pay debts of former, and which constituted its only asset.

Cited in footnote to Capital Traction Co. v. Offutt, 53 L. R. A. 390, which denies liability of street railway company for debts of other company whose property and franchises bought.

44 L. R. A. 790, PULLMAN'S PALACE-CAR CO. v. HALL, 106 Ga. 765, 71 Am. St. Rep. 293, 32 S. E. 923.

Liability of sleeping car companies for loss of passenger's property.

Cited in Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Hatch, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 70 S. W. 771, holding that passenger must show negligence on part of sleeping car company to render it liable for loss of baggage.

Cited in footnotes to Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Adams, 45 L. R. A. 767, which holds sleeping car company liable for theft of passenger's property, where porter went to sleep while on watch; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Hunter, 47 L. R. A. 286, which sustains liability for theft of diamond rings from woman while asleep in sleeping car; Cooney v. Pullman Palace-Car Co. 53 L. R. A. 690, which holds sleeping car company liable for loss of passenger's valise, intrusted to employees of company.

44 L. R. A. 795, BARTLETT v. COLUMBUS, 101 Ga. 300, 28 S. E. 599.

Liability of municipality for torts of its officers in exercise of governmental functions.

Cited in Gray v. Griffin, 111 Ga. 364, 51 L. R. A. 132, 36 S. E. 792, holding city not liable for physical injury and mental suffering of person illegally arrested, caused by condition in which prison was kept; Gray v. Griffin, 111 Ga. 368, 51 L. R. A. 134, 36 S. E. 792, holding city not liable for act of mayor in requiring person arrested to give larger bond than law authorized; McIlhenny v. Wilmington, 127 N. C. 152, 50 L. R. A. 472, footnote p. 470, 37 S. E. 187, denying city's liability for wrongful arrest of, and brutal assault on, innocent person by notoriously incompetent policeman; McFadin v. San Antonio, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 142, 54 S. W. 48, and Simpson v. Whatcom, 33 Wash. 402, 63 L. R. A. 819, 99 Am. St. Rep. 951, 74 Pac. 577, denying liability of city for arrest of person under void ordinance; Carter v. Worcester County, 94 Md. 626, 51 Atl. 830, holding county commissioners not liable for illegal arrest by county road supervisor, and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 795.

Cited in footnotes to Tillman v. Beard, 46 L. R. A. 215, which denies liability of village president for procuring arrest for violation of void ordinance; Levin v. Burlington, 55 L. R. A. 396, which denies city's liability for officer's arrest and quarantine of one who has passed night in house containing smallpox patient.

44 L. R. A. 801, PEOPLE ex rel. DENEEN v. SIMON, 176 Ill. 165, 68 Am. St. Rep. 175, 52 N. E. 910.

Separation of executive, legislative, and judicial departments.

Cited in State ex rel. White v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 110, 57 L. R. A. 252, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222, 89 N. W. 204, denying right of legislature to vest in district court, power of choosing managers of municipal water supply system.

Acts providing for registration of land titles.

Cited in State ex rel. Douglas v. Westfall, 85 Minn. 446, 57 L. R. A. 302, footnote p. 297, 89 Am. St. Rep. 571, 89 N. W. 175, sustaining act for Torrens system of registering land titles; Gage v. Consumer's Electric Light Co. 194 Ill. 34, 64 N. E. 653, holding question as to sufficiency of proof of payment of taxes in proceeding for registration of titles cannot be raised for first time in supreme court.

Rule as to notice.

Cited in Tyler v. Registration Ct. Judges, 175 Mass. 80, 51 L. R. A. 437, footnote p. 433, 55 N. E. 812, holding land registration act not invalidated by failure to provide for notice of transfers.

Option to adopt statute.

Cited in footnote to Adams v. Beloit, 47 L. R. A. 441, which sustains option giving specially chartered cities power to adopt provisions of general law.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in People ex rel. Hillel Lodge No. 72, I. O. B. B. v. Rose, 207 Ill. 332, 69 N. E. 762, refusing to adopt construction which would place statute, making failure to report annually prima facie evidence of nonuser, in conflict with Constitution.

44 L. R. A. 809, HOGAN v. STOPHLET, 179 Ill. 150, 53 N. E. 604.

Rewards for arrest and conviction of criminals.

Cited in Williams v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 191 Ill. 615, 85 Am. St. Rep. 278, 61 N. E. 456, Affirming 94 Ill. App. 389, denying right to reward for "arrest and conviction" of murderers, where plaintiff merely furnished information which led to arrest; Cornwell v. St. Louis Transit Co. 100 Mo. App. 262, 73 S. W. 305, holding that officer may be rewarded for extraordinary services beyond the limit of his ordinary duty; Clinton County v. Davis, 162 Ind. 66, 64 L. R. A. 784, 69 N. E. 680, holding that vote buyer cannot claim reward offered to one who furnishes information for conviction of vote seller.

44 L. R. A. 814, SIZOR v. LOGANSPOUT, 151 Ind. 626, 50 N. E. 377.

Meander line as boundary.

Cited in footnote to Security Land & Exploration Co. v. Burns, 63 L. R. A. 157, which holds that supposed meander line will be held boundary line if consistent with other calls and distances indicated on plat.

44 L. R. A. 815, BARMAN v. SPENCER (Ind.) 49 N. E. 9.

Liability of landlord for defective condition of premises.

Cited in footnotes to Towne v. Thompson, 46 L. R. A. 748, which denies boarding-house lessee's liability to tenant's boarders for illness from unsanitary condition of premises; Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 772, which denies landlord's liability for injury to subtenant's child from defective balustrade on porch; Brady v. Klein, 62 L. R. A. 909, which denies right of action by licensee of tenant on landlord's covenant to repair, for injury due to defective condition of premises.

44 L. R. A. 821, WHEELER v. BOONE, 108 Iowa, 235, 78 N. W. 909.

Laws relating to bicycles.

Cited in Des Moines v. Keller, 116 Iowa, 650, 57 L. R. A. 244, 93 Am. St. Rep. 268, 88 N. W. 827, upholding validity of ordinance requiring bicyclists to carry lamps; Overhouser v. American Cereal Co. 118 Iowa, 420, 92 N. W. 74, holding ordinance admissible in action to recover for death of bicyclist caused by obstruction in street in violation of such ordinance.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 297) on bicycle law.

Duty of municipalities as to safety of bicyclists.

Cited in Morrison v. Syracuse, 45 App. Div. 422, 61 N. Y. Supp. 313, holding that city allowing bicyclist to ride on sidewalks upon payment of nominal fee owes him no greater care to keep walk safe than it owes pedestrians.

Cited in footnote to Lee v. Port Huron, 55 L. R. A. 308, which holds city liable for injury to bicyclists from defective sidewalk.

Amendments to pleadings after verdict.

Cited in Shawyer v. Chamberlain, 113 Iowa, 745, 86 Am. St. Rep. 411, 84 N. W. 661, upholding order of court striking from files amendment to answer filed after verdict, and raising new issue.

44 L. R. A. 823, REED v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. 104 Ky. 603, 47 S. W. 591, 48 S. W. 416.

Rule as to stopping of train after injury to passenger.

Cited in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Saulsberry, 112 Ky. 923, 56 L. R. A. 583, 66 S. W. 1051, holding railroad company ejecting drunken passenger at station not bound to stop train to ascertain extent of injuries in case he is hurt trying to reboard train.

Sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 243) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

44 L. R. A. 825, DEPOSIT BANK v. DAVIESS COUNTY, 102 Ky. 174, 39 S. W. 1030, 44 S. W. 1131.

Affirmed in 173 U. S. 636, 662, 663, 43 L. ed. 840, 850, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530, 875.

Repeal of charter provision granting exemption from taxation.

Cited in Newport v. Masonic Temple Asso. 103 Ky. 595, 45 S. W. 881, holding provision in charter exempting corporation from taxation repealed by subsequent Constitution requiring taxation of all property, unless exempted by Constitution.

Taxation of corporations.

Cited in notes (45 L. R. A. 747) on state taxation of national banks; (57 L. R. A. 72) on taxation of corporate franchises in United States.

Power to grant extensions to corporations by special act.

Cited in footnote to Bank of Commerce v. Wiltzie, 47 L. R. A. 489, which holds invalid, extension of old special charter of corporation.

44 L. R. A. 837, STATE v. HAINES, 51 La. Ann. 731, 25 So. 372.

Bill of exceptions.

Cited in State v. Napoleon, 104 La. 166, 28 So. 972, and State ex rel. Markham v. Read, 52 La. Ann. 272, 26 So. 826, holding mere reservation of bill of exceptions in criminal cause insufficient; State ex rel. Periou v. Foster, 106 La. 195, 30 So. 749, upholding right of judge signing bill of exception, to assign his grounds for rulings objected to.

44 L. R. A. 840, VAN NORMAN v. GORDON, 172 Mass. 576, 70 Am. St. Rep. 304, 53 N. E. 267.

Presumption as to jurisdiction.

Cited in American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 19, 64 N. E. 525, holding foreign court presumed to be one of general jurisdiction where transcript shows that it had a judge, clerk, and seal.

Conclusiveness of foreign judgment.

Cited in American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 17, 64 N. E. 525, holding judgment of foreign court barring jurisdiction of subject-matter and person, conclusive until reversed or vacated.

Cited in footnote to Crim v. Crim, 54 L. R. A. 502, which holds judgment, valid where rendered, against nonresident on judgment note with power of attorney, entitled to full faith elsewhere.

44 L. R. A. 841, LAMB KNIT-GOODS CO. v. LAMB GLOVE & MITTEN CO. 120 Mich. 159, 78 N. W. 1072.

Infringement of trade name.

Cited in Penberthy Injector Co. v. Lee, 120 Mich. 180, 78 N. W. 1074, upholding right of corporation purchasing trade name, to restrain infringement of same by vendor of same name; Bissell Chilled Plow Works v. T. M. Bissell Plow Co. 121 Fed. 367, denying right of corporation to use trade name "Bissell," owned by another corporation known as "The Bissell Plow Works."

44 L. R. A. 844, CONELY v. COLLINS, 119 Mich. 519, 78 N. W. 555.

Action on replevin bond in Dudley v. Conely, 125 Mich. 300, 84 N. W. 286.

Conveyances of debtor's property to secure creditors.

Distinguished in Belding-Hall Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 125 Mich. 57, 83 N. W. 1001, construing instrument purporting to chattel mortgage specified property, for purpose of securing certain debts, as chattel mortgage, and not as common-law assignment; Ontario Bank v. Hurst, 43 C. C. A. 201, 103 Fed. 239, holding deed of property in trust to pay specified debts and return surplus to grantor, conveyance in nature of mortgage.

44 L. R. A. 846, JOHN HANCOCK MUT. L. INS. CO. v. DICK, 117 Mich. 518, 76 N. W. 9.

Statements in proofs of loss as admissions against beneficiary.

Cited in Wasey v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 126 Mich. 126, 85 N. W. 459, holding statements in proofs of loss furnished another company, competent as admissions against beneficiary; Nelson v. Nederland L. Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 607, 81 N. W. 807, holding affidavit of physician as to cause of death, offered as part of proof of loss, competent evidence as an admission by beneficiary that contents were true, and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 846; Supreme Tent, K. of M. W. v. Stensland, 206 Ill. 131, 99 Am. St. Rep. 137, 68 N. E. 1098, upholding right of beneficiary signing proof of loss furnished by company, to contradict statement therein that death of insured was caused by suicide, and referring particularly to annotation in 44 L. R. A. 846.

44 L. R. A. 861, FARMERS' & M. INS. CO. v. JENSEN, 56 Neb. 284, 76 N. W. 577, 78 N. W. 1057.

Change of interest as affecting validity of insurance policy.

Cited in Home F. Ins. Co. v. Collins, 61 Neb. 201, 85 N. W. 54, holding policy forbidding change of interest violated by transfer of legal title, even if without consideration; Henton v. Farmers & M. Ins. Co. 1 Herdman (Neb.) 426, 95 N. W. 670, holding change of title not made within meaning of policy, by conveyance absolute in form, but intended as mere security for contingent liability.

3 6105 063 244 151

